CONGRESSIONAL RECORD,

FORTY-NINTH CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION.

clined to submit to cross-examination, and without the consideration of which it will hardly be contended by anybody that a case is made against the right of the contestee to his seat.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. Is there any claim here that Mr. Page was elected?

Mr. ROWELL. No, sir. He made the claim, but the committee absolutely ignore that portion of his claim, and the purpose here is to declare the seat vacant. Further than that under the permission to introduce testimony in rebuttal, in utter disregard of all rules of law or ignorance of them, the same utter disregard which characterized the proceedings of this contestant from the time he commenced writing his notice of contest down through the taking of testimony and until the final argument and during the final argument before the committee—in disregard of the rights conferred upon him by the resolution of the House and in disregard of the best settled rules of evidence known to the law books, the contestant proceeded again to take testimony in chief after the opportunity to meet such testimony had passed away under the resolution of the House, and that testimony so taken in chief is presented by the majority of the committee to this House, and you are asked to follow their judgment based on testimony not cross-examined, where the witnesses refused to submit to cross-examination and testimony taken in chief at the time when rebuttal testimony was only permissible. I am talking from the record.

I am telling the facts ascertainable by every gentleman in this Hall, and I state these facts because I want to call the attention of this House to this proposition first. When determining whether a person is entitled to a seat here, although we under the Constitution have the power to disregard every rule of law, every right pertaining to honest and fair dealing—although we have the power to do it, yet as men and Representatives we have not the right to do so; and it is our duty to apply the well-known rules of law recognized in the courts to this case in our consideration of it.

Therefore, while I admit you have the absolute power, I ask gentlemen, as Representatives engaged in a solemn duty, to refuse to consider any ex parte testimony presented here not cross-examined, where there was no opportunity to cross-examine it, and to refuse to consider any testimony which was properly testimony in chief which was illegally and unlawfully brought into this record as testimony in rebuttal. And why do I ask it? Because from time immemorial the the courts sitting among English-speaking people have been ascertaining what sort of rules are necessary in regard to the admission of testimony designed to prove or intended to prove any fact, and they have made for us a body of rules.

And in that body of law, as the resultant of the best wisdom of all the courts, we have well-defined principles which tell us that certain kinds of testimony is competent and admissible to prove a fact, and that certain other kinds of testimony is neither competent nor admissible to even tend to prove any fact, and therefore ought not to be considered in connection with the fact by any judicial tribunal. One of those rules is that whoever takes the affirmative of an issue must introduce all the testimony that bears upon his side of the issue before the other side is called on to answer, that he may not divide his testimony, introducing a part and refusing to introduce a part, and that the only variation of this rule is a variation allowed in the discretion of the court when the parties and witnesses and all who are to be affected are present and subject to its control, so that no injustice may be done. I shall therefore, in my argument, utterly and absolutely disregard any testimony which was properly testimony-in-chief sought to be introduced in rebuttal under the resolution of this body.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. Let me ask you a question right there. What purpose did Page have in contesting this seat if he had no hope of getting it for himself?

Mr. ROWELL. He did have hope. He argued very elaborately before the committee that he was entitled to the seat. I suppose his hope was based upon the idea that political necessity required a decision in his favor, and that, as his political friends were in the majority in this House, they would, in obedience to that political necessity, assign the seat to him.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. That they would hold another election in the House.

Mr. ROWELL. Yes; hold another election here; but inasmuch as the majority of the committee have ignored his claim and have lawfully and properly rejected his theory that an election held in accordance with law is an election which should be overthrown, I shall not stop to comment upon that further than to say that he claimed that all the ballots cast for Mr. Pirce should be thrown out because he [Page] didn't like the laws, and had often tried to get them repealed.

Another thing in the testimony that I shall refuse to consider is this: Where a witness was called in the original ex parte testimony and was afterward subpœnaed by the contestee to come and submit to cross-examination and refused to submit himself to such cross-examination, I shall treat that testimony as not involved in this case in any shape or form, because it can not lawfully be considered, and in doing so I shall remember, as I can not fail to remember, the eloquent tribute of the chairman of the Committee on Elections in a former case to the right of cross-examination, and his eloquent argument illustrating how dangerous it is to consider at all ex parte testimony.

Mr. PETERS. Did these witnesses voluntarily refuse to testify?

Mr. ROWELL. They voluntarily refused, and one of them voluntarily tried to get other witnesses to refrain from appearing in the case when summoned in rebuttal. Now, Mr. Chairman, I know how difficult it is to get attention in this House, and I know that there are dozens of members—a good many dozens of them just now—considering this important question by engaging themselves with their correspondence—gentlemen who are sitting here at their desks occupied with matters which necessarily involve their attention and draw it away from this case; and I know also, that in a little while those same gentlemen, under their solemn oaths, will vote ay or no upon this case without knowing anything about it.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. You say that one of the witnesses refused to be cross-examined. Was the testimony which that witness had given of a character damaging to the contestee if it was true?

Mr. ROWELL. Yes, sir; it was, and of a very damaging character to the witness also.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. It was a case, then, in which cross-examination was peculiarly desirable?

Mr. ROWELL. Yes. I was just coming to that branch of the question. Because every criminative witness in this case is self-stultified; because nearly every criminative witness in this case who permitted himself to be cross-examined was obliged to admit that he was guilty of willful perjury; because every criminative witness in this case acknowledges himself to be a cheat and a purchasable man—for all these reasons it becomes more important that we apply the well known rules of evidence to the consideration of this case.

I challenge contradiction of the statement I now make, that every witness produced who gave testimony going to affect the right of the sitting member to his seat—every such witness by his testimony, whether he was cross-examined or not—confessed himself to be not such a man as you would rely upon to prove any fact. I charge again that wherever any witness ventured into deep water and dared to mention any name in connection with his testimony, that witness was overwhelmingly contradicted; and the only escape of any one of this class of witnesses so self-stultified from contradiction was an escape in the well-known refuge, "I do not know who the party was."

Now, they start out in this case with the township in which the contestee lives, and they bring three witnesses, named respectively Powers, Wood, and Lawton, who undertake to prove that there was some corruption about those polls. This was early in the taking of the testimony for the contestant; and caution had not become quite so largely developed as it was afterward in that examination. Hence, those three witnesses who testified to a neat little conspiracy that they had gotten up were careless enough to mention quite a large number of respectable names, and every name that they were careless enough to mention is in the record here, and its owner is a witness to contradict in toto the testimony of those three witnesses. And we did not stop there; we impeached those three witnesses until, if they had been capable of it, they would have hidden their faces in shame.

So that the majority of the committee have ignored the whole question of that township of Johnston on that kind of testimony and have left it out of their report. The majority of the committee—and now I come down to an investigation of the facts—say in their report that the grand canvassing board of the State of Rhode Island made a mistake in the figures. On this point my friend from Georgia, the chairman of the committee, has certainly not exercised the care with which he usually investigates matters of this kind; and because he has not in this case exercised his usual care I call upon this House to investigate a little for themselves. He tells you that the grand canvassing board of the State of Rhode Island, the grand committee of the General Assembly of that State, made a mistake in footing up the figures, and got the opposition vote too small by 9, whereas the gentleman's supposed discovery grew out of the fact that the printer in Washington who printed one portion of the testimony had changed a cipher for a nine; and a single turning over a leaf in the printed testimony or a reference to the original testimony on file would have illustrated that misprint.

Mr. TURNER. Let me ask the gentleman whether he can verify his statement?

Mr. ROWELL. I can verify the statement by a certificate under the grand seal of the State of Rhode Island.

Mr. TURNER. Where did you get it?

Mr. ROWELL. I have it here, and if you will——

Mr. TURNER. Where did you get it?

Mr. ROWELL (handing a paper to Mr. TURNER). Here it is.

Mr. TURNER. Where did you get it?

Mr. ROWELL. I never had it in my possession until a little while ago, but if you will turn to the evidence——

Mr. PAYNE. On page 79.

Mr. ROWELL. If you will turn to page 79 you will find in the detailed report the same thing precisely.

Mr. LONG. That question ought to be settled now.

Mr. ROWELL. I refer to the detailed report of the township of Hopkinton.

Mr. TURNER. The gentleman has not answered my inquiry, where he got this paper.

Mr. ROWELL. That paper was handed to me by Mr. Pirce.

Mr. TURNER. Then it is a private paper; it has not yet gone into the record.

Mr. ROWELL. The paper is here officially authenticated.

Mr. SPOONER. It is attested by the State seal and by the signature of the secretary of state.

Mr. TURNER. Allow me to save the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL] a little trouble. The gentleman is now on his honor as a member of the House.

Mr. ROWELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. TURNER. If he says that this abstract of the evidence is true, then I am willing to assume that the majority of Mr. Pirce over all his competitors is as thus shown, 16, and to make the argument on that basis; but at the same time I assure the gentleman that in doing so I rely on his statement as to the correctness of this information.

Mr. ROWELL. I assure the gentleman that I have not examined the original, but I have examined the printed evidence here.

Mr. TURNER. The paper which the gentleman now exhibits to me shows the correction which he has just insisted upon. If the gentleman gives his word that this is correct, I will stand upon the correctness of his word, and we will assume there is as shown in this way a majority for Mr. Pirce of 16 over all his competitors.

Mr. SPOONER. If the gentleman will accept my statement, I will say that this paper is signed by the secretary of state of Rhode Island, whose signature I well know, and the seal of the State is affixed.

Mr. TURNER. The statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL] is sufficient; I know he would not attempt anything wrong. (To Mr. ROWELL.) Go on with your argument; we will assume that the majority is 16.

Then that question is ended, and he was elected by 16. Inasmuch as that question is out of the case, and it becomes a question whether 16 is to be deducted from the sitting member so as to unseat him, we will go ahead and discuss that question.

Nearly all the testimony in this case, Mr. Speaker, is addressed to the town of Warwick. Nearly every witness whose testimony is quoted in the majority report refers to the town of Warwick.

There is some testimony taken in rebuttal, but really testimony in chief with reference to the town of Foster. One witness, by the name of Marble, voting at the town of Foster, testifies that he received $3 for his vote. That testimony was taken in chief, but outside of that the testimony to bribery was confined to the town of Warwick. They are nine in number, and only nine outside of your so-called rebuttal that testified to the purchase of votes. Nine different witnesses came upon the witness-stand when the testimony was taken ex parte, and testified, one for $2 and the balance for $3, that they voted for the contestee in consideration of $3 paid to them for that vote.

Now let us have it fairly understood, nine witnesses at the town of Warwick testified to that state of facts. The first of these witnesses when cross-examined testified, as did three others. He said a man handed him a ticket—a yellow Pirce ticket—and said "Vote that, and I will see you later." [Laughter.] Three of them used that exact language, and one added to the words "I will see you later," the words "down at Atwood's barn."

That was all there was of the testimony as to whether they had been corrupted and whether money had been agreed to be paid to them before they cast their votes. Put it legally, and if we have regard for the law, they say from the surroundings and from certain appearances they understood they would get pay. A good lawyer like my friend, the chairman of this committee, calls that testimony. He would not so call it anywhere except in a contested election, I think.

The first of these witnesses who testified said not only that he sold his vote for $3, thereby being self-stultified, but he swore that he had always been a Democrat. On cross-examination he swore he did not sell his vote for $3; that there was not any understanding he was to get money; that the money he did get was to pay him for his time in going to the polls and losing his pay by putting another man in his place. He further testified he had not always been a Democrat; that for the last five preceding years he had voted the Republican ticket, and that in ten years he had not voted the Democratic ticket but once or twice, or at most four times. He swore he had always been a Democrat under the direction of the agent of contestant, who was sent for him to come and testify, as he acknowledged on cross-examination.

Now, I ask gentlemen, standing as judges and ceasing to be partisans, if upon the bench or in the jury box, a witness should come before you and testify upon examination-in-chief to one material fact, and on cross-examination he should testify to the opposite, acknowledging when he testified before he knew it was true, and testified under the direction of the party calling him as a witness——

Mr. PERKINS. That he knew it was false!

Mr. ROWELL. Yes; that he knew it was false, would you believe that witness?

Now, Mr. Speaker, it may be said the balance of this class of witnesses corroborated this falsifier. Ay, but the rule of corroboration is not that half-a-dozen liars can corroborate another liar, but that testimony impeached can only be corroborated by unimpeached testimony.

The next witness called was one William Bates; but before going to that, let me say——

Mr. BURROWS. You say three witnesses testified the Pirce vote was handed to them, and it was said, "We will see you later, down at the barn." Now, is there any evidence in the case they were seen later, and paid money for their votes?

Mr. ROWELL. Those three witnesses, as they say, were seen later and paid for their votes.

Mr. BURROWS. Which of them, and by whom? Is the evidence clear the vote was bought, and if so, by whom?

Mr. ROWELL. No; they refused to state. This witness I have just spoken of was an old resident of the town, and he said he did not know who it was.

Whether they were paid at all depends upon their uncorroborated testimony, impeached by self-contradiction or by refusal to submit to cross-examination. In either case it is unworthy to be considered as evidence.

The next witness was one William Bates, who was examined on this question of bribery. He testifies as follows:

> This person, whom I have mentioned, came to me and asked me if I had voted. I told him I had not. He gave me a yellow Pirce ticket, and said, "You vote that and I will see you later." I voted that ticket. I then came out, and as I was getting into my team he handed me $3.

That witness refused to turn up for cross-examination at all. He declared that he did not know who had paid him. I rule his testimony out because he declined to appear for cross-examination and declined to allow a test to be made of his truthfulness.

The next witness was Frank D. Morse. In the course of his testimony, after stating that he was paid $3 for his vote, he goes on to say:

> He handed me a Pirce ticket and said, "I will see you later down at Atwood's Hotel."

That witness also refused to appear for cross-examination. That witness declared he did not know who paid him.

The next witness was Cyrus W. Eddy. He says he voted as he pleased; that there was no interference before he voted, and that he did not vote for money. He claims to have received $3, and "that he always took it to be granted that they paid money to the working classes." He had lived in Warwick for thirteen years, and yet he did not know the man who paid him. On cross-examination he says he was not paid to vote for Mr. Pirce, but that the money was paid for his lost time in going 5 miles to the voting place and losing a day.

Another witness was one F. W. Carpenter. He swears on his examination-in-chief that he received $3 for voting for Pirce, and that he had always been a Democrat. He answered on cross-examination, and in that answered that for the last two or three years he had voted with the Collingwood party, which was the Republican party of Warwick, and had not during that time voted with the Democrats. He said also that he received this money for the loss of time, and not to induce him to vote for any body.

There are, Mr. Speaker, nine of these witnesses. Four of them turned up on cross-examination and five did not appear. Now, then, two of the witnesses—and that is the meat and gist of this case—two of the witnesses swear on the original examination that there were one hundred or more at that place who were paid.

They did not turn up on cross-examination; but after the cross-examination had ceased and they had refused to answer the subpœna, the contestant having control of them put them again on the stand as witnesses, and it turned out that they were testifying not from knowledge, but from hearsay in regard to anybody else than themselves, and this hearsay is the sole evidence in the record about anybody but the witnesses themselves being bribed. Another witness, of this same town of Warwick, who was not confessing to his self-stultification, who did not sell out his vote, and who was one of the Page managers, undertook to testify about the corruption at Warwick, and ventured upon mentioning the names of those connected with the purchasing of votes.

The moment he mentioned the names of the persons whom he claimed did the purchasing, reputable names, three persons, the ones he named, appeared upon the witness stand, and declared that they neither used money themselves nor knew of its being used at the Warwick polls, and were there working in the interest of contestee, the sitting member in the case. So that under the rule, which is common in this case, that wherever a witness ventures to open the door to test his truthfulness, that moment his testimony was open to question by credible testimony; this witness was thoroughly contradicted, and there is no variableness from beginning to end in the record.

These two witnesses who testified originally that one hundred were bought, declared they knew who paid them, but refused to answer who paid them; and I call again upon the lawyers of this House to say, when a witness does not answer a material question, whether they will consider his testimony at all in the case. But admitting, if you please, the nine witnesses at Warwick and one at Foster, it makes but ten, and if you rule all out it leaves Pirce then with a majority over all of 6 and 1,751 over the highest candidate voted for at the election—the contestant in this case.

I have occupied more time, Mr. Speaker, than I had intended and yet have not discussed a great many important questions that ought to be discussed as bearing upon this case.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. Before the gentleman sits down I would like to ask him a question. What is your opinion of a case where money is paid for a vote for a candidate without his knowledge or consent—money paid in support of his case of which he knows nothing?

Mr. ROWELL. If money is paid for a vote that vote should be counted out.

Mr. LONG. Let me ask the gentleman a question. Do I understand you to say the evidence shows that only ten of these men received pay for their votes?

Mr. ROWELL. Only ten.

Mr. LONG. Then if the charge of bribery is established at all it is established only as to ten votes. Is that clear in the evidence?

Mr. ROWELL. That is clear, with the exception of the two witnesses who first said that there were one hundred who were paid for their votes, but gave no names, and whose evidence was hearsay.

Mr. LONG. And in regard to that they were evidently guessing?

Mr. ROWELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. TURNER. I hope the gentleman from Massachusetts will not assume by our silence that we assent to that statement.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. Let me ask the gentleman from Illinois, do you hold that if I am innocent, as a candidate running for office, of the knowledge of the use of money, and an enemy pays for a vote for me which may decide the election, that that fact would destroy my right to the seat if elected?

Mr. ROWELL. I hold that a purchased vote—I do not care whether there is knowledge or not of it on the part of a candidate—if a man is purchased and votes against his political convictions, that vote should be thrown out.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. I do not say whether he voted against his political convictions.

Mr. ROWELL. If it turned out on evidence that an enemy of yours went and gave to one of your friends money to vote for you, designing to throw out that vote, that would be a fraud on you. That is another question.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. Is not the vote tainted in the one case as well as in the other?

Mr. ROWELL. That introduces another question into consideration—the question of fraud.

Mr. LONG. The gentleman from Illinois says every vote purchased in the interest of a candidate should be thrown out.

Mr. ROWELL. Certainly.

Mr. LONG. And a vote purchased against his interest should not be.

Mr. ROWELL. How much time have I occupied?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. EDEN). The gentleman has eleven minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. ROWELL. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. The majority of the committee claimed, I understand, that the sitting member was only elected by 3 majority?

Mr. ROWELL. That was subsequently rectified, there having been a misprint of a 9 for a 0.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. And the majority now concede that he was elected by 16?

Mr. ROWELL. Certainly.

Mr. BOYLE. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL], in presenting this case on the part of the contestee, has discussed many matters which, in the opinion of the majority of the committee, are not material. This contest was set on foot by the contestant in the belief that he was not only entitled to oust the sitting member, but to have himself declared elected. After an investigation, which I know to have been thorough, and which I believe to be entirely fair, the committee came to a different conclusion as to the contestant's right to the seat; and while a majority of the committee have found that the sitting member was not elected, they have also found that the contestant is not entitled to the seat. In other words, the majority of the committee has reported that there was no election in the second district of Rhode Island in 1884, and that the seat should be declared vacant.

Much has been said respecting the manner of taking this testimony. I submit, sir, to the House that the committee has gone no further than the facts of the case and the justice of the case not only warranted, but absolutely required. I will refer to this matter briefly, although it does not touch the merits of the controversy. The notice of contest was given in due time; but in consequence of some arrangement between the contestant and the contestee, or their counsel, the testimony was not taken within the period required by the act of Congress. What that arrangement was I do not undertake to say, because the parties to it do not agree.

The contestant and his counsel maintain under oath that the time within which the testimony was to be taken under this agreement was not limited; they claim that owing to the fact that counsel were engaged in court, and as it was not known when they could look after the contest, it was agreed that the testimony should be taken at a time to suit all parties, and that in effect the requirements of the statute in this respect were waived. In this they were supported by another witness. The contestee and his counsel, while denying that such was the arrangement, admit that an agreement of some kind was made relating to the time for taking the testimony.

It was an oral agreement, and there was a misunderstanding between the parties as to what it was, but not as to the fact of an agreement having been made.

After learning that there was a misunderstanding as to the agreement, the contestant proceeded to take his testimony. The proper notice was given to the contestee, but he refused to appear himself or by counsel. But some gentleman, a lawyer, who finally appeared as the counsel for the contestee, was on hand at every hearing, without, however, interfering in the taking of testimony, except upon one occasion.

Mr. SPOONER. He appeared, as he said, as a voter in that district, and in his own behalf.

Mr. ELY. And he did not afterward appear for the contestee.

Mr. BOYLE. I think he did.

Mr. SPOONER. No, sir. You are mixing two men up.

Mr. BOYLE. It is immaterial whether he afterward appeared as counsel for Mr. Pirce. This gentleman was present at every hearing; and on one occasion intervened on behalf of the contestee by objecting to certain testimony.

Mr. SPOONER. That is a mistake.

Mr. BOYLE. It is certainly not a mistake.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to have the gentleman refer to that part of the record which shows any such thing.

Mr. BOYLE. I will not take the time to refer to it now. I state on my recollection that this gentleman who stated that he appeared on behalf of himself and other voters did on one occasion intervene to object to testimony. That the gentleman will find by referring to the testimony; and I do not propose to occupy my time further in discussing this matter. I simply allude to it. But even if I am wrong—and I am sure I am not—it does not affect the merits of this case.

The testimony was taken on the part of the contestant, and was presented to the committee. The contestee had the opportunity to be present. The committee found on an examination of it, such a state of facts connected with this election as in our judgment required a full investigation. We did not proceed upon the testimony before us, but we reported to the House a resolution, and the House adopted it, giving to the contestee a limited period, thirty days, I think, within which to recall the contestant's witnesses for cross-examination, and within which to take his own testimony; and giving to the contestant ten days in which to take rebutting testimony. This was all the time it was practicable to give at the time the resolution was adopted. This order went out, and the contestee called his witnesses, and recalled the witnesses who had been examined for the contestant. I believe it is alleged some of them did not appear; but he spent a number of days, probably his full time, in taking his own testimony and in cross-examining the witnesses who had been examined on behalf of the contestant.

That testimony was presented to the committee, and was considered fully; so that the fact that the contestee had failed to take part in the original examination was wholly immaterial, as he had opportunity to fully cross-examine the witnesses afterward.

Mr. SPOONER. But a number of them did not appear.

Mr. BOYLE. I have no doubt that they could have been had by the use of the ordinary process. There was abundance of time to have them appear, as they lived in the neighborhood.

Mr. SPOONER. The attempt was made, but the magistrates decided that they had no authority to compel the attendance of those witnesses.

Mr. BOYLE. There is no doubt that if the contestee had been desirous to have them appear he could have done so.

Mr. PIRCE. How?

Mr. BOYLE. I believe the contestee himself offered to bring them upon certain reasonable conditions.

Mr. ELY. But had the magistrates power to bring them?

Mr. BOYLE. I will not take time to consider that question. But the gentleman will not claim that the appearance of these witnesses could not have been compelled. It could have been done quickly and without difficulty. Indeed, some of those whose absence is complained of were afterward brought upon the stand by the contestee, and there was abundant opportunity to cross-examine them had it been desired to do so.

So, Mr. Speaker, as to this alleged irregularity in taking the testimony, I maintain that the committee was justified in reporting the resolution, and the House was justified in passing the resolution, to extend the time for the taking of testimony, because of the dispute between the parties and the counsel as to what the original agreement between them was.

The contestant claimed that the election should be declared in his favor because of the intimidation alleged to have been practiced by the manufacturers and employers of Rhode Island toward their employés. There is some evidence to support that allegation.

Mr. PIRCE. Not a bit.

Mr. BOYLE. It appears that the precincts attacked are places in which large factories exist, where quarries are worked, and other branches of industry are carried on, and it appears that many of the employers and their agents and clerks were present at the election and remained all day. There is some evidence that "influence" at least was exercised by employers on their employés, with the view of inducing them to vote the Republican ticket. A particular arrangement of the polling-room was made, so that the voter had to run a gauntlet of Republican politicians; and the ballot-box was placed above the level of the voter's head, so that his ticket, as large as my hand, could be seen all over the room.

The tickets used on that occasion were produced before the committee, and I have them here. It seems that under the law of Rhode Island there is no requirement as to the shape, color, or size of the ticket; but it is provided that the voter may inclose his ticket in an envelope, that those envelopes shall be supplied by the State officers, and shall be uniform in appearance, &c.

At the election in 1884 there were two tickets, one for President and the ticket for Congress. The Presidential tickets of both parties were on white paper. The Democratic ticket for Congress was also on white paper, but the Republican ticket was of this color [holding up a straw-colored piece of paper], which I have no doubt not only every gentleman upon this floor but also every person in the gallery can distinguish from a ticket on white paper.

Now, it is true that the voter might, if he had so desired, have placed this ticket in an envelope, but it was contended by the contestant before the committee that to have done that would have been equivalent to an admission on the part of the voter that he was not voting for the sitting member—that it would have been the concealment of a fact which the employer required the employé should not conceal, because he said to the employé, "If you are voting for Pirce vote an open ticket, so that it can be seen that you are doing so."

Mr. PIRCE. There is no such evidence at all.

Mr. BOYLE. This ticket, I say, was used upon that occasion, and it appears from the evidence that that is a common practice in Rhode Island in that district at Congressional elections. I have one of the tickets used in the first Congressional district at another election [exhibiting it].

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; that is printed on blue-tinted paper. That is the color of the ticket on which I was elected.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania permit a question?

Mr. BOYLE. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Was there any evidence before the committee that the employers instructed their employés in the manner you have stated, namely, that they must vote for Pirce, and must vote the yellow ticket openly, in order to bring the proof home to the employers that they did vote for Mr. Pirce?

Mr. BOYLE. No, sir.

Mr. MILLIKEN. That is to be inferred from your remark.

Mr. BOYLE. No, sir. If you had paid attention you would have heard me say that it was contended by the contestant and by those who represented him that that was the effect of putting the ticket in an envelope; and it so appears very clearly. There is no doubt about it.

Mr. PAYNE. What does the gentleman mean by stating that it appears very clearly? Does he mean from the evidence?

Mr. BOYLE. I think it appears very clearly from conceded facts.

Mr. PAYNE. What facts?

Mr. BOYLE. From the use of this peculiar ticket.

Mr. PAYNE. Is there any evidence of it except the use of the ticket?

Mr. BOYLE. I have stated at least once that there is not. I state the conceded facts; and I say that from those facts it appears that the manner in which the voter voted would be apparent from his use or non-use of the envelope.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. Was not the white ticket just as distinguishable as the other?

Mr. BOYLE. If the tickets of both parties had been white it would have been hard to distinguish them.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. Of course; and if they had both been yellow it would also have been hard to distinguish them.

Mr. BOYLE. But one ticket being white and the other yellow, there was no trouble in distinguishing them.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Were not the printers of the white ticket just as much to blame for making this distinction of color as those who used tickets of the other color?

Mr. BOYLE. Inasmuch as the yellow ticket was ordered by the Republican State committee of Rhode Island, the printers did not have anything to do with determining the color. They printed what they were ordered to print.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Was not the white ticket ordered by the State committee of the other party?

Mr. BOYLE. Possibly. It came out, however, in the testimony that this was the practice—to print tickets for the Republican candidates for Congress in Rhode Island on colored paper; and it came out also that the color was changed at every election. Why was this done? Why print this ticket on paper differing in color from other tickets? And why change the color of the ticket at every election? The evident purpose was to enable bystanders to see how the voter voted, and the design in changing the color each year was to prevent the opposing candidate from having similar tickets printed. Here is a Pirce ticket used at another election [holding one up], and it will be observed that there is a difference of color.

Mr. WILSON. Does the gentleman say that many of the employers were at the polls during the whole day?

Mr. BOYLE. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILSON. Did they give any reason for being present?

Mr. BOYLE. I know of none.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Had they not the same right to go to the polls and vote as their employés?

Mr. BOYLE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. ELY. But did not thirty or forty witnesses testify that the statement in regard to the presence of employers at the poles was untrue?

Mr. BOYLE. I know that a number of witnesses swore that they took no part in the election. I do not remember that the presence of employers, agents, &c., at the polls during the day was denied.

Mr. ELY. And of those witnesses many were Democrats?

Mr. BOYLE. Very likely. But I do not think any Democrats were there to coerce voters. I take it there were other manufacturers and employers in Rhode Island besides those to whom this testimony referred.

Mr. ELY. But those witnesses testified generally to what occurred at the election, did they not?

Mr. BOYLE. It is not denied that there were a number of manufacturers, and manufacturers' agents and clerks present at that election all day.

Mr. PERKINS. Have you ever seen an election at which the people did not attend and participate?

Mr. BOYLE. I must confess I have not. I am afraid I shall not get to the real issues of this case if I am detained so long at the threshold.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. If the gentleman will consent, I would like to ask one question. As I understand the matter was so arranged in this case that if an employer wanted to know how his employé voted he could know.

Mr. BOYLE. Why, that appears from the testimony of almost every witness, and from the facts which are not denied.

Mr. PIRCE. Could not the voter inclose his ticket in an envelope if he wished to?

Mr. BOYLE. He could; but his employer would have known that he did so.

A MEMBER. And that would have been regarded as a suspicious circumstance?

Mr. BOYLE. Very. It would have been confession under the circumstances.

But, Mr. Speaker, as the committee did not report in favor of the view of the contestant, it is not very material to discuss the grounds on which he based his claim. The committee did not throw out the vote cast for Mr. Pirce because ballots were printed on colored paper or because there was intimidation. They find against him for other reasons.

Mr. Speaker, in Rhode Island the right of suffrage is very much restricted. The number of voters is small in proportion to the population. This is due to the fact that under the laws of that State naturalized citizens are not allowed to vote unless they are the owners of real estate of a certain value. This restriction is placed upon no other class. As there is a large foreign population in Rhode Island the result is a great disparity between voters and population. Now, sir, as the right of suffrage is thus limited—as so many American citizens are thus disfranchised—I maintain that the few who are by law entitled to vote ought to be allowed to do so without being compelled to use a ticket of any particular color and without being interfered with in any way.

Mr. BAKER. Let me ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question.

Mr. BOYLE. Certainly.

Mr. BAKER. Does it appear how many votes were placed in envelopes?

Mr. BOYLE. Very few. I do not remember how many there were.

Mr. BAKER. Which side; Democratic or Republican?

Mr. BOYLE. I do not remember any evidence on that subject.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Is there any evidence from the voters themselves that they had been intimidated or bulldozed?

Mr. BOYLE. Not any. There was evidence that one man going to the polls was halted and called back by his employer, and that he had some conversation with him and departed without voting. But, Mr. Speaker, I can not allow interruptions to take up my whole time.

The committee has decided there was no election, and based their finding on the fact that the evidence shows that enough votes were corrupted, enough were paid money directly for their votes, to more than destroy the apparent majority of the sitting member.

It seems that under the law of Rhode Island the successful candidate must have a majority of the whole vote, and it is claimed that the contestee had 16 over the combined vote of those who opposed him. The chairman of the committee, depending on the evidence before us, thought there was a mistake in the certificate, and that the majority was only 3 instead of 16. Whether this be so or not is immaterial, because the evidence is sufficient to dispose of the 16 as well as the 3.

There is evidence, by voters themselves, as is admitted by the gentlemen who have argued this case, that ten witnesses came forward and swore they received money for their votes. Afterward they qualified this statement, and said they received money for the time spent in going to the election. Well, it is a nice distinction, but not a substantial one. I call attention to the fact that the evidence shows it to be the common tactics of Republican candidates in Rhode Island to pay a class of voters for their votes, under pretense of paying them for going to the election. One witness swore that he had been a Democrat, but as the Republicans paid men for their time in going to the election and the Democrats did not he long ago joined the Republican party, and had since been paid. And it appears, and will not be denied, that it is the common practice in certain precincts in Rhode Island to so pay voters under pretense of paying them for their time.

It is admitted that ten men were so paid, but I say the direct evidence is that a larger number are shown to have been paid. Men who had been Democrats were paid, and some Republicans were paid. They voted the Pirce ticket that was handed them, and were paid their money. They swore to it. Three dollars was the ruling rate.

Mr. BURROWS. How many?

Mr. BOYLE. I have not counted, but there were more than sixteen. I think the evidence shows there were two or three hundred paid. But I am speaking of those who admitted they received money.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. Read them.

Mr. BOYLE. I will read them. Here is Charles Gardner; he got $2 only. He was not up to the prevailing price.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. Who paid him?

Mr. BOYLE. It does not appear who paid in any instance, further than that the payments were made by persons working for Pirce. Some say they went to Atwood's Hotel and were paid, but do not say who paid them. In some cases the parties paying were unknown, and in others the parties receiving the money refused to give the name. But I will read further the names of those who received money. Amos J. Wells received $5; Albert A. Johnson got $3; William Bates, $3; Frank D. Morse got $3; Cyrus W. Eddy, $3; John G. Marble received only $1. He said he was promised more. Fayette W. Carpenter. $3; William Wilcox, $3.

I will take occasion here to read what Wilcox swore. He said: "I do not wish to give the name of the person who gave me the money at present. It was paid in the Atwood Hotel. There were probably a hundred men waiting for their money. It was paid in greenbacks."

Wilcox understood that he was to receive some money soon after the polls were opened, probably within twenty minutes, and then goes on to say that there were from one hundred to one hundred and twenty-five men who received money.

Jesse Jinks received $3; John F. Loche said that he received money.

Mr. PIRCE. No, sir; not a dollar.

Mr. BOYLE. Well, I am reading from the testimony.

Mr. ROWELL. Loche did not testify to getting any money. He is the fellow who testified and mentioned the names of others who were paid money for voting.

Mr. BOYLE. I think that is correct.

Mr. ELY. But you said that you would give us the names of sixteen who said they received money.

Mr. BOYLE. I have not stated that I would give the names of sixteen who said they had got the money, but that I would show by the proof that more than sixteen were paid.

Mr. SPOONER. You said you would name them.

Mr. BOYLE. Well, I am naming them.

Mr. PAYNE. You have not named more than eight.

Mr. BOYLE. I have named more than eight, and I am not through yet. Here is a man named Padien.

Mr. PIRCE. Did he get money?

Mr. BOYLE. No, it was Powers; I had the wrong name before me. He got $2. He is the man who claimed that Major Pirce paid him.

Mr. SPOONER. Should not the gertleman in fairness say that the majority of the committee have thrown out all claim that Powers received any money?

Mr. BOYLE. I am not conscious of any such action on the part of the committee.

Mr. SPOONER. I understand the report indicates as much on the part of the chairman of the committee in his opening remarks.

Mr. BOYLE. I know of no such action on the part of the committee. I am giving only the evidence as to the payment of money to these parties.

Mr. SPOONER. You know that this man was impeached?

Mr. BOYLE. Yes, I know that; a number of them were impeached, but they were also sustained.

Mr. PIRCE. No, not one was sustained.

Mr. BOYLE. That is a question. Evidence was given to sustain them.

Mr. ELY. Whose evidence was given to sustain Powers?

Mr. BOYLE. I do not remember; but one thing is certain, there was evidence to sustain his character. But two or three witnesses saw Powers go to the outside of the house and come back again with money.

Mr. ROWELL. Each of them was thoroughly impeached.

Mr. BOYLE. Oh, yes, pretty much everybody who gave testimony against the sitting member was sought to be impeached, but in the judgment of the committee the effort was not successful.

Mr. ELY. Let me ask the gentleman if there was one single witness who testified that he saw this man go to Mr. Pirce, meet him, and come back with the money? If there is such testimony I ask him to read it.

Mr. BOYLE. I have not the testimony at hand, but my recollection is that there were at least two witnesses who testified in that way.

Mr. ROWELL. No, sir; that is a mistake.

Mr. BOYLE. I believe that one gentleman testified that he sent Powers to Pirce, and sent him back the second time, and watched him go, and that he returned with the money, and Powers swore Pirce gave it to him.

But, again, here is Michael F. Barry. He testified that he saw Pirce pay Powers. He also swore that he saw Frank Duffy, Charles H. Gardner, Albert A. Cole, John T. Nichols, and Thomas Eagan, all Democrats, go to the polls with Beane, a worker for Pirce, vote, and that they were then paid.

Mr. ROWELL. This man Barry swears he did not.

Mr. BOYLE. I think not. I read the evidence of Elijah F. Locke respecting the vote of Charles Gardner. It will be found on page 82 of the new testimony, as follows:

> Ans. As I arrived at the town-house the runners were on as usual at previous town meetings; I see them leading in men; with paper and pencil taking down their names as they voted—that is, I supposed it was their names; I couldn't see them. About 2 o'clock in the afternoon Charles Gardner come to me while standing near the stove in the other room, and asked me to get him a Page ticket. I done so. At the time one of those runners, so called, stepped up and said to Charles H. Gardner: "We are paying two dollars to vote this ticket, and if you will vote this ticket you will be all right." Mr. Gardner says to me, "What would you do?" He says, "I have been out of work, am poor, and need the money." I says to Mr. Gardner, "Do as you are a mind to; I will give no advice." Mr. Gardner went and voted the ticket. That was all I see at that time till along in the afternoon, toward night. Along at about the time the polls closed, either just before or just after, I couldn't say, Mr. Gardner showed me a two-dollar bill, which he said he took for his vote.

Mr. PIRCE. Have you read his evidence? If so, I am satisfied you would not comment even on his testimony—a man who had been lying in jail.

Mr. BOYLE. I think the gentleman is hardly warranted in making that statement in this connection.

Mr. PIRCE. It is a fact.

Mr. ELY. And based on the record.

Mr. BOYLE. It neither elects you nor defeats your election. I think it would be better not to comment on a witness in that way.

Mr. ELY. It is a material part of the record in this case.

Mr. BOYLE. I do not remember it; but it is not becoming to assail a witness here by stating facts, which facts, whether true or not, are not essential in the case.

Here is again the evidence of Edward Sweeney, who says he got $5 from Martin Evans. He had been a Democrat, but had turned over and was working for Pirce, and was buying Democratic votes for him. William Dougherty got $4 for his own vote and $1 for working to bring in another man. Bernard Allen and Harley Howard were each offered $3 to vote for Pirce. Benjamin Pirce, a near relative of the sitting member, paid James E. Cahoon $5 for his vote. Henry W. Hall was offered $5 by Beane, a Pirce worker, and James E. Bushe was offered money by one Dougherty, a Pirce witness, for his vote.

But, Mr. Speaker, that is not the most important part of the testimony in this case. It is proved that quite a large number of men who had been Democrats in the town called Warwick voted for Major Pirce. It is proved that the friends of Major Pirce were active at the polls in Warwick during the entire day. It is proved by a number of these witnesses that they were paid money—directly proved by some of them; while it is proved by others that everything around the polls and at the election indicated that money was being paid generally.

It is proved that this money was paid at a place called Atwood's Hotel, in that town. When this class of voters voted their names were put down on a list, and they were told to appear at Atwood's Hotel. They did appear there in the evening, and stood outside, between the barn and the house, and their names were called one by one, and as their names were called they went into the barn. This was proved by several witnesses. I do not say there is any direct evidence that money was paid in the barn. I do not recall the testimony of any witness to that effect. But these same men who were Democrats, who had voted for Pirce, congregated at this place, and the list was called off in the evening between 4 and 5 o'clock, and these men went into the barn.

Mr. ROWELL. Are there more than three of those men who swore they were Democrats?

Mr. BOYLE. There were one hundred or one hundred and twenty-five of those men who were not sworn at all. They were Democrats, as I understand from the evidence, but they were seen to vote with the Republican workers, and reported at Atwood's Hotel in the evening, and were called into the barn for some purpose. It was stated by some of the witnesses—I do not know with what degree of knowledge, but they stated it as if they knew it—that these men were paid money in the barn.

In support of this let me read a part of the testimony of Oliver J. Chappelle, a Republican, who voted for PIRCE. (New testimony, page 74:)

A. I saw no money paid, nor saw no money offered. The only thing that I saw was a crowd of men congregated in the alley south of my shop, and I saw them pass in and out of the barn as they were called. That's the only thing that I saw.
Q. Who called them?
A. That I can't say, as I don't know.
Q. How, then, do you know that they were called at all?
A. I could hear the man call and see them go in.
Q. Were these men so-called voters in Apponaug?
A. I don't know.
Q. Will you name any of those who were so called, if you knew any of them?
A. I do not remember the names that I heard called.

The SPEAKER pro tempore [Mr. EDEN]. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOYLE] has occupied half an hour.

Mr. TURNER. I ask that the gentleman be allowed to proceed for five minutes more.

Mr. BOYLE. So it appears from this testimony of Republicans, as well as of Democrats, that this crowd of men appeared at Atwood's Hotel that evening, and were called into the barn, and it appears from the testimony of several of other witnesses that money was paid at Atwood's Hotel. That that was the paying place.

Now, I submit we have shown direct payment to more than enough, as proved by the parties themselves and by those who saw money paid, to destroy the 16 majority which is claimed for Major Pirce. But in addition to that we have this other testimony, which to me is of the most satisfactory character, when you take into account all the circumstances and facts, that they were Democrats, that they voted for Pirce, that their names were put on the list, that they reported at Atwood's Hotel in the evening, that their names were called, that they went in, and that they came out one by one, and that it was generally understood they were there to be paid, it seems to me a good case has been made out. That seems to me to be satisfactory proof in support of the general testimony that money was paid at the barn that evening.

Mr. LONG. Are the names of those parties given?

Mr. BOYLE. They are not.

Mr. LONG. Ought there not to be a specification of names?

Mr. BOYLE. I think not. I think it might be competent to prove a man was paid, even if you did not know who he was; and if you saw a crowd of one hundred and twenty-five gathered in a certain place under the circumstances I have named it might be difficult to give the names of any of them and impossible to name all.

Mr. LONG. I think if that charge be true, there ought to be a specification of names. If no names are mentioned, does that fact not show that the charge is mere hearsay?

Mr. BOYLE. No, sir; the men say they saw it. Mr. Chappelle, who has a shop close by the barn, stood there and heard the names called and saw the men go in. He said he would not say the money was paid; he was not in the barn. Their names were called, they went in, and it is proved by some of the witnesses that some of the men said they were paid.

Mr. LONG. That is mere hearsay.

Mr. BOYLE. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. How does the vote of that precinct compare with former votes relatively as between Democrats and Republicans?

Mr. BOYLE. I do not know. That would not be material evidence in this case for this reason, that a large part of the Republican party in Mr. Pirce's district was opposed to him. It is a strong Republican district, and his nomination was unsatisfactory to the party in the district, and he encountered much opposition.

Mr. ROWELL. Is it not true that at this precinct Mr. Pirce ran ahead of his ticket?

Mr. BOYLE. Probably it is.

Mr. ROWELL. Is it not true the manufacturers of that district came and testified they did not favor Mr. Pirce's election?

Mr. BOYLE. A good many of the manufacturers did not favor Mr. Pirce. I have said that there was a large part of the Republican party that did not favor him, and, therefore, if he had not had this Democratic contingent, secured in some way, he would probably have been beaten in the election.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the committee founds its report upon the fact which I have last attempted to present to the House, namely, that the vote in that district was corrupted to a sufficient extent to overcome Pirce's apparent majority, and to vitiate the election; that more than sixteen men, and, as we think, several hundred, were induced to vote for Mr. Pirce by a money consideration. If these are the facts, and I believe they are, Mr. Pirce was not elected; and the least the committee could do was to so declare.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, the importance of the question now before the House for consideration can not be over-estimated, and before noticing the arguments adduced by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOYLE] in support of the majority report of the Committee on Elections, I will call the attention of the House to some of the facts in the case which are undisputed. It is admitted by all, that, in the Congressional district in question, there were 15,476 votes cast, of which number Mr. Pirce, the sitting member, received 7,746, and that Mr. Page, the contestant, received 5,995 votes, which was 1,751 less than the number received by contestee. It is also admitted that, under the laws of the State of Rhode Island, the contestee must secure his election by a majority of all the votes cast at the Congressional election. Besides the contestee, there was a temperance candidate, who received at that election something more than 1,500 votes; and, in addition, there were a number of scattering votes cast.

It is admitted, however, that Mr. Pirce received 16 votes more than the combined votes of all the other candidates. Mr. Page has made his contest upon two charges: first, intimidation; and, second, bribery. The intimidation was alleged upon the ground which has been stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOYLE], namely, that Mr. Pirce or his supporters used a tinted or straw-colored ticket.

So far as this House is concerned I maintain that that question is res adjudicata. Contestee has admitted from the first the use of these colored tickets. He has not only admitted the use of these colored tickets, but has defended his right to use them and their legality under the laws of Rhode Island. At the time that the majority of the Committee on Elections reported to this House, during the last session, their resolution holding jurisdiction of this case and recommending that time be given contestee to cross-examine the witnesses whose depositions had been taken in this cause, ex parte, by contestant this fact of the use of colored tickets was as well known to the committee and members of this House as it is now; and if the members of the committee had believed there was any force in the proposition which is now made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOYLE] that the use of these colored tickets served to intimidate voters they would at that time have recommended that the House throw out the seven thousand and odd votes cast for Mr. Pirce, and to have then and there ended this contest.

The fact that, instead of insisting that the use of this colored ticket was sufficient to invalidate the vote for Pirce, they permitted this contest to go on is enough to estop them now from raising that question, and so far as I am concerned I shall occupy no further time in discussing that branch of the case.

It is admitted, that, under the constitution of the State of Rhode Island, the ticket is not required to be of any particular color, size, or form, but the option is left with the voter to vote the open ticket or to put it in an envelope, seal it, and then deposit it in the ballot-box. The point further raised by the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOYLE], that men who employed large numbers of operatives were around the polls to see that their men voted as they desired, is, it seems to me, without force. Men have a right to use honorable argument to influence voters at election.

A man of standing and character in the community will be sure to have influence, and if that influence is used fairly no man has a right to complain. I assert what will not be denied, that in no instance does the evidence show that any of these operatives were influenced by intimidation, or by coercion upon the part of an employer to vote against their political preferences or convictions. The only evidence that even looks that way is the testimony of a man by the name of Garland, who had a number of men in his employ upon the highway; yet that man, who appears a swift witness in the interest of the contestant, states distinctly that the only influence he used was to request the men under him to vote a certain way. He denies that he used money; he denies that he used any other influence than the influence of requesting these men to vote.

Now, I maintain that if that is the kind of influence he used, it is not such influence as would justify the House in throwing out any of the votes cast in any of these precincts. But even that evidence, we claim upon the part of the minority of the committee, is not of a character that should be considered by the House. When this case was before the House during the first session of this Congress, thirty days were given the contestee to cross-examine these witnesses upon whose evidence contestant predicated his claim, and ten days additional time was allowed for the contestant to put in his rebutting evidence. Instead of following the order of the House and taking the ten days that were allowed to rebut the testimony taken by Mr. Pirce, the contestant occupied that time in introducing original evidence upon new questions that were not presented in the first instance.

The testimony of this man Garland, who had charge of the men on the highways, is of this character, and if the House will enforce the well-known rules of law that pertain to matters of this kind the evidence of that man will be entirely excluded. Take that evidence out of the case, and there is nothing left on the question of intimidation. But there is a further point that I desire to call attention to, one which it seems to me completely rebuts the idea that any of the voters in this

Congressional district were intimidated or compelled to vote against their political convictions.

It appears from the proofs in the case that in the State of Rhode Island they vote for the Presidential electors upon one ticket and for member of Congress upon another. There is no claim that any undue influence was used in regard to the Presidential ticket. There is no claim that there was anything but a fair, free, and open ballot to every voter in that district, so far as the Presidential question was concerned. Now, when this notice of contest was served by Mr. Page upon the contestee, he selected six different voting precincts where he claimed that intimidation had taken place; namely, the townships of Johnston, South Kingston, Westerly, Scituate, Pawtucket, Foster, Warwick, and Burrillville. In these townships Mr. Pirce's vote was less, in almost every instance, than the vote cast for the Republican Presidential ticket. Take the township of Johnston. Mr. Blaine received in that township, according to the tabulated statement of the vote I now have before me, 486 votes; while Mr. Pirce, the Republican candidate for Congress, received only 450. Now if there were 486 Republican voters in that township, and Mr. Pirce received only 450 Republican votes, it does not look as though many Democrats who were employed in these mills and factories located in that township were coerced into voting for him. In South Kingston Mr. Blaine received 476 votes, Mr. Pirce 467; in Westerly, Mr. Blaine 569, Mr. Pirce 569; in Scituate, Mr. Blaine 328, Mr. Pirce 259; in Pawtucket, Mr. Blaine 1,589, Mr. Pirce 1,302; in Foster, Mr. Blaine 178, Mr. Pirce 161; in Warwick, Mr. Blaine 884, and Mr. Pirce 434; in Burrillville, Mr. Blaine 355, Mr. Pirce 342.

By this tabulated statement of the vote of these towns, it appears that Mr. Pirce ran behind his ticket 867 votes. What kind of intimidation is that which causes the person in whose favor it is exercised to lose 867 votes? In these same towns Mr. Page ran 31 votes ahead of Mr. Cleveland. Where, then, is the intimidation? There is no claim here that any intimidation was used to procure votes for the Republican Presidential ticket as against the Cleveland ticket. I repeat, and I desire to enforce the matter upon the attention of the members of this House, that this contestant who claims that voters were intimidated from voting for him, ran 31 votes ahead of the Cleveland Presidential ticket.

But the most of the intimidation that is claimed to have been used is charged to have occurred in the township of Warwick. In that township, as I have shown, Mr. Pirce ran 446 votes behind the Republican Presidential ticket; and to show that there is no force whatever in this charge of intimidation, I call attention to the fact that in this township President Cleveland received only 494 votes, while Mr. Page received 510. In the township of Burrillville, where it is claimed there was some intimidation, the evidence which was produced before the committee shows that if intimidation was used, it was in favor of the contestant.

There is another question to which I desire to call the attention of members of the House. If intimidation was used here, and if men were kept from voting in accordance with their political convictions, why has not the majority of the Committee on Elections shown to the House by their report the number of voters that were intimidated? In all this vast array of votes, why have not the committee produced some witness to say he voted against his political convictions because of a fear of offending the person in whose employ he was? Not a voter of this kind has been produced; but, on the contrary, the contestee in this case, during the time limited under the rules of the House, produced witness after witness to show that in none of those voting precincts was any intimidation whatever used, and that the men went to the ballot-boxes and deposited their votes in accordance with their political convictions and personal preferences.

Now, as to bribery, which has already been referred to by my colleague on the committee, I desire still further to call attention to the character of the evidence on that subject. I think the majority of the Election Committee agree that so far as Mr. Pirce is personally concerned his course has been honorable. There is no evidence, as I understand it, in which the majority of the committee place any credence which impugns the character or the conduct of contestee. The bribery, if there was any in this case, came from third parties entirely disconnected from the sitting member. Now, what is the character of that evidence? It is limited, as has been already stated, to ten persons whose testimony was taken. What is the character of their evidence? The first witness, whose evidence is incorporated in the report of the majority of the Committee on Elections, swears that he received two or three dollars for his vote. This is the testimony of a man who had lived in the voting precinct for a number of years, yet he claims he does not know from whom it was he received the money; he can not tell anything about it. Just so with each of these witnesses.

They are evidently ignorant men and unreliable witnesses. They are made to say in their ex parte depositions, presented on behalf of contestant, that they received money for voting for Mr. Pirce. There is a similarity in their language on the question of the receipt of money which is a little remarkable if we assume that the language was taken down as expressed by them severally. But it is explained by one of these witnesses in his cross-examination where he says in substance that he made certain statements in his previous examination under the direction of a man in the interest of contestant. The members of the House will bear in mind the fact that all of these witnesses who swear to the fact of receiving money for voting for contestee gave their evidence of such alleged bribery, not in the presence of contestee and his attorney, but purely ex parte. They did not understand the nature or character of their evidence, or, if they did, they are so utterly unreliable, as shown from their cross-examinations taken several months after their examination-in-chief under the order of this House, that no man's rights should be imperiled by their evidence. With the exception of two witnesses, namely, Wilcox and Jenks, they state in their cross-examinations that they received no money whatever for voting for Mr. Pirce, but that the two or three dollars received by them each was for payment for lost time.

For example, this question was asked Cyrus W. Eddy, one of these alleged bribed witnesses:

Q. Do you know of any person who voted at that election for Mr. Pirce contrary to his political convictions because of the use of money?
A. No, sir.

Question by counsel for contestant:

Do you now wish to be understood as swearing that the $3 you say you received on election day was paid you for your time as indicated by your answer to cross-question two?
A. Yes, sir.

Another alleged bribed witness, by the name of Johnson, testifies in substance the same as Eddy. And another, by the name of Carpenter, said:

I received $3 for coming down to town-meeting, as they called it. I have always been in the habit of being paid for coming down to town-meeting. I have always had to get some one to take my place when I came down.

And in answer to questions propounded by counsel for contestant the following appears in the evidence of this man Carpenter:

Q. If you had voted for Mr. Page at that election instead of for Mr. Pirce, would you have expected any money for voting or going to town-meeting, as you call it?
A. Yes, sir; I suppose they would have paid me for coming down.
Q. When you use the term "they," whom do you mean? Give the name.
A. Mr. Page, Democratic party.

These men are, some fishermen, others sailors, and some, I was about to remark, stevedores. At any rate, they are not men who seem to appreciate the honor of American citizenship. There was no bargain and sale with any of them, as I understand their testimony, that they should vote for Mr. Pirce. Just after they had exercised their right of elective franchise and their personal preferences, they insisted that they should be paid for their time, or lost day, as is shown by the testimony of Carpenter, to which I have just called the attention of the House. They did not vote differently from their political convictions and personal preferences.

Now, without stopping to argue the morale of these voters, I maintain that Mr. Pirce should not lose his right to a seat in this House on such evidence. In every instance but one these men affirm that they do not know the person who paid them or who furnished the money. I claim that it was the duty of contestant, that if he relied upon these witnesses, or any one of them, to establish his charge of bribery, that he should have followed up the charge of the use of money to some tangible person. How could contestee dispute such evidence? No man is named (with the one exception which I will refer to later on) as the briber. All Mr. Pirce could do was what he in fact did do, and that was to take the witness stand in his own behalf and show that he neither personally nor by an agent used any money to secure voters for himself at the election. Now, I have just stated that there was one exception as to these bribe-taking witnesses. That was a man by the name of Locke. He claimed that he received $3 for his vote and named the person from whom he received the money, and also named three other men whom he claimed were using money to secure votes for Mr. Pirce. This man Locke was squarely and fully contradicted by these four men whom he named and was placed in such a light by their testimony as to show him to be not only an unreliable witness, but a consummate scoundrel.

This was the only man who swore to having received money, who put himself in a position where his truthfulness could be tested, and he was impeached by the testimony of a class of witnesses whose frankness, candor, and intelligence commend them to the favorable consideration of the members of this House. But if these alleged purchased votes should be thrown out Mr. Pirce would still have a majority of all the votes cast at the election. It is true that Wilcox and Jinks tried to testify that a hundred or more men formed in line down at Atwood's barn and were paid for their votes. There are two objections to the testimony of these men. They refused, as the record shows, to respond to subpœnas of contestee and submit themselves to a cross-examination. That is enough, if the House is inclined to enforce the law to exclude their testimony from consideration. If they were honest witnesses they would not refuse to have their credibility tested by a cross-examination of the testimony they gave on behalf of contestant.

All lawyers know that the right of cross-examination is the safeguard of litigants' rights. It is regarded so sacred that the courts have uniformly held that a witness who refuses either on his own volition or under the direction of the party on whose behalf he testifies to submit to a cross-examination, shall have his testimony-in-chief excluded from any consideration. Again their evidence comes in such "questionable shape" that any man should hesitate to place any reliance upon their statements. They "think" and they "suppose" is about all there is to their evidence. If what they suppose were true a wealth of evidence could have been produced by contestant to substantiate it. The fact that contestant has left so important a matter to be established by such shadowy and unsatisfactory suppositions is evidence to my mind that there is no truth in his charge whatever. These so-called bribed witnesses are a "beggarly lot" at best—fit followers and associates of Sir John Falstaff.

I see the time allotted to me in the consideration of this case, by the House, has expired. If I believed that there was any truth in the charge of contestant of intimidation and bribery in this case I should vote to unseat the sitting member. But a careful examination of the evidence satisfies me that there is no truth in these charges and that this contest, so far as Mr. Page, the contestant, is concerned, is frivolous. Over 7,000 voters in this Congressional district in Rhode Island have expressed a preference for Mr. Pirce to represent them in this Congress. They constitute a majority of the voters at the election in question. We have no right to disregard their choice or to disfranchise them by depriving Mr. Pirce of his seat on the floor of this House, and I appeal to the members upon the other side of this House to lay aside party prejudice and sustain Mr. Pirce in his right to his seat by voting for the substitute resolution offered by the Republican members of the Election Committee.

Mr. PETTIBONE. Mr. Speaker, this case from the beginning seems to have embraced within itself a comedy of errors. In the first place we have seen that the party making the contest did not summon a witness until after the lapse of the ninety days within which he could take his testimony under the law of the land, which expressly declares that the testimony shall be taken within ninety days from the filing of the contestee's answer to the notice of contest.

Upon that subject one word and that will settle it. Mr. Page swears there was an arrangement made by which the taking of testimony should not be confined to the ninety days only which the law allows. The attorney for Mr. Pirce, under oath, states as follows:

I was fully aware of the limitation of time upon each party.

He knew as a lawyer that the testimony must be taken within ninety days. He knew Mr. Page was a lawyer. What did he do? He said, "I agreed, if it should happen during the taking of the testimony an engagement of either one of us in court should interfere with the day fixed for taking testimony in said contest, we would mutually accommodate each other." Then he swears "we never had but one conversation and that was the whole of it."

Now, sir, think of two lawyers, knowing the law was imperative that they must take the testimony in ninety days, of one going to the other in this way! Under those circumstances is it a likely story? Is it likely one said to the other "I agree, if we have engagements in court, we will fix on other days without regard to the ninety days?"

Is it likely he said that, when he knew at the same time they must take this testimony in ninety days? So they stand, the two stories face to face, both of the witnesses lawyers, neither impeached unless he impeaches the other, and I put it to the lawyers of this House that this man Page did not expect to figure up his election to Congress.

What next did the contestant do? We find Mr. Page, within that ninety days, running for the position of state senator in Rhode Island. He was elected to that position and took his seat. Then, when the session was over, and when he returned again to private life, he served notice to take testimony, after the ninety days had run out, on his notice of contest.

Will any gentleman deny this proposition?

Now, Mr. Pirce, knowing he could not be summoned under those circumstances, knowing that if this man was a member of the Legislature of Rhode Island he could not hold a seat upon this floor, he disregarded, as he had a right to do, this summons or notice to take testimony.

Then, the testimony having been taken—mere ex parte affidavits, I insist, as I did in committee—we should, if the majority of the committee insisted this case should be looked into, send a commission down to Rhode Island to take this testimony and bring the witnesses and parties face to face. But instead of that, Mr. Pirce was simply given the privilege to go to Rhode Island and cross-examine, as he did, such of contestant's witnesses as he could find.

Now, upon this subject of intimidation, before I proceed further, allow me to say that the majority of the committee in their report pushed that matter out from under the discussion. What do they say? The majority of the committee say in their report: "While it was likely that voters under the domination of Republican employers were deterred from voting for Mr. Page, there was no evidence before the committee defining the measure of this influence or estimating its effect." And so, sir, if there was no evidence, but mere suspicion, I take it we can dismiss that matter from this discussion.

Then what next do we have? The next point in this comedy of errors is this: A manifest error in printing, changing 9 into a cipher, deprived Mr. Pirce of his majority of 16. The majority of the committee say instead of 16 he only had a majority of 3 on the face of the return. But there was evidence before the committee which would have shown that mistake in the printing. What is it? The certificate is as follows:

I, Joshua A. Addeman, secretary of the State aforesaid, hereby certify.

And then it goes on to give the table upon which the majority in their report rely. What further does he say? "I certify." What? This is a true copy of so much of the tabulated statement of votes cast as relates to the second Congressional district of Rhode Island. He certifies it is a copy of the tabulated statement of the votes cast for Representative in the Forty-ninth Congress.

When we come to that tabulated statement, which is presented to us here in the testimony taken by Mr. Page, we find the figures are 70 instead of 79 for this town of Hopkinton. And this shows that Pirce's true majority was 16, as the grand committee in the tabulated statement declared and as is now admitted. And since the majority report shows the charge of intimidation is absurd, then the case is narrowed down to votes that can be thrown out by means of proof showing they had been bribed. If more than 16 votes can be shown to have been bribed votes, Mr. Pirce can rightfully be unseated; otherwise he can not be.

And that leads me to the next consideration. The majority of the committee have presented in their reports the names of ten persons, Charles C. Gardner, Alfred Johnson, Cyrus W. Eddy, Fayette W. Carpenter, William Wilcox, Jesse Jinks, William Bates, James E. Cahoone, John Garland, and H. S. Curtiss.

Their testimony is set out in hæc verba. But admit that all these were bribed—yet there are only ten. And six more will be required; and the names of those six are not forthcoming.

Let us examine some of these and see what they have to say and the character of their testimony. I take up the case first of this man Johnson. Johnson in his first examination, when he swears to that statement, which was really an ex parte affidavit, made this statement:

I voted for Mr. Pirce. I myself received $3 for voting for him; but I do not know the name of the person who paid me the money. I know him simply by sight. He said he belonged to the Republican party and was working in the interest of Mr. Pirce.

At another point in his testimony he says that this person, not named, at Atwood's Hotel gave him $3 for voting for Mr. Pirce. This same man, although he had lived for years and years in that town, was not able to tell who it was who gave it to him. Then this question was asked him:

To what political party do you belong?

He responds:

To the Democratic party.

Now, on cross-examination this same witness—and it shows what the result would have been if Mr. Pirce had had the privilege of going with a committee of this House to examine these men for the purpose of letting the light into the testimony which they had given theretofore on that cross-examination—says, in response to this question:

What did you say about this question of bribery in your testimony in July, 1885?

Ans. I said that I did not understand that I got the $3 for voting for Mr. Pirce, but for going down there.

Now we find that this man swears himself down. But let us go another step forward. The question is asked him if at any time within the last five years he ever voted the Democratic ticket in that town, and he answers:

I think not.

The intention was to make it appear that he had always been a Democrat, had not voted any other than the Democratic ticket within the last five years, but he was told when he went on the stand by some one to make that ex parte affidavit, that he must understand then that he had always been a Democrat, and when questioned he was to swear that he had been. But a little further the question is asked him:

What is the man's name that said this to you?

He answered:

James Brown.

Now another step. He was asked this question:

And you have voted for William A. Pirce, Republican candidate for Congress at that election, and only received that money for going to the election?

Ans. Yes, sir.

This man is one of a number who swore that if not a single one had been paid, they would have voted as they did. This is the man who was told that he must say that he had been always a Democrat, and yet it turned out that he had not voted that ticket in five years.

But now, Mr. Speaker, when we come to this man's testimony taken finally, we find the names of the persons who were really at Atwood's Hotel to have been William C. Jenkins, William Kinnecome, and Thomas Aldrich, men who are not impeached. These men came upon the stand and positively swore that they did not use any persuasion on that day, and did not pay any one to vote for anybody.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. EDEN in the chair). The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I should like to have had an opportunity of going a little further into this testimony.

Mr. HOPKINS. I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ELY].

Mr. ELY. Mr. Speaker, I presume it would be no secret for me to say that I, more than any other member of the Committee on Elections, am responsible for the fact that a majority report adverse to the sitting member in this case has come into this House. I desire, therefore, in the few moments given to me to state the reason why in the first place I conceded that this case deserved a further consideration, and, secondly, why it is that I am now heartily, sincerely, honestly, and conscientiously with the minority of the committee.

I believe, without a shadow of doubt, that Mr. Pirce ought to retain the seat which he has occupied during the greater part of this Congress with credit to himself. The ex parte evidence which was originally filed in this case, and to which reference has been so often made, brought to the attention of the Committee on Elections these facts—it did not prove them, it was largely hearsay, it was ex parte at the best. It was extorted from witnesses by direct questions which would disgrace any lawyer in the land.

But it did bring to the attention of the committee these allegations, that in ten individual cases men had been paid for voting at the election at which Mr. Pirce was elected a member of Congress. That, by hearsay testimony, from one hundred to one hundred and twenty-five men were marched into line at a barn and received money; that the sitting member paid a voter some time after he voted $2; that a manufacturer in one of these towns employing a large number of men stood behind the moderator at the town meeting and carefully watched and scrutinized the votes that every one of his men cast. These allegations, it is true, came to the Committee on Elections in ex parte affidavits. But, although not established by legal evidence, they charged, under the sanction of an oath, bribery and intimidation. No election procured by either can ever receive my countenance or support. Both are despicable. I know not which is the most so.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, I favored a measure by which these charges might be thoroughly investigated within the provisions of law. That measure was, after a fair debate, overruled by the House. With that decision I have no fault to find, and I submit with cheerfulness to the wisdom of the House. But the effect which I anticipated from that action of the House has transpired, and it is, I believe, because the majority report at that time was received and accepted, and the minority report rejected, that there is any doubt whatsoever concerning this case at the present time.

We begged for forty days for Mr. Pirce to take his testimony and only thirty were granted. With diligence and with activity he availed himself of the time that was given him and occupied it all to the very last day. What did he do? And I beg the attention of the House to these facts, because they bear very materially upon the question which you are to decide. He did what you or any member of this House would have done. He first took in hand this testimony in his own town and against him personally, in which he was charged with bribery; and I shall show you, if I have the time, that he refuted it and proved the witness to be one of the worst perjurers that ever walked the face of God's earth by an amount of testimony that was perfectly overwhelming. He then began to go around the district as rapidly as he could, and every witness that Mr. Page had produced, and on whose testimony he rested his case, fell before him, as the liar always must fall before the honest man when his testimony is scrutinized and exposed to the light of day.

Now, why was it that he did not refute the rest? Why was there one of these perjured witnesses that has not been proved to be perjured? It was simply and solely, I believe—I speak of material witnesses now, and not of the few in this record who testified to nothing except the color of these ballots and their opinion of its influence on the voters—it was simply and solely, I believe, because Mr. Pirce had not time within the order of the House to produce and examine the requisite witnesses.

This is an important consideration, and can not be lost sight of by any man who would decide this case impartially.

This result I clearly foresaw, and called to the attention of the House when the resolution authorizing Mr. Pirce to take testimony was before the House on the 4th of May last. In some remarks I then had the honor to make I said—

Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the House to the resolution offered by the majority of the committee. The objections to it are patent and grave. I claim that it is utterly unfair and unjust toward Mr. Pirce, the sitting member, and, in my judgment, it will, if adopted, defeat the ends of justice.

First, as to time. Under the law on the statute-book, a law which we have sanctioned this year by the adoption of an amendment to it, a law which has been on the statute-book for many years and is known to all the people of the land, a law which is just and reasonable and which provides an orderly method of conducting these contests, the contestee cross-examines the contestant's witnesses in contestant's forty days and then has forty days for taking his own testimony The resolution requires him to resubpœna and cross-examine contestant's witnesses and take any testimony he may desire in thirty days from the passage of the resolution. Suppose the resolution passes to-day, certainly Mr. Pirce acting with great diligence could not be expected to return to Rhode Island, secure a proper officer to take testimony, procure a subpœna and have it served on one of the witnesses before day after to-morrow. The witness must be served with the subpœna five days before the day on which his attendance is required Thus at the earliest seven days of the thirty are exhausted before a word of cross-examination can be taken. And this leaves no margin for any of the inevitable accidents and delays necessarily incident to legal proceedings. Of the twenty-three days remaining three at least are Sundays. He then has twenty days to cross-examine how many witnesses? Forty-six. And in the same time also to examine in chief his own witnesses and submit them to the cross-examination of Mr. Page.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the members on the other side of this House desire to deal justly with Mr. Pirce. You hold it practically in your hands to do with him as you will, but I believe you desire all the more on that account to be just to him. I desire to inquire if there is a lawyer in this House who says that this is a reasonable time for this great work. Now, what is the action of our friends of the majority of the committee when they come to deal with the contestant? I maintain and ask you, with all the emphasis of which I am capable, to aid me in maintaining that in this contest the contestant and contestee shall be placed on a par, although the one is in the minority and in your hands to do with as you like, while the other is in the majority. I ask, what is your action when you come to deal with the contestant? Do you restrict him at all? Oh, no. He is given the full statute time of ten days within which to put in his rebuttal. It is not fair, is it?

The sequel proves the correctness of the position I then took. A great wrong was done to Mr. Pirce. Unintentionally, I am sure, but nevertheless a great wrong. I then said that the resolution then pending would, if adopted, defeat the ends of justice. And now it is written on every page of this record in characters so plain that he who runs may read. It has defeated the ends of justice.

Again, the conduct of this case by the contestant must not be lost sight of by him who candidly desires to find the truth. Since the answer of the contestee was filed, every provision of law has been trampled down by Mr. Page. No one has escaped. Every statute of the United States has been set at naught by him. In the taking of his testimony he ignored all rules of evidence, rules so well established that every intelligent citizen is familiar with them, whether he be a lawyer or not. Indeed, the majority of the Committee on Elections admit it in their report. It is, indeed, true, as they say, "the illegal testimony is easily detected." They might with equal truth have added that it covers most of the testimony relied on by Mr. Page.

Mr. Speaker, it is not too much to say that the manner in which Mr. Page or his lawyer asked questions, and the form of his questions (all done in the absence of Mr. Pirce), led the witnesses to give wrong answers and frequently false answers. Let me give a single illustration—one of many that I might cite. Mr. Page attempts to prove intimidation in the town of Westerly, by showing, by oral testimony, the contents of a circular signed by the Rhode Island Granite Works and the Smith Granite Works and by somebody passed around to the employés of those corporations. He does not prove that; he can not produce one of the circulars. But he asked Mr. John J. Carney, one of his witnesses, this question: "Do you recollect whether these circulars contained language conveying the idea to the voters that it would be to the interest of the voter to vote in accordance with the request contained in the circular?" Mr. Carney answers, "Yes, sir; I believe it did." Mr. Thomas W. Legar, a leading man and prominent Democrat who has twice been the Democratic candidate for governor of Rhode Island, a witness called by Mr. Page, evidently referring to the same circular, says: "I saw a hand-bill which they said was circulated about the quarries, asking the voters to vote against the Democratic candidate for Congress, as it was for their (the owners') interest for them so to vote." Thus Mr. Carney was made, unintentionally, as I hope, by Mr. Page's leading question to give a false answer.

But, Mr. Speaker, these objections to the credibility of Mr. Page's witnesses, weighty as they are, are insignificant when compared with the serious and wicked proceeding to which it now becomes my duty to invite the attention of the House. In one instance, at least, one of Mr. Page's witnesses, a witness on whom the majority of the Committee on Elections rely, was instructed what he must swear to in order to make a case for Mr. Page, and he does swear to it; months afterward, though, he admits that it was false, and says, "I did, for a guy; I was led into it in the first place to swear to it." Who led the witness into telling a lie under oath? It was the man who came after him to give his testimony for Mr. Page. Now, I think comment is unnecessary, but I will say that when such corrupt practices as this are detected, and when the witnesses on whom the contestant relies to prove his case are men confessedly of corrupt character, I can not believe any one of them.

It is not safe, it is not reasonable, to place any reliance on their testimony. Let me make this point as clear as I can. It is both admitted and proved that the witnesses who testify to bribery are shamelessly corrupt and worthless. It is also clear that they are in intimate league, both offensive and defensive, with Mr. Page. He conjures with them at his own sweet will and pleasure. They come at his call. They remain away at his pleasure. They answer to suit his questions. They refuse to answer when the answer will injure his case or when the answer will disclose the means of refuting their testimony. At least one of them is instructed what he must testify in order to maintain Page's case; and he does swear to it, although it is false. All these witnesses were subject to the same influences. There is every reason to believe that they yielded to it.

Now, it is to be observed that it is the evidence given by such witnesses that is cited in the report of the majority of the Committee on Elections. All other testimony is rejected. Why was this done? I decline to answer this question; but I assert that it makes that report unreliable. All the evidence in a cause must be considered in order to find the truth. All the evidence must be weighed together.

As a fair statement of the whole case I will annex to my remarks the report submitted by the minority of the Committee on Elections. But I desire to call the attention of the House to the whole testimony in detail and from the record to determine the worth of each witness separately.

The charges, Mr. Speaker, are bribery and intimidation. I will begin with bribery, and in reviewing the testimony I will take first this John H. Powers, who says that Mr. Pirce paid him $2. He says he went to him three times. He told him he had already voted for him. The first time Mr. Pirce refused to give him any money. He went again. Mr. Pirce again refused. He went a third time and followed him out of doors, and after all that solicitation he said that Mr. Pirce gave him $2. Was that bribery? No, sir; but for the purposes of this argument admit that it was; we will not quibble about terms. If money was paid before or after voting or for the vote or for lost time, I will consent to the most unfavorable construction that can be put upon it.

But who was this John H. Powers? In the first place his testimony is contradicted by Martin Padien, a loom operator, not a manufacturer, but a laboring man; by Martin Winsor, a Democrat, but a Pirce man, a man who had been elected a member of the General Assembly of Rhode Island on the Democratic ticket; had also been an assessor of taxes, been appointed justice of the peace, and elected surveyor of highways, and to many other offices; all by Democratic votes, and he comes here and denies emphatically what this man Powers says.

Now, what is the character of this man Powers, as testified to by everybody in his neighborhood, men of the highest repute and of all occupations? It is declared that his character for truth is bad—some of them say the worst. That is the testimony of the following witnesses, all of them having known him for a series of years: By William A. Phillips, trial justice of the town; by Charles E. Lincoln, journalist, correspondent of the Providence Journal and Boston Herald; by William A. Carroll, Frank W. Moseley, and James Moan, policemen; by James Crowley, lamp-lighter; by Alfred Lake, who keeps a grocery store in the village; also by Thomas Owens, who keeps a grocery store; by Harlan A. Page, a real-estate broker and uncle of the contestant, and John Meadowcraft, foreman of the Providence Steam Engine Company.

Then, take another, Herbert B. Wood, who is another of Page's witnesses, and who is contradicted by Joseph H. Davis, by Walter S. Brownell, by Martin Padien, by William H. Arnold, by George F. A. Beane, by Frederick J. Walsh, and by William A. Pirce, the sitting member.

There are seven witnesses who contradict this man, and if they are to be believed then he has perjured himself.

Take Benjamin F. Evans, another one of these witnesses, who has been convicted of crime in the State of Rhode Island, and, as I understand from the conversation this morning, is now in jail either awaiting or serving out his sentence. He is contradicted by Frederick J. Walsh, Martin Winsor, and many other witnesses. Everything he swears to is contradicted by several witnesses, and his reputation for truth is declared to be bad by eight witnesses, reputable men, who have known him for years.

Michael F. Barry, to whom my friend from Pennsylvania alluded, is contradicted by four witnesses, and his reputation for truth and veracity is sworn to be bad—by how many witnesses do you think? By sixteen witnesses. Amos J. Wells is contradicted by three witnesses, William H. Taylor, Benjamin H. Pirce, and James M. Wright.

John F. Locke is contradicted by three witnesses on every point, and would have been contradicted by another only that the witness was sick. His reputation was not assailed by Mr. Pirce; but Mr. Page, in his rebuttal, seeing the necessity of bolstering up this readily-perceived and easily-detected liar, called witnesses to sustain his character, and every one of them admitted that it was questionable. One swore that it was bad, and not one of them was willing to come up to the mark and say that it was good.

Now, I ask gentlemen what we are to think of a case where there is such an array of witnesses whose reputation for truth is bad and who are contradicted upon every material point.

As to those witnessss who say they received money, their testimony has been discussed a good deal already, and my time is too limited to permit me to go over it in detail; but it is a fact that every one of them except one, or possibly two, declines to tell who gave him the money. They stab Mr. Pirce in the back and in the dark, and he is perfectly helpless to protect himself against them. In every instance where a party does give the name of the person who he says was paying out money, the person so accused was called, and every one swore that he never paid any money or saw any paid.

These witnesses were corrupt enough, if they are to be believed, to receive a bribe for their votes and shameless enough to confess it. They were, beyond doubt, under the control of the contestant and his friends. One of them was proved to be so far under this control as to give false testimony at the dictation of the man who summoned him to testify. Four of them refused to appear for cross-examination. Others refused to answer proper and reasonable questions on cross-examination. Another forgot his story between his direct and cross-examination. It ought to have been furnished to him in writing in the first instance. It is important also to remember, and, therefore, I repeat, that in every instance where the testimony of the contestant's witnesses made it possible it is contradicted and denied by Pirce's witness, and usually by more than one witness.

Now, who and what are Pirce's witnesses? They are honest, reputable men. Mr. Page does not deny or attempt to deny it. They testify fairly, intelligently. Their testimony bears the impress of truth. Some of them are Democrats and some Republicans.

Such, Mr. Speaker, is the testimony concerning bribery. I have striven to state it plainly and fairly. I challenge contradiction of the statement that I have made.

Mr. Speaker, I will now pass to the consideration of the charge of intimidation.

It was claimed by Mr. Page before the Committee on Elections that, the Republican ticket for Congressman being printed on a tinted paper, a shade off from white, and the other tickets used at the election being printed on white paper, all the votes cast for Mr. Pirce should be rejected as illegal, and that Mr. Page, although he was in an actual minority of 3,486 votes, should be declared elected by a majority of 4,260 votes. When I listened to the statement of this proposition and the elaborate argument of Mr. Page in support of it I thought that Shakespeare must have had a photograph of Mr. Page before him when he wrote:

> What a piece of work is man! How noble in reason! how infinite in faculties! in form and moving, how express and admirable! in action, how like an angel! in apprehension, how like a god!

To the ordinary mind this proposition would seem to be too absurd to deserve a moment's consideration. But it appears to have given my Democratic friends on the committee an infinite deal of trouble. They could not quite see their way clear to report that Page, who received 5,995 out of a poll of 15,476 votes, was elected. But they wrestled with this magnificent proposition for many months, even as Jacob wrestled with the angel, and at length it gave them its blessing. True enough, it was what may be called in the language of the majority report a "not improbable" blessing, but in the deplorable condition of the contestant's case anything was comforting. When there is no evidence to support a case, the "not improbable" is the last resort of the ingenious lawyer. Soberly, however, the majority of the committee admit that these tinted ballots are no violation of the law and that no decision of this case can be predicated on their use. The only wonder is that the majority of the committee found so much difficulty in reaching this conclusion. As a matter of fact, tinted ballots have been used for a long series of years in both the Rhode Island Congressional districts, and in this election the Republican committee only followed a well-established custom. Such tinted ballots were used to distinguish the representative from the electoral tickets and to avoid confusion, the voters in Rhode Island voting on separate ballots for Congressmen and for Presidential electors.

Having said thus much about the tinted tickets, Mr. Speaker, I will briefly discuss each case where anybody is claimed by the contestant to have been intimidated. First, it is claimed that one George Smith did not vote for Mr. Page because his employer, one William H. Poole, told him not to vote that ticket. This is testifiedc to by Byron W. Wells, Raymond A. Rathbun, and George N. Colville, jr. It is denied by George Smith and William H. Poole. All these witnesses stand equally well. Smith was still, when the testimony was taken, in the employ of Poole. I do not find that the contestant's witnesses were summoned for cross-examination. If the case turned on the failure of Smith to cast his vote, I should be of the opinion that it ought to be decided against Mr. Pirce. It is true that what occurred, as testified by contestant's witnesses, would not seem to be intimidation as intimidation is defined in the decisions of contested-election cases.

It is, indeed, only what one man might naturally say to another. Nevertheless, if these witnesses are to be believed, it had the effect of preventing the man's casting his vote as he intended to do. The employer should be extremely careful not to interfere with his employés at the polls, even in the slightest degree, and I am happy to know that in the section of the country where I reside, and I believe through the North, such is the case. No matter how poor or how dependent a man may be, he ought to be allowed to cast his vote without the slightest influence or interference from any person on whom he depends for his wages. On his continued employment depends the comfort, it may be, of a wife and children, and thoughts of them might change his vote at the nod of his employer, when he would act independently were he alone concerned. Entertaining these views, my judgment in a case of alleged intimidation would be governed by the effect of what the employer said rather than by any nicely drawn distinction of what is and what is not intimidation.

The next specific charge of intimidation is founded on the circulars in the town of Westerly, of which I have already spoken. These were simply hand-bills circulated before election day, asking the voters not to vote for the Democratic candidate for Congress, because it was for the interest of the owners of the granite works. I am sure that no member of this House would claim for a moment that this was intimidation. In Burrelle, Lawrence Pendergast and Edward V. Granger testify to specific acts of intimidation. Among other things Pendergast testifies that one Addison Sayles, a prominent manufacturer, mounted the platform directly behind the moderator, in order to obtain a position where he could distinctly see every ballot that was cast. Granger testifies that a strict count of the ballots, as they were deposited in the ballot-box, were kept by a prominent Republican, who was stationed on the platform with the moderator and town clerk.

The testimony of these witneses is contradicted and absolutely refuted by Oliver A. Inman, the moderator of the town meeting, A. L. Sayles, James O. Inman, and George F. Whitford.

Addison Sayles was not on the platform at all on election day.

No Republican kept a count of the ballots, but a prominent Democrat, John Q. Darling, was on the platform and kept a tally of the Democrats and Republicans as they voted. And I will say it was a perfectly proper thing to do, and Mr. Darling acted with entire fairness, and gave information to Republicans and Democrats alike as they inquired.

I am surprised to observe that the majority of the committee cite the testimony of John Garland, of Pawtucket, in their report. It is beyond all possible question incompetent, and ought to be stricken from the record. It is the last act of the many acts of injustice and wrong which Mr. Pirce has suffered in the contest. It was taken in rebuttal, but is in no sense rebuttal testimony. It was taken near the close of the rebutting testimony. Mr. Pirce had no opportunity to reply to it. Under the order of the House his time was exhausted. These facts are sufficient to show that Garland's testimony should not be considered.

In addition to the testimony to which I have called attention refuting every act of alleged intimidation, Mr. Pirce called forty-five witnesses, belonging to both political parties, Democrats and Republicans alike, men of high standing in their towns, all of whom swear that there was no intimidation. The testimony of these witnesses covered every town where any intimidation was claimed. Five of them testified as to Warwick, three as to Coventry, seven as to Lincoln, four as to Scituate, four as to Foster, four as to Pawtucket, four as to Burrillville, eleven as to Johnson, and three as to Westerly.

Mr. Speaker, I desire to repeat here and emphasize my statement, that while Mr. Page's material witnesses are proved to be men of corrupt habits and of bad reputation for truth in nearly every instance, Mr. Pirce's witnesses are men of good character and good repute. The record shows it. It has not and will not be disputed. And I desire also to emphasize the importance of this fact in the decision of this case.

Mr. Speaker, I have made this plain statement of the evidence because the question before us is a judicial one, and should be decided on the evidence presented and the rules of law applicable to the case.

If I be asked how could the majority of the Committee on Elections, if I have fairly stated the evidence, find that Mr. Pirce was not elected a member of the House, I reply that I do not know. I question no man's motives; I deny no man's judgment. I have a high respect for and appreciation of the honor and love of justice of the gentlemen of the committee who differ from me in this case. I can not, however, fail to remember with regret the shamefully partisan appeals that were made to the Democratic members of our committee by Mr. Page and his counsel. In my brief experience these appeals were as unprecedented as they were unbecoming. Mr. Page related, soberly and mournfully, almost tearfully, the story of the hardships and sufferings and trials of patience of the Democratic party of Rhode Island under the long continuance in power of the Republicans in that State, especially in the matter of the representation in Congress. He said he saw little reason to hope that any Rhode Island Democrat would occupy a seat in this House in the near future unless the committee would kindly report that he was elected.

But it at length became evident that Mr. Page had failed to comprehend the far-reaching consequences of the report which he sought with so much diligence. That was reserved for the learned counsel who made the closing argument in his behalf. That argument was ingenious and able, and, had it not been so foreign to the issue before the committee, would have been worthy of serious consideration. It dealt little with the charges of bribery and intimidation. Indeed it seemed to me to be largely in harmony with my views of those charges and of the character and weight of the contestant's evidence adduced in support of them. It was mainly devoted to a consideration of the effect which a decision in favor of Mr. Page would have in a certain contingency on the Presidential election of 1888.

The learned counsel claimed that the relative strength of the Democratic and Republican parties in this House in the Fiftieth Congress was such that in case no Presidential candidate received a majority of the votes of the electors appointed, Rhode Island, if her two Congressmen were Republicans, would control the choice of President in the House of Representatives; and he further claimed that a decision of the committee in favor of Mr. Page would do much to secure the choice of a Democrat in the Fiftieth Congress at the election yet to be held in the second district of Rhode Island, and thus neutralize the vote of that State in the House of Representatives. I have not verified the gentleman's facts. If they are true, they might properly be addressed to the voters of the second Rhode Island district, but certainly can have no weight in the decision of this contest. We are not here and now electing Presidents or Representatives, but determining whom the people elected in the district in controversy.

And now, Mr. Speaker, a few words in conclusion and I have done. If the resolution reported by a majority of the committee is adopted what will be its effect? Mr. Pirce, who has represented the second Rhode Island district during nearly the entire term of this Congress with credit and honor, who is respected, and deservedly respected, by his associates on this floor, will be deprived of his seat and the district be unrepresented probably during the remainder of the session. It will wound the sensibilities of a worthy man. Will that be all? If it be, it is of little moment. But it will be something more. It will add another to the long list of partisan contested-election decisions; and of all such decisions it will be the most pernicious in its influence on future cases of any that I now recollect. It will be a precedent for overriding every provision of the election laws, for trampling down every rule of evidence, for justifying every irregularity of proceeding, however gross or however flagrant. It will be cited by every wrong-doer, and grevious must be his wrong-doing if he does not find authority for it in this case.

'Twill be recorded for a precedent,
And many an error, by the same example,
Will rush into the state.

But I trust that this resolution will not be adopted, but that the resolution of the minority of the committee will be substituted for it. Then will our action this day be a warning to all parties in future cases that the laws of the land must be obeyed; that the well-recognized rules of evidence must be observed; that a stable and impartial course of procedure in contested elections must be maintained; and that he who would have the confidence of this House must deserve it.

Appended is the minority report.

Mr. ROWELL, from the Committee on Elections, submitted the following as the views of the minority:

The minority of the Committee on Elections not being able to agree with the report of the committee, submit the following as their views in the above case:

At the election held in the second Congressional district of Rhode Island, November 4, 1884, according to the canvass of the vote by the General Assembly, the total number of electors voting was 15,476, of which number William A. Pirce received 7,746, Charles H. Page, 5,995; and all others, including scattering, 1,735, Pirce receiving 1,751 over contestant and 16 majority of all votes polled.

This result was obtained after assigning to Page 15 votes cast for him as Presidential elector and counting as scattering all votes where no one was voted for for Representative to Congress, and 3 votes cast for Slocum for Presidential elector.

By a misprint in one part of the printed evidence Page is credited with 79 instead of 70 votes in the town of Hopkinton, which, without noting the misprint, would make it appear that Page had not been credited with as many votes as he received. By examining the returns as shown in the evidence the misprint is shown and the footings are correct.

February 5, 1885, contestant served notice of contest, which was duly answered by contestee.

Contestant bases his contest either upon a misconception of the law of Rhode Island, or upon a belief, which unfortunately prevails to a very wide extent, that a partisan majority only needs a plausible excuse to seat one of its friends.

He charges that all the ballots cast for Mr. Pirce were illegal because the tickets were not of plain white paper, without any distinguishing marks, and that therefore they are not to be counted either for Mr. Pirce or as having been cast at all; that they are to be considered as if never in the ballot-box, and this in the absence of any law of the State requiring any particular description of paper, or forbidding distinguishing marks.

Inasmuch as the committee have, without dissent, agreed that this claim is without foundation in law, we shall not further refer to it in this place.

The material allegations in the notice of contest were to the effect that contestee's majority was obtained by intimidation and bribery.

For a proper consideration of these charges, and the evidence relied upon to sustain them, it is necessary to state something of the history of the contest as it appears in the record.

After notice of contest and answer contestant allowed the time for taking testimony, as provided by statute, to expire without any movement to take testimony.

In the mean time he became a candidate for and was elected a member of the General Assembly of Rhode Island, and entered upon the duties of that office, a position which he could not lawfully hold in that State if he was at the same time a member of Congress. He thus abandoned the contest and ceased to be in a position to proceed in the case as a claimant for the seat of contestee.

Nevertheless, on the 12th day of June, 1885, after the time for taking testimony had expired, he served notice on contestee that on the 25th day of June he would commence taking the depositions of eight hundred and thirty-seven named witnesses, he alleging and contestee denying a verbal agreement to waive time in the taking of such depositions.

Contestee relying, as he had a right, and was bound to do, upon the statute governing the taking of such testimony, and the precedents established by the House in like cases, declined to have anything to do with the taking of depositions. Considering the nature of the testimony to be taken and the character of many of the witnesses to be examined, contestant pursued the course, whether designedly or not, best calculated to get what he wanted, without the serious damage which might occur from cross-examination. Contestant, however, proceeded to take the depositions of 45 out of the 837 witnesses named, and the same depositions were brought before the committee as the evidence upon which we were to decide the case and make recommendation to the House.

It is hardly necessary to say that these so-called depositions were no more than ex parte affidavits, and could not therefore be considered as legal evidence in the case without disregarding and ignoring well-established and undisputed rules of evidence.

They were not taken in the presence of contestee or any one acting for him, or with the expectation of cross-examination, or by virtue of any law authorizing them to be taken; and inasmuch as they were not taken in pursuance of any law authorizing them, or in a case then legally pending, it may well be doubted whether a charge of perjury could be maintained against any one of the witnesses willfully testifying falsely.

Instead of considering these ex parte affidavits as in the nature of information which might justify the House in entering upon an investigation, and requiring the evidence to be taken de novo, so that it might be entitled to the credit due to evidence lawfully taken, the House, upon the recommendation of the majority of the Elections Committee, simply authorize contestee to cross-examine the witnesses whose ex parte depositions were on file, and to take testimony in his own behalf, giving him thirty days in which to do so, and to contestant ten days in which to offer testimony in rebuttal.

When it is known that a large part of the so-called testimony was in the nature of hearsay, or opinions in cases where opinions are not allowable as evidence, and that the method of examining the witnesses, the way of putting questions so as to shape the answer, would not be tolerated in a court of justice, the necessity of applying strict rules in considering the evidence is made apparent.

Under permission of the House, given as above recited, contestee proceeded to cross-examine such of contestant's witnesses as answered to his subpœna and to examine witnesses in his own behalf.

Several of contestant's witnesses did not appear for cross-examination at all, although duly subpœnaed, and it is upon the testimony of some of these that the decision of the case is made to turn by the majority of the committee.

After contestee had occupied the full time allowed by the House—the resolution having passed May 4, and contestee closing his evidence June 3—contestant proceeded to take testimony, so-called, in rebuttal; but, instead of confining himself to the permission given, he proceeded to offer testimony in chief, cumulative testimony, and the like, all of which, though illegally taken and not entitled to consideration by the House, is brought into service by the majority as a basis for their recommendation, and to which we protest as violative of law, of the rights of contestee, and of the constituency which he represents, and as establishing new and dangerous precedents in contested-election cases. And, as a further reason for this protest, we call attention to the fact that on nearly every issue made there is a sharp conflict in the evidence, and to the further fact that the witnesses upon which the majority of the committee rely are self-stultified and some of them thoroughly impeached.

Under the laws of Rhode Island a majority, instead of plurality, is necessary to an election on first trial, and therefore, if under the evidence the House determines that sixteen votes cast for contestee were so cast illegally, then it is our duty to declare that there was no election, and the resolution offered by the majority of the committee ought to be passed; but if any less number than sixteen should be deducted, the resolution ought not to pass, as far as it affects contestee, and Mr. Pirce should be permitted to retain his seat.

Under any possible view of the testimony, if the laws in force in nearly all the States were applicable, he would be entitled to retain the seat which he now holds.

We now propose to examine some of the testimony, it being that relied upon to unseat contestee.

Nearly all of it applies to the election at the town of Warwick.

Alfred A. Johnson, the first of the bribery witnesses, says, in his original examination, according to the printed evidence (p. 26):

"I myself got $3 for voting for William A. Pirce, but I don't know the name of the person who paid me the money. He handed me a ticket, which was yellow in color, a Pirce ticket, and said: 'Vote that, and I will see you later.' I voted it, and after the polls were closed I saw him in the street, and he took me down to Atwood's hotel and gave me $3. He gave me those $3 for voting for Mr. Pirce."

He also testified that he belonged to the Democratic party, and had lived ten years in Warwick.

On cross-examination (page 6, Pirce's testimony) he says:

"I don't consider that I received the money for voting for Mr. Pirce."

He also testified that in his previous testimony he had said that he didn't understand that he got the money for voting for Mr. Pirce, but for coming down. He also testified that he would have voted for Mr. Pirce if he had got no money; that he had not voted the Democratic ticket for five years; that in ten years he had voted the Democratic ticket once or twice, perhaps four times, and that he had testified that he was a Democrat under instructions of the man who went after him as a witness. We submit that a witness who on his examination in chief swears to one thing and on cross-examination to the opposite, and who acknowledges that he knowingly swore falsely to a material fact, under instructions given by the agent of Mr. Page, is not a reliable witness by which to prove any fact, and that his testimony illustrates the great danger of giving any force to ex parte testimony in a case like this.

William Bates, the next Warwick bribery witness (p. 27), testifies that he was paid $3 to induce him to vote for William A. Pirce. He did not know the person who paid him. He was thirty-seven years old, and had always lived in Warwick. Did not know who the Democratic candidate for Congress was, and does not say to what political party he belonged or how he would have voted if no money had been paid. He said:

"This person whom I have mentioned came to me and asked me if I had voted. I told him I had not. He gave me a yellow Pirce ticket and said: 'You vote that and I will see you later.' I voted that ticket. I then came out, and, as I was getting into my team, he handed me $3."

This witness was subpœnaed for cross-examination, but failed to answer, and therefore his testimony ought not to be considered. Even in his ex parte statements, following so near the language of the former witness, "yellow Pirce ticket" and "I will see you later," he does not pretend that he was promised money before he voted, and he discloses that he did not expect to receive money; for, having voted, he started for his team to go home.

The minority of the committee entirely disregard this testimony as not being properly in the case.

Frank D. Morse is the next Warwick witness who parades his own infamy in the interest of Mr. Page and purity of elections. He says (page 28):

"I do know that money was paid to me for voting for Mr. Pirce. I don't know the person's name who paid me. I was paid $3 for my vote. He handed me a Pirce ticket and said, 'I will see you later, down at Atwood's Hotel.'"

He had lived in Warwick since 1877; did not know who the Democratic candidate for Congress was; don't say what political party he belonged to, nor does he claim that any money was promised him before voting or to induce him to vote contrary to his political affiliations—we hesitate to say convictions.

He also refused to respond to subpœna for cross-examination.

We disregard his testimony, as not being properly evidence in the case, for the same reason as in the case of the previous witness.

Cyrus W. Eddy testifies (p. 29) as the next Warwick witness.

He says that he voted as he pleased; that there was no interference before he voted, and that he did not cast his vote for money.

He claims to have received $3, and that he always took it to be granted that they paid money to the working classes.

He lived in Warwick thirteen years; did not know the man who paid him.

He swears that he did not understand when he voted for Pirce that he would receive money for so voting which he would not receive if he voted for Mr. Page.

On cross-examination he says he was not paid to vote for Mr. Pirce. Don't know anybody who was induced to vote for money; that the money paid was for his lost time in coming 5 miles to the voting place and losing his day. Taking his testimony as truth, and the vote should not be thrown out.

Fayette W. Carpenter testifies (page 31) that he had lived in Warwick eight years; that he received $3 for voting for Mr. Pirce; that he had always voted the Democratic ticket, and would have voted that ticket at this election if money had not been used. All this when no one was present to cross-examine.

When called by contestee for cross-examination (pp. 5 and 6) he says that for the last two or three years he had voted with the Collingwood party, otherwise the Republican party, of the town of Warwick. He denies that he sold his vote, and swears that he was paid for his lost time, as he always had to get some one to take his place when he came down, and that he would have expected payment for his lost time if he had voted for Mr. Page.

The testimony of this witness again illustrates the unreliability of testimony taken without opportunity to cross-examine. It also proves, if the testimony of such a witness can prove anything, that his vote was not influenced by money, and that he simply voted, as had been his custom, the Republican ticket. In considering it at all we are called upon to believe a self-confessed perjurer.

William Wilcox (p. 37), a Warwick fisherman, states that after he voted he received $3 for voting the Pirce ticket. That at the time he voted he did not expect to receive any money for voting the Pirce ticket which he would not have received had he voted the Page ticket. He declines to tell who paid him, but says there were probably a hundred voters waiting for money.

He declines to appear for cross-examination upon the subpœna of Mr. Pirce; but after contestee had closed his evidence and the time for taking testimony on his behalf had expired, contestant put him again upon the witness stand.

To the question whether Kennecomb paid any money, he declined to answer; declines to give the name of the man who paid him. He also declines to say that he knows of any other persons who received any money, but says there were a hundred or more waiting round, and that he supposed they were waiting for money.

The refusal of this witness to appear for cross-examination, and so prevent an examination into his credibility as a witness; his refusal to give the name of the person who paid him, as he alleged, and so furnish an opportunity for contradiction; his refusal to say whether or not the man was Kinnecomb, after Kinnecomb had testified that he used no money, should in law rule out his whole testimony, and even if it is to be considered at all, it goes no further than that after he had voted he received money which had not been promised him and which was not an inducement which made him vote for Pirce. He was presumably a Republican, and would have voted for Mr. Pirce in any event, unless the claim of contestant, that all the purchasable votes in that district were Democrats, is to be conceded.

The next Warwick witness is another fisherman, named Jesse Jinks. He testified (p. 37) on original examination that he was paid $3, but does not say whether it was paid as an inducement to vote for Mr. Pirce or in consideration of his having so voted after the vote was cast. He says that he was a Democrat, and also says a hundred people were paid the same as he was.

He refused to appear for cross-examination and so prevented contestee from examining into his credibility as a witness.

He was called by contestant, in rebuttal, at which time he again declined to disclose the name of the person who paid him; expressly refused to say that Kennecomb was the man; could not give the names of any of the hundred who received money, and so again shut himself out from a test of his truthfulness; and, finally, declines to testify any further than that he himself received the money. These facts, in law, exclude this testimony from consideration, for testimony so taken is not considered as furnishing any evidence of the facts sought to be established by it.

John F. Lock, the last of the Warwick bribery witnesses, testifies (p. 38):

"Samuel Jencks was paying $3 apiece to voters for voting the Pirce ticket; William Kennecomb was also paying $3 for the same purpose; Thomas Aldrich was paying $3 for the purpose; Henry Northup was paying $3 for the same purpose."

This witness also declines to respond to subpœna for cross-examination, and for that reason his testimony should not be considered. His reason for such refusal may be readily found in the testimony of Jencks, Kennecomb, and Aldrich.

Of the nine Warwick bribery witnesses he alone ventures to name the bribers, he himself not being one of the bribed, and that venture shows him to be less discreet than the others. It also shows him to be equally untruthful.

It furnishes opportunity to show by unimpeached testimony how little reliance should be based upon any of the Warwick evidence, so called.

Thomas Aldrich (p. 9), Samuel C. Jencks (10), and William Kennecomb (10), each directly and emphatically contradict Lock, deny that they used money at the election, or that they had any knowledge that money was so used. Sickness alone prevented Northop from adding his testimony.

This effectively disposes of Lock (he had already discredited himself by refusing to be cross-examined), and, if more were needed, disposes also of the other Warwick bribery witness.

An attempt was made to sustain Lock by showing that his reputation for truth was good, but the attempt was very lame. John E. Sherman (page 84 of rebuttal) testifies that he heard various persons express opinions against his reputation for truth, showing that this chief witness for contestant had so conducted himself as to set people to talking about his unreliability as a witness.

An attempt to impeach Kennecomb was hastily abandoned when the first witness called for that purpose spoke in his praise.

Taking these Warwick witnesses at their own estimate of themselves, and who can say, as against unimpeached witnesses who do not sell their own votes or buy others, even if their testimony, so called, can be considered at all by the House, that he believes, by a preponderance of the evidence, that any money was used to bribe voters at the Warwick polls?

We can not believe that a seat in this House is held by such a slender tenure; that testimony of this character can destroy the right of Mr. Pirce to retain it.

Even allowing that each of these eight witnesses were bribed, it leaves contestee's majority at eight over all.

The only other voter who claims to have been bribed is the witness Mardle, who voted at Foster.

The attempt to show intimidation at Johnson, the home of contestee, and other polls, is so signally overthrown, and the charges so effectually disproved, that we shall make no comment upon the evidence in regard to it at this time.

The claim that a voter returned and voted for Congressman after he had voted for Presidential electors is thoroughly refuted, and the circumstances explained by the moderator and clerk.

The claim that George Smith was intimidated, and so prevented from voting by his employer, is contradicted by Smith himself.

The attempt to show that one Davis was bribed by the promise of half a barrel of flour, by hearsay testimony, was a signal failure and thoroughly disproved.

The claim that a number of voters at Pawtucket were intimidated by their employer, the overseer of highways, amounts only to a complaint that the voters allowed themselves to be influenced by the wishes of the overseer, expressed only by a simple request that the men should vote as he did.

This claim would overthrow, if allowed, all labor to secure votes for one party or another.

If one may not ask a voter to vote his ticket, he may not make a political speech, publish a political newspaper, or dare to express an opinion in the presence of voters.

We do not comment upon the so-called rebuttal testimony which sought to open anew the bribery issue at the Foster polls, and which went to the extent of showing attempts to bribe, which failed—testimony given after the opportunity to call the parties accused of having attempted the bribery had passed—because if there is any one question settled in the law of evidence it is that the party having the affirmative of an issue must put in all his affirmative testimony, direct and cumulative, before calling upon the opposing party to answer. And we know of no honest reason why a different rule should apply in this case.

We are not without record evidence to sustain the views we here take of the bribery evidence, record evidence which is absolute verity, and not dependent upon the truthfulness of witnesses, and that evidence is to be found in the election returns. It will be noticed that the charged attempt at bribery and intimidation was in the interest of Mr. Pirce, and not in the interest of the Republican Presidential ticket. It was a claimed attempt to bribe Democrats to vote for Mr. Pirce while they at the same time voted the Democratic Presidential ticket, and yet in the towns where bribery is charged Pirce ran behind and Page ahead of his ticket. In this very town of Warwick Mr. Pirce ran over 400 behind his ticket, the Prohibition candidate getting most of the vote, while Page runs 16 ahead of his ticket.

In the town of Foster Pirce runs 17 behind and Page 4 ahead of his ticket, and in Burrillville Mr. Pirce runs 13 behind and Mr. Page 11 ahead.

These facts tend to show that if undue influence was used it was not on the side here charged with it.

In conclusion, admitting as we do that there is some evidence proper to be considered in the case tending to show the alleged use of money at the election held in the second Rhode Island Congressional district, yet taking it for all it is worth as evidence, considered with the evidence in disproof, and throw out every vote that can by any fair testimony be said to have been improperly influenced, and there is still a clear majority left for the sitting member for that district.

We therefore can not concur in the report of the majority, and offer the following as a substitute for the second clause of the resolution offered by the committee:

"Resolved, That William A. Pirce was elected a Representative to Congress for the second Congressional district of Rhode Island at the election held November 4, 1884, and is entitled to retain his seat."

J. H. ROWELL.
SERENO E. PAYNE.
A. J. HOPKINS.
FREDERICK D. ELY.
A. H. PETTIBONE.
GEO. W. E. DORSEY.

Mr. ROWELL. The residue of the time of my colleague [Mr. HOPKINS] and myself is yielded to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE].

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, what a supreme farce! We have an election law, a law regulating the proceedings in contested-election cases. The chairman of the Committee on Elections, after many years of service and experience on that committee, himself introduced, during the present Congress, a bill to enlarge the scope of that statute. That bill, having passed the House, has been returned from the Senate with amendments; and this morning, at an earlier stage of our proceedings, the Speaker appointed a committee of conference to further perfect that bill.

At the same time, members of the House sitting as judges and jurors are called upon to pass on a case in which every requirement of the law in regard to contested elections has been disregarded and violated by the House. Upon a question involving the right to a seat you are asked to rest your votes on evidence taken, so far as concerns every word of it bearing materially upon the case, in direct violation of the law upon your statute-book. What is the use of the law, what is the use of perfecting it, if still, by reason of party exigency or on some other ground, the letter and the spirit of the law are to be disregarded?

In this case, after the expiration of the statutory time, and when the contestant had seemingly abandoned his contest, he is permitted to go on and take ex parte affidavits and depositions and to come into the House and ask for a contest upon them; and then the House, disregarding rules of law as ancient as the English language, receives these same depositions, refusing the contestee the privilege of confronting the witnesses—witnesses who make the charge of bribery, personal bribery, against himself. He is simply given the poor privilege of thirty days within which to go out and rake up the byways and hedges of his district, ay, to go into the fishing-smacks upon his coast and find these witnesses, who, from the evidence, appear to be the very dregs and scum of the district, to bring them before a magistrate (without power to compel them to come) for the purpose of cross-examination. And when he is unable to find or produce some of the witnesses, our friends on the other side do not seem to be very anxious to strike these ex parte depositions from the evidence, but still insist, founding their case upon such evidence, that the sitting member shall be driven from this House.

Still, Mr. Speaker, taking the case upon evidence brought here in this manner, I confidently maintain this House should vote that the contestee retain his seat. Remember, gentleman, that only four out of the three hundred and twenty-five members of this House come from States where it is required that the successful candidate for Congress shall have a majority of all the votes cast. Mr. Pirce comes here with 1,700 plurality over the contestant, Mr. Page, but with 16 majority over all other candidates who were in the field.

"Over all other candidates in the field," did I say? Yes; and over all the tickets that were cast with the heading "for Congress" on them, and the name of the candidate a blank—a majority of 16 over all these. In view of those facts the evidence should be carefully weighed, and unless the proof is clear and incontrovertible this House ought not to disfranchise the second district of Rhode Island.

Now, I know there are many men in this House who are disposed to follow the judgment of the distinguished chairman of this committee without examining into the facts and the law for themselves. I myself respect his judgment. I myself think that sometimes he is a safe man to follow. But no man, when by the Constitution he is elevated to the dignified position of judge of the election or qualifications of a Representative of a State, should commit his conscience to the keeping of any other man, no matter how eminent. And the danger of doing so is illustrated in this very case; for it appears that after carefully drawing up this report, after carefully reviewing the evidence, the chairman of the committee came into the House with a report alleging that Mr. Pirce had but 3 majority over all competitors, when, from the evidence in the case, and from the admission to-day of the chairman of the committee himself, it appears that Mr. Pirce had a majority of 16 over all opposing candidates; and this fact is now undisputed. Think of that as you shall listen to the eloquent chairman of the committee, and examine his statements to see whether he is not honestly mistaken as to some of his facts; and in such a case as this, where a Representative is required to have a majority of all the votes, do not vote to disfranchise that district and turn that man out of his seat unless the allegation of bribery and intimidation is supported by incontestable evidence, evidence which establishes the charge beyond reasonable doubt.

What is the evidence of intimidation? The only allegation of intimidation which is contained in the notice of contest is that the Republicans used a different colored ticket, and that this was a menace to the voter. Not that any employer asked his employés improperly to vote the Republican ticket; not that there was any intimidation by any person in Rhode Island, but that the colored ticket was the intimidation. Members of the House have seen these tickets. There is a straw-colored ticket [exhibiting ticket] which is said to have frightened so many voters, or is supposed to have frightened so many, for no man swears that a single timid voter in Rhode Island was frightened by it. There is the straw-colored ticket. Here is the Democratic ticket. Why did they put the American eagle at the head of each Democratic ticket.

Mr. BOYLE. Because it is a Democratic bird.

Mr. PAYNE. Can it be possible that our Democratic friends wanted their tickets to stand out distinguished from the others, so that all persons could see which ticket their men voted? Can it be possible that the Democrats in Rhode Island were guilty of "intimidation?" What is the use of the eagle? The use of the straw-colored ticket is plainly shown by the evidence in this case; and it is this:

Under the Rhode Island election laws there is but one ballot-box, and it is a large one, so large that standing on a table it stood up nearly 6 feet high. In one of the balloting places it was the complaint they had to reach over that ballot-box to get their votes in.

Another law requires the electoral ticket and Congressional ticket shall go into one box. The law is directory that the voters shall deposit the ballot in the box. The law also says the inspector of election shall examine the ballot sufficiently to see that two of a kind do not get into the box; or, in other words, that no voter shall be permitted to vote twice for member of Congress, waiving his right to vote the electoral ticket.

Now tell me, with that provision of law, how any inspector performing his duty could examine those two tickets sufficiently to see one was Congressional and one the electoral ticket without knowing that the man voted the Democratic ticket, both the electoral and the Congressional ticket?

Will my friend claim there is any intimidation on the part of the Democrats about this? Why, they have "wiped" it out of their report, because if they had gone to that extent they would have reversed the will of the people in the second Congressional district, and returned to the seat Mr. Page as well as turn Mr. Pirce out.

Another provision of the law right there: The Secretary of State is required to furnish at each polling place a sufficient quantity of envelopes, uniform in size and color, in which the voter may place his two tickets, seal his envelope, and vote as secretly as any man can anywhere in this broad land.

And there is no complaint that envelopes were not furnished. The evidence is many voters used them and that there was no complaint. There is no evidence but that every voter could have used them and voted a secret ballot if he so desired.

What other evidence of intimidation is there? After the House had granted twenty days to Mr. Pirce to cross-examine witnesses and call his own, then it gave ten days to Mr. Page in rebuttal. On those ten days, and I think the last, he called some overseer of highways who said he was a Republican in 1884 and voted the Republican ticket. He said he had from thirty to fifty men under him, that some were Democrats, he thinks the majority of them were. He asked them to vote the Republican ticket, and he thinks the most of them did. This is put into the majority report as evidence of intimidation.

I heard some gentlemen ask in horror, "Why were these manufacturers at the polls?" Has it come to this, that a man who employs men has not the right to ask his employés to vote with him—that a father has not the right to ask his son to vote with him? Is that intimidation? Will that affect a seat in Congress? Well, when that time comes the electoral system will indeed prove a farce.

This overseer asked them to vote the Republican ticket, and he thinks they did. Then he goes on to say he discharged some men. He denies it was for that cause. He says he was himself discharged since 1884, and became a Democrat. That is about the measure of that man.

I tried to get my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOYLE] to name the sixteen men whom he said were guilty of taking bribes. If that were true it would turn the result of the election; but it is not true. There were not sixteen men—there were but twelve that he could name; and of the voters who spoke of bribery one does not admit he was bribed.

Mr. BOYLE rose.

Mr. PAYNE. I can not yield at this time. Out of these twelve men who spoke directly about bribery, John H. Powers came in with the statement that he had received $2 from the sitting member, Major Pirce.

I understood the gentleman to say also that some witness swore he saw the money paid. There is no such evidence. There is a witness who swears that he put up a job on Mr. Pirce and got this man Powers to go and get the money; that Powers went out of the building and returned with a two-dollar bill, which he said he got from Major Pirce; but that evidence is so completely wiped out by contradictory testimony, by the evidence of witnesses, including Major Pirce, who denies that he paid Powers any money, and by a cloud of witnesses called into the case, all of which show that the man's character is such that he is not to be believed anywhere, as well as the man who seeks to sustain him by saying that he had gone out and returned with the two-dollar bill. So completely is the evidence wiped out that the chairman of the committee did not see fit to give it a place in his report.

There are some other witnesses of the eleven left who speak of bribery in connection with this election, and then say that they were paid money to vote, but afterward, that they were not paid for voting. Their testimony is so contradictory as not to be worthy of credence.

One swears that when he went on the stand some man suggested that he must swear he was a Democrat, and he did so; and afterward, when he was called by Mr. Pirce, he said he was not a Democrat, but a Republican.

He testified that he swore in his former evidence that he was a Democrat, as he says, for a "guy." From this evidence the House is asked to send Mr. Pirce home again, to declare the seat vacant here, and leave that district of the State of Rhode Island unrepresented during the remainder of this Congress. But, Mr. Speaker, how about the one hundred or one hundred and twenty-five voters in Warwick who are said to have been paid?

Let me turn to the evidence in regard to them. Only two witnesses speak of it, if I have read the evidence correctly, and I think I have examined it carefully; that is to say, William Wilcox and Jesse Jinks.

Mr. ROWELL. And they are the only two.

Mr. PAYNE. They are the only two I can find. If any other gentleman can find others he has been more successful than myself.

Wilcox testifies on page 37 of this testimony as follows:

8 Q. State how and by whom the money was paid to you. Give the particulars.

A. I don't wish to give the name of the gentleman who paid me the money at present. It was paid in Atwood's Hotel, in Warwick, Kent County, Rhode Island; there were probably a hundred voters there waiting for money. This gentleman whom I have spoken of, and whose name I do not wish to give, paid the money in greenbacks right out of his own pocket.

9. Q. Do you know if there were any voters paid at Atwood's Hotel who had voted for Mr. Page?

A. No, sir; there was no money paid there for Mr. Page; I do not know a man who got a dollar there for voting for Mr. Page.

10. Q. In whose interest and for whose election as Representative was the person who paid the money as you have stated working?

A. In the interest of Mr. Pirce; John H. Collingwood was the managing man for Mr. Pirce at that election in Warwick.

11. Q. How came you to go down to Atwood's Hotel and join the crowd of voters, as you have stated?

A. I was called there to get my pay for voting.

12. Q. When did you first understand that you would receive some money if you voted the Pirce ticket?

A. Soon after the polls were open—probably twenty minutes.

13. Q. From your knowledge and observation, about how many voters were paid for voting for William A. Pirce at that election in the town of Warwick?

A. In our district, which is the first voting district in the town of Warwick, there were probably from a hundred to a hundred and twenty-five.

Mr. Pirce tried to get him for cross-examination. He had not given the name of the man who gave the money; but not only that, not only did he not give the name, but he failed to give the name of one single person of the one hundred or one hundred and twenty-five that he said were probably paid in the same way. What chance, then, was there to contradict a witness like this; what chance to meet such evidence as that? It was taken ex parte without the presence of Major Pirce, and the witness refused to come up for cross-examination. But he was under the control of Mr. Page in this case, and on page 75 of the new evidence this man was called again, and I wish I had time to read his testimony in full. He says:

I saw a number, perhaps a hundred or a hundred and twenty-five in all, then waiting in and about Atwood's Hotel for their $3, I supposed.

Here he is not so definite; he "supposed" they were waiting.

They talked to me, some of them did, in regard to their pay for voting.

That is his evidence, and you are asked to say a hundred men were paid for voting on such evidence as that. Why if such testimony were before a jury what weight would it have? If such a statement were true you would not have to go to any distance to get substantial men to verify it. It would be easy to get fifty men to swear to it. You could get the testimony of reputable, indignant citizens to say that a hundred men were bought up like chattels on election day at Warwick, instead of having to get such testimony as this on which to base the allegation. He does not undertake to name the man who paid the money, or any of the hundred who he "supposed" were waiting for it.

Well, there is another witness, Jesse Jinks, and he also testified on ex parte examination; and I repeat that if it were true that a hundred men had been bribed to vote in an election like that, it would not have been necessary to go out and get men off the fishing smacks to testify in support of such an allegation. What does Jesse Jinks say, the companion of William Wilcox? He says, in answer to a question on direct examination:

Q. How much did you receive, and where, when, and from whom? State the particulars.

A. I got $3; I received it at the office in the barn of Atwood's Hotel that night after the polls closed. I am unwilling to state the name of the person who paid it.

How happens it that these men are unwilling or unable to state who paid the money? Why do they not state who paid them? Who instructed them to say it? He goes on to say:

A number of voters went up there with me. All these voters that went with me voted for Pirce. I probably saw a hundred people paid the same amount that I got. This person I have spoken of had a list of our names, called them off, and we answered them, and as we went up he paid us the money out of his pocket.

And then he refused to come for cross-examination. He is brought in on the rebuttal by the contestant in this case; he is asked to repeat the evidence he gave a few months before, and all the evidence he could repeat was that he himself had sold his vote for $3. He had forgotten the story about the one hundred or one hundred and twenty-five persons. Notwithstanding that, the question was asked him:

What did you testify to? "Oh, I can not tell unless you ask me the question; unless you suggest it to me I can not tell."

He had forgotten this part of the story.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. TURNER. How much time remains to this side?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. One hour and twenty-five minutes.

Mr. TURNER. I now ask the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. Pirce], the sitting member, whether he desires to be heard in this case.

Mr. PIRCE. I would like to have fifteen or twenty minutes.

Mr. TURNER. I yield the gentleman that time out of the hour and twenty-five minutes.

Mr. PIRCE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman, the chairman of the committee, for the courtesy he has extended in yielding me time. I do not propose to enter into any general debate, as the minority members of the committee have submitted very effectually almost all of the facts which have been educed by the evidence. But being the contestee, and having lived in Rhode Island all my life, and having had a good deal to do with the politics of the State, I feel it my duty to vindicate the people of the second district of Rhode Island who elected me, by showing that the statements of those who oppose my election are not correct. I would not be true to the fame and good name of the freemen of Rhode Island if I did not repel as untrue and unproved the charge that the honest voters of the second district had been guilty of bribery and intimidation as charged by the dominant party of the committee.

As long as I have been connected with the politics of Rhode Island and as familiar as I am with the leading men of both sides this is the first time I ever had friend or foe in politics complaining of any wrong or unfair dealing on my part. The witnesses in this case on the other side in behalf of the contestant are men generally speaking, I am sorry to say, that would not stand the test of inspection for one moment. And I will say that the leaders of the Democratic party in Rhode Island are ashamed of this contest and ashamed of the contestant for pursuing it. For they are a gallant set of men as a rule, and when they get beaten they do not travel the State and country over, squealing it was done this way or that way or the other way; but they accept the results, pick their flints, and are ready to try again at the next opportunity.

Some of these witnesses are an abhorrence to the community. Gentlemen on the other side know it; it is in the evidence. And I was embarrassed this morning when the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOYLE], who is instinctively fair and honest, attempted to warp the testimony as he did; but I attribute it to an error or misunderstanding, rather than to an intention to do anything wrong in this matter. I am sure he never saw the evidence, or he, as an honest man, could never have made such statements.

Now as to Evans. The testimony in the case shows he had been convicted as a libeler, that he went to jail as a libeler, that he was a common nuisance in that community. And so it is along the whole line. I have not time to submit here, although I have my pocket full of them, certificates as to the jail-birds that are in this contest on behalf of the contestant. They are in duress and jail for all kinds of offenses. It is shown by a court certificate that one of these men has been convicted of the crime of cheating the babies, of selling adulterated milk; another of wife-beating; and still another swears he was in jail and all that for five months for keeping a nuisance, and others for drunkenness and all that class of offenses. As the gentlemen of the committee know well, I was anxious to have this House take this investigation in charge and send a commission to inquire into this case to Rhode Island, where they could have an opportunity of seeing the parties and looking at the witnesses who would grace any rogues' gallery in this country to a greater extent than any I know to exist.

Why, sir, if I could not conduct a political canvass fairly and squarely with all my experience I would retire from it, and I would retire from this seat voluntarily if I believed a single friend of mine had used anything but the best possible legal means to influence a vote in my favor. I was not, during the whole canvass, in the town of Warwick, nor since, except to take testimony. This is the town which has been so much spoken of by gentlemen on the other side, and I mean to say all the witnesses in the case that swear at all in respect to receiving money for anything, for votes, or hiring carriages to take voters to the polls, or for paying for their time while they were away from their work, only amount to twelve votes—all of them, of every kind, name, and nature. I challenge contradiction by the gentleman who is to follow me, when I assert that only twelve are connected in any way with money. And I state that not one of those witnesses, as you will see, alleges he was bribed or that his vote was influenced by money, with the exception of one single person, and his testimony is of so ghastly a character that no man could take any stock in it. He swears that he was a Republican, had always voted the Republican ticket, but being very poor he would have voted for Page on that occasion if he had not received $2.

Now you gentlemen coming from all parts of the country can judge the value of that kind of testimony, and if you can afford on such testimony to declare vacant a seat in this House which the General Assembly has declared I have obtained by 16 majority, if you think you can, you will and can do so of course. I say one thing more. If there is any member of this House who will get up here and say that he never has expended one cent of money in his district for legitimate purposes I would like to have that man rise. For in Rhode Island if a man would decline to contribute a dollar for legitimate purposes in politics I do not know of any party, Democratic or Republican, that would desire to put such a man in nomination, or have any respect for him.

Why, sir, our whole expenses in the Presidential election in 1884, every dollar that passed through the hands of the committee for all the purposes of the election, buying and distributing documents, purchasing flags, the general election expenses was less than $4,000 for the whole State of Rhode Island.

Now, as to this charge of intimidation, I am assuming that some of the members of this House outside of the Committee on Elections have looked at the evidence in this case; but I confess it is a violent presumption, and I assert that they can not find any evidence which shows that a single person was intimidated in the State of Rhode Island. They did make out to declare, or to swear, that one man was intimidated; and that very individual himself was put on the stand, and he testified positively that he was not intimidated, and that he did not allow anybody to intimidate him.

As to the manufacturers, I produced them from every village where it was said that there had been intimidation, members of both parties, Democrats and Republicans, the first men in the State of Rhode Island, and they declared, every one of them without exception, that there was no intimidation. The idea that you can get voters by intimidation in Rhode Island is too preposterous for a Northern man to talk about! If you are going to obtain votes you must do it by persuasion and argument rather than by threats. The contrary has never been known to exist, and it is impossible to produce a single witness who will swear to any such thing if he swears to the truth. If this intimidation has existed in the mills or factories, as gentlemen allege, why do they not produce the employés and let them show that the employers did this, that, and the other thing as charged? You know, Mr. Speaker, because it has been spoken of here to-day, that our State stands alone with a single exception in this respect: that we are compelled by statute provision to elect our candidates by a majority of all the votes cast. You know also that I received 1,751 votes more than were cast for Mr. Page, the contestant. Gentlemen all know, too, that at that time the prohibition question was disturbing parties a good deal, and that in that election the prohibition candidate received 1,500 votes, a larger number than such a candidate ever received before.

Then there were four other distinct candidates who received votes, and in addition there were 32 scattering votes; yet I received 16 votes more than all the candidates and all the scattering votes, and no figures can be produced on the other side to show that that majority can be reduced to a minority. That is impossible, unless you take all the hearsays that are running rampant all over the country. The idea of a man getting up and swearing that he thinks there were 100 or 125 votes improperly obtained! It is like the boy in the old story, who told his mother that he had seen a thousand crows, and when he was pressed, brought the number down to a hundred, and then came down to fifty, and finally wound up by saying that he certainly had seen something as black as a crow! Gentlemen have heard the testimony read in detail, and they have heard the declarations of these men who allege bribery, that they did not know who purchased their votes; that they did not know the names of the persons, or that they would not repeat the names. The lawyers on this side of the House who have argued the case with so much ability, have clearly shown the danger and the injustice of regarding testimony of that kind.

Now, as I have said, I wish to have gentlemen on the other side show by any evidence in this case that any voter has been intimidated. We could not gather anything of that kind from the testimony they produced because it showed nothing of the kind. I do not care how much they say they were intimidated by the color of the ballot. The strength of that statement is brushed away when it is admitted here that the State of Rhode Island furnishes envelopes of a uniform size and color which any voter can use to inclose his ballot. That fact being admitted, it makes no difference whether the ticket itself is red, white, or blue. Our State is more liberal in that respect than any other State in the Union; it furnishes these envelopes, and the voter can take any ticket he pleases and put it in the envelope.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Those envelopes are required to be furnished by law?

Mr. PIRCE. Yes, sir, the State is obliged to furnish them, and they are furnished, any voter who desires them, and he can conceal his vote in that way by using the regular envelope. So far as the ticket itself is concerned we are not bound by law to use any particular size or color of ticket; we can use any that we see fit to use. There is not a man who swears that he was influenced by the color of the ticket; and if any man did swear to that his testimony would amount to nothing, because the State provides a way by which he could have avoided showing his ticket. But suppose a man wanted to vote on that yellow ticket, and wished to deceive his own side, could he not take the ticket, erase the contestee's name, and write in the name of the contestant? But the idea is perfectly ridiculous that there was any intimidation in this case. The other branch of the case has been fairly, clearly, and ably put before the House by the gentlemen who have already spoken; so that every member can see what there is in this charge of bribery.

I do not know anything about bribery. I am not going into the details of these charges. I am obliged to the gentleman who has yielded his time to me, but I am not going to discuss this point further, because it has been gone over and over again and again. When you see a committee evenly divided upon a question of this kind it is a pretty good indication of the character of the case. This committee stood upon this vote 6 to 6; but the chairman, of course—I might say necessarily—turned it in favor of his side of the House. [Laughter.]

When the Hurd case was before this House last summer the gentleman [Mr. TURNER] argued with great ability that the parties had a right to hire men to distribute tickets and do things of that kind; that that sort of work was proper and legitimate. Yet, in this case, all these matters are raked up about these men distributing tickets. Evidence is taken at the expense of the Government to show that there were ticket peddlers on my side. But the very witness who made oath to this acknowledged that he was distributing tickets on his side, was furnishing carriages to bring men in, and doing everything of that sort. But he seemed to assume it was a great sin on the part of the Republicans to do that which was a virtue when done on behalf of the Democratic party.

Smith is the only man named as having been intimidated. Being the only man named, he was consequently the only one whom we could reach. When put upon the stand he swore that he was not intimidated; that no man had intimidated him. I could have gone much further in contradiction of that charge; and after that pretended rebutting testimony came I might have put in testimony which was at my command and which would have wiped out that charge completely. But my lawyer advised me that I should not encroach upon the time specified in the resolution which ordered me home to take testimony. Consequently I had to let that matter go. But there was not perhaps in Rhode Island a man who did not see that the charge was completely exploded after the cross-examination of those witnesses. It was no rebuttal at all. It was simply the production of witnesses who repeated what they had already said, and of others who made allegations of the same kind, and their statements are taken in the report as evidence.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Rhode Island has expired.

[Mr. TURNER. Mr. Speaker, on account of the condition of my voice, I shall have to rely somewhat on the patience and forbearance of the House to-day. This circumstance may greatly abbreviate my remarks.

The gentleman who first spoke on the other side in this case inveighed, with somewhat of vehemence in his manner, against the ignorance of members of the House as to the character of the issues involved here. I may be allowed to say most respectfully that I think the argument of the gentleman, as well as the arguments of his associates, were based on that assumption. They evidently took it for granted that members of this House had not studied this case.

The case, sir, is one which sweeps a very small circle. It is a case within the easy grasp of the busiest member. It involves issues on questions of fact which concern most intimately the character of the American people. Its brevity, therefore, and the momentous importance of the issues involved, ought to have invited gentlemen to a careful scrutiny of the case. It is to me, sir, a revelation. But before I proceed to the discussion of the serious questions presented, I beg leave to dispose of some technical objections which have been urged against the report of the committee.

There is an intimation that unfairness has been practiced. I deny it. I say the facts in this case to which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL] alluded in his opening remarks will show a case of unprecedented magnanimity on the part of the Democratic members of the Committee on Elections. Gentlemen say that we are trying this case upon ex parte testimony. Is that a fair statement of this question? Gentlemen know it is not. There was an agreement as to the time of taking testimony between the parties to this contest about the construction of which it is true there was a difference of opinion.

On the one hand it was claimed that it was not intended to extend the time within which testimony should be taken. On the other hand, by a fair inference, the contestant claimed that the effect of the agreement was to waive the requirement as to time and allow the testimony to be taken at the convenience of the parties. The time limited by the statute expired, and the contestant proceeded to take his testimony, first giving notice to the sitting member. The gravest issues were raised.

The sitting member was on notice that an agreement had been made on which this contestant relied. He was on notice of the time and place at which these grave charges against him were to be investigated. Instead of going there and meeting, at the very threshhold and at every stage, this charge of infamy against him whenever and wherever it presented itself, he simply said: "The time has expired; I will have nothing to do with the proceeding." The contestant went on, nevertheless, and took his testimony. The depositions were returned under the act of Congress and were printed for the use of the committee in the usual way and under our rules of practice. When the contention came up before the Committee on Elections, Mr. Pirce's counsel set up this technical objection to the testimony and undertook to have it stricken from the record.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have approached in this discussion a point in the history of the case which is familiar to every member on this floor, and to go over it again would be thrashing old straw. But the Committee on Elections, instead of following the precedents set by the Republican Committees on Elections, and trying the case on testimony taken under these circumstances, came to the House of Representatives with a resolution proposing to give the sitting member the opportunity to resummon and cross-examine the witnesses of the contestant and see them face to face. And we had then the remarkable spectacle of every Democrat on this floor extending to a gentleman on that side this extraordinary privilege, while every Republican member voted against it. It was a rare incident in the trial of election cases, and I wish to pay to my political associates on this floor the tribute due to their generosity.

Gentlemen may ask whether there are precedents allowing the use of testimony taken after the statutory period had expired? One of them is found in a report signed by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PETTIBONE], who has to-day denounced the testimony of the contestant as ex parte.

I refer to a case which came from the State of Florida, from a district adjoining my own, in which was returned as elected my esteemed and honorable friend, General Finley. In that case Mr. Bisbee, the contestant, had gone on contrary to the statue and taken testimony in the time allowed by the statute to the sitting member.

I have the case here before me. The report of the majority of the committee in that case states, although that testimony was taken beyond the contestant's forty days and within the forty days allotted to the sitting member, they would receive it, because, forsooth, they said there was a case, which they quoted and approved, to the effect that General Findlay could have gone on and taken his testimony beyond the limit fixed by the statute. And in the course of the opinion they italicised this single statement, which was signed by the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PETTIBONE] himself, "that no statute can bind the Committee on Elections or the House of Representatives;" and on that principle, and on that precedent, and on that testimony, taken without any opportunity offered to General Findlay by a resolution offered of the House, they excluded him from a seat on this floor, although in my opinion he was as much entitled to it as I was to my own.

Now, we are told further that some of contestant's witnesses refused to appear when they were subpœnaed by Mr. Pirce, that he might cross-examine them. If gentlemen had been fair they would have stated that the witnesses whose names were given, and against whom this complaint has been made, appeared, but refused to be cross examined, because the sitting member refused to pay their expenses. They said if the gentlemen that summoned them would not pay their expenses, as they were entitled to have them paid, they would not give their testimony.

Mr. ROWELL. Does the gentleman refer to the statement of one lawyer to another as testimony?

Mr. TURNER. That statement is in the record, and was not contradicted by the lawyer on the other side.

Mr. ROWELL. Is it a part of the business of a lawyer to contradict the statement of the opposite lawyer, or else it will be taken as evidence?

Mr. TURNER. When lawyers are engaged in the progress of a case, and a statement of counsel is made to go down as part of the record, it is the business of the other side to contradict it if it is not true.

Mr. RANNEY. Did the lawyer swear to it?

Mr. TURNER. The gentleman from Massachusetts has grown old in the trial of causes in court, and has been my colleague in the Committee on Elections, with whom I have engaged on many a hard-fought field, but I have never known a lawyer of his eminence to intimate that counsel should swear to their statements made in the conduct of a cause. [Laughter.]

Mr. RANNEY. Pardon me.

Mr. TURNER. The gentleman asks me whether the lawyer was sworn? I say lawyers engaged in the active conduct of a case have the right to rely, one on the other, without being sworn.

Mr. RANNEY. Will the gentleman say, in taking testimony before a Massachusetts court, every remark of a lawyer written down is to be contradicted by the other lawyer or it will stand in the colloquy?

Mr. TURNER. The gentleman sees at a glance that his intimation is unjust and irrelevant to this case. I do not believe the gentleman understands the issue I am now discussing, and I say it in deference to the gentleman's well known ability.

It is due also to the majority of this committee to say that some of the witnesses who did not appear for cross-examination because they were refused their expenses, were produced again by the contestant as his own witnesses in the limited time given to him, thus affording the opportunity of cross-examinatien. Let all this charge of unfairness go; it amounts to nothing.

I have said already, Mr. Speaker, this case was full of interest. It comes from a State which was one of the last to give in her adhesion to the Federal Union. It was one of the very first States of the Union in which rebellion raised its head. [Laughter.] Traditions linger there about one Governor Dorr. The history of that rebellion is fully given in 7 Howard, in the case of Luther and Borden, with which gentlemen are familiar.

Mr. SPOONER. I thought the Pennsylvania rebellion was first.

Mr. TURNER. Yes, sir; there was a little rebellion there on account of whisky, I believe. [Laughter.] But there was a regular rebellion in Rhode Island against the charter government, as I understand it, and I believe, I will say in justice to the gentlemen who now represent that State on this floor, that they sent the governor to the penitentiary for life.

I refer to that, Mr. Speaker, not as a matter of reproach to gentlemen representing Rhode Island on this floor, but for the purpose of showing that there was in Rhode Island friction, discontent, mutiny, against the system of restrictions which in that State trammeled the right of suffrage.

I have heard it said that a gentleman who at one time was a distinguished Representative of that State, or some other, on this floor, and who had served most conspicuously in the last war, was, on account of having sold his real estate, thereafter deprived of the right to vote in Rhode Island.

Now, sir, whether that was a mistake or not, it is entirely possible for it to have happened. There are property qualifications in Rhode Island against which I do not inveigh, against which I make no complaint, but I refer to them as showing the reason for the discontent which now and then crops out of these rebellious plantations.

I intend to base the resolution proposed by the Committee on Elections upon bribery at Warwick and "bulldozing" (that is the word) at Pawtucket. Gentlemen have said here that all of the votes which we have shown should be excluded here from the sitting member's case are 10 or 12. I propose to show that there were 100 at least, and hence it makes very little difference for the purpose of my argument whether the apparent majority on the face of the returns of Mr. Pirce over Page was 3 or 16.

I will remark in passing that the calculation by which I reached the conclusion that the true majority was probably 3 instead of 16, was the result of a careful investigation on my part of the original documents, but gentlemen on the other side have satisfied me that the fairest way in which to argue the case under all the circumstances is to assume that the declaration of what is called the grand committee in Rhode Island was correct, and that over all opponents and scattering votes he had 16 majority.

I remember that on a certain other occasion, when I had the honor of submitting to this House a report from the Committee on Elections on a celebrated case, I was criticised by gentlemen on the other side because I assumed to give the conclusions of the committee rather than the facts on which the conclusions rested. In the report in this case I preferred not to express our views or conclusions on the testimony (as the minority of the committee have attempted to do), but to set out the testimony in hæc verba so that every member of the House could draw his own conclusions. And now I am criticised because I did not synopsize the evidence.

What does this testimony show? Many witnesses swore that they were paid from two to three dollars each for voting for the sitting member, and some of them testified that they formed with others a procession of a hundred or a hundred and twenty-five and marched up to Atwood's Hotel, or barn, in a certain alley in the town of Warwick. Each of them states that he received two or three dollars, but most of them add that they can not give the names of those who paid the money.

In the study of this case, Mr. Speaker, it must be borne in mind that by the law of Rhode Island, which I commend, the crime of bribery is confined entirely to the man who does the bribing, while the man who receives the bribe has no penalty put upon him.

There is a philosophical reason for this state of the law which will occur to every lawyer.

Hence I have the indorsement of the Rhode Island system, which disfranchises the briber and puts no penalty whatever upon the men bribed. This consideration, Mr. Speaker, fully explains the state of the record here. The man who is bribed you could not punish, while the man who furnished the "boodle" was liable to indictment, and, on conviction, to be disfranchised forever.

Knowing this thing, considering the shrewdness that characterizes party management at this day, it was plain at a glance that it was necessary to so conduct this shameless system of bribery as to prevent detection by excluding every known man. It was probably managed through this man at one stage and that man at another, and the man who paid the cash might have been an utter stranger.

The report of the minority of the committee cites a case where a man said that he had received $3—that he had received that money not for his vote but for his time in going down to the polls. And the minority of the Committee on Elections follow that statement with the further remarks that if it were true, that vote should not be deducted from the sitting member.

Mr. Speaker, there has been bribery in all other countries and in all other ages of the world—bribery in every century of the world's history. And bribery, God knows, is bad enough; but when bribery can find apologists on this floor in the ranks of a great party, I say it is time for the country to pause and reflect. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. ROWELL. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. TURNER. I will.

Mr. ROWELL. Suppose a voter of your political party is in Washington, would it be bribery to pay his expenses home in order that he might vote?

Mr. TURNER. If a member of my party comes to me and claims pay from me because he loses time in voting for me, I would say at once it was a piece of corruption he proposed to me and for which I would spurn him.

Mr. ROWELL. That does not answer my question.

Mr. TURNER. I know it has not been uncommon for committees to provide facilities for voters to come to the polls. However questionable it may be, that is a practice which has obtained both in England and in this country. But I defy the gentleman who has interrupted me, or all of his associates on that side, to find a case where the conduct of a man who receives pay for the time he loses in going to the polls has ever before been justified as a legal performance.

Why, sir, it is against the highest public policy. The privilege of citizenship, the right to bear the name of an American, the privilege of enjoying our institutions and the participation in the noblest liberty that the world has ever witnessed ought to be inducement enough for any man to vote as he pleases. But when in addition to these inducements he has to receive money for the time he loses in the exercise of his franchise as a freeman from the party in whose interest he votes, call it by whatever name you please, I denounce it as bribery and corruption which no party can afford to justify. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

It would be just as honorable for a citizen of New England to ask compensation for the time he devotes to the celebration of the Fourth of July in full view of Bunker Hill monument! [Laughter.]

Mr. GALLINGER. Did not a much larger portion of the people of New England vote than of Georgia at the last election, according to the returns?

Mr. TURNER. What was the gentleman's question?

Mr GALLINGER. Did not a much larger proportion of voters go to the polls in New England than in Georgia, according to the last election returns?

Mr. TURNER. The gentleman who has interrupted me knows that his interjection here has no relevancy at all to this issue.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think it has.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Is it not as relevant as the gentleman's own remark about New England?

Mr. TURNER. If the gentleman from Maine will let me answer one gentleman at a time, I will endeavor to show my friend from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] that his interruption has no sort of relevancy to this case. I can not speak for my colleagues from the State of Georgia, but I can speak for myself——

Mr. ELY. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. TURNER. If my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. ELY] will permit me to answer one New England gentleman at a time, I shall be obliged to him. [Laughter.] In the district which I have the honor to represent (and of which I shall be proud forever) there are two parties, Democrats and Republicans, but I want to tell the gentleman that the Democrats in that district are in the majority, as has been demonstrated in half-a-dozen contests.

I want to tell the gentleman further, what perhaps he is not aware of, that before the last Congressional election in my State a revolution had taken place here at Washington, and, instead of there being a President in the White House who would reward candidates of the gentleman's party for their devotion, there was no longer any reward for those who might fight the battles of the Republican party.

The result is, Mr. Speaker, that there are no longer any leaders of that party in my State. It should also be stated that the Republican party of Georgia, consisting chiefly of colored men, have, since Mr. Cleveland's election, ceased to fear Democratic supremacy. I beg to add that a very reputable Northern gentleman, I believe a New England man, and a distinguished Republican in my district, did me the honor to assure me that his party would not resist my election. [Laughter and cheers on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, in that district, as no doubt was the case in all the other districts of Georgia, the vote was a mere dress parade of the Democratic party, in which those who voted came out merely to show their respect for their candidates.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. TURNER. What more can I say to the gentleman from New Hampshire?

Mr. GALLINGER. Will you permit me a word?

Mr. TURNER. The gentleman impeached my constituents——

Mr. GALLINGER. As you did mine.

Mr. TURNER. I did not.

Mr. GALLINGER. You certainly did.

Mr. TURNER. I alluded only to facts which appear of record in this case, and I defy any gentleman to contradict me.

Mr. GALLINGER. The gentleman alluded to New England, and the record in this case does not bear him out.

Mr. TURNER. Ah; does the gentleman identify himself with his colleague from New England, the sitting member in this case, and justify bribery in the payment of voters for the time which they lose in the performance of their duties as citizens?

Mr. GALLINGER. I represent a New England district which cast nearly as many votes as were cast altogether in Georgia, and yet you impeach my district——

Mr. TURNER. I decline to be interrupted further. In the gentleman's district, as well as in that from which this contest comes, there is never any lack of candidates. Parties never fail there to struggle for power.

Offices in that part of the country never go in that way, but whenever an opportunity for a contest is afforded in which honorable gentlemen can aspire to promotion there are sure to be at least two candidates in the field, if not three or four, and the result is that the canvass brings out every voter, and the vote represents war between all the factions; but where that state of things does not exist, does the gentleman expect every man to turn out to vote?

Mr. GALLINGER. No; and neither do I expect the men who do vote to be accused of being bribed.

Mr. ELY. Will the gentleman allow me——

Mr. TURNER. And the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ELY], knowing how my time has been occupied, and also how the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOYLE] was consumed by interruptions, proposes now to follow in the wake of his New England colleague, and propound to me another catechism. [Laughter.] I beg the gentleman to spare me. I have the highest respect for New England; I love her traditions; I believe that this country is immensely indebted to that section; I believe that her town government is the best in this Union; I believe that her commonwealths are as well governed as those of any other section of the country; but I want it distinctly understood that all the virtue, and all the grace, and all the purity of elections does not reside within the limits of those New England States.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I ask the gentleman from Georgia——

Mr. TURNER. I ask the gentleman from Maine to excuse me.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia declines to be interrupted.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I "excuse" the gentleman, if he is very anxious to escape from a question. Still, I should like to ask——

Mr. TURNER. I can not refuse the gentleman from Maine when he puts me on my courage.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I thought you would not.

Mr. TURNER. What will you have?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I simply wanted to ask you whether, as a matter of fairness, in view of your arraignment of New England here in regard to the suffrage, you are not willing to have the statement made, or to make it yourself——

Mr. TURNER. Now, my friend must not make a speech.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Let me finish the question.

Mr. TURNER. This only shows, Mr. Speaker, that New England always stands together in a controversy of this sort. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. I simply ask the gentleman as a matter of fairness——

Mr. TURNER. Let the gentleman ask his question, and not make a speech.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I want to know whether the gentleman is not willing to state here, when he is arraigning New England in reference to the manner in which Congressmen are elected, that while in the New England States it takes on an average more than 29,000 votes to send a Congressman here (though in Rhode Island, which is an exception, with her peculiar qualifications for suffrage, the average is brought down to 16,000), yet in the State of Georgia the average is 12,000, or 25 per cent. less than even the average of Rhode Island.

Mr. TURNER. I can answer the gentleman as I have already done, that a Congressional election in New England is always disputed, while in the section from which I come there is very often no dispute at all.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I understood the gentleman to say a few minutes ago that there were two parties in the State of Georgia.

Mr. TURNER. I have so stated, and I repeat it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Why did they not appear in your district?

Mr. TURNER. Because my opponents knew that they could not beat me.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Ah!

Mr. TURNER. Have I answered the gentleman?

Mr. BOUTELLE. The Democrats in my district are quite as sure that they can not beat me, yet they come to the polls.

Mr. TURNER. I wish to say that if there is a Democrat in that gentleman's district who will not get up in the morning before day and pay his own expenses for the privilege of voting against the gentleman, I denounce him as a political outcast. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. The trouble is that in the gentleman's district the Republican vote is not cast, morning, noon, or night.

Mr. TURNER. We have in this testimony the evidence of witnesses who swore to being bribed, and gentlemen upon the other side turn upon us and say that these witnesses are not to be believed because they confessed their own infamy.

It has always been permitted, sir, that persons who have participated in a crime should be allowed to go on the stand and testify, in order that the penalties of the law might be visited upon the other parties to the transaction.

It has always been the law, and no fair-minded man on the other side of the hall will deny that is the case. Allow me to state that the crime of bribery is one to which there are two parties, the briber and the man bribed, and it is usually conducted in secret. When a man comes to pay money or take money as a bribe he does not call the best men around to bear testimony to the fact. But it is a secret crime, hidden away from the gaze of men, and unless one of the parties to the crime be allowed to prove its character, it amounts to this, that bribery shall go unwhipped and unpunished.

I decline, so far as I am concerned, to extend the measure of immunity to criminals in New England any more than to criminals anywhere else in the country.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL] who wrote this report of the minority, and who has presented the case of the minority with such force and ability, said when a man declines to tell all he knew, he was a corrupt witness and not to be believed. And the principle falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus is also invoked. I deny that principle covers this case. The best authorities on evidence lay down the rule that when a man makes a confession the tribunal trying him may believe a part and reject a part if it please. And that is this case. We have a right to believe a man who makes a confession, although a part of his confession may be false, and although he may be guilty of suppression.

Now, sir, at Warwick a hundred or a hundred and twenty-five men stood in a line, man behind man, going up to the same hole in the wall at which those who received the bribe were paid. I say it is but a fair inference that those who stood with them in this procession went there on the same business.

If a Republican in New England is to be believed, the first witness called in rebuttal by the contestant states that while he did not know what was going on, he saw the procession, and he heard the names called out, man by man. Therefore, as a witness from the camp of the Republican party, he corroborated at least a material part of the statement made by these corrupt witnesses.

I now pass to the subject of bull-dozing. I think, sir, I have shown that at least one hundred men were bribed at Warwick. I propose to show that from thirty to fifty were intimidated in the town of Pawtucket. On this branch of the case I rely on the testimony of a man by the name of Garland. But it is said his testimony is not competent, because he was not a witness in rebuttal. The gentleman who made this charge if he had been familiar with the record of the case would have known a part of the evidence was addressed to the denial of the very transaction to which this testimony of Garland related. And of course when his conduct was the matter in issue, put in issue by the very first testimony adduced by the contestant, denied by numbers of witnesses of the sitting member, will any lawyer say the testimony of the man himself whose conduct was under investigation was not in rebuttal?

It is too ridiculous, Mr. Speaker, to require further comment. This man was in the public service of Rhode Island. He was the foreman of highways in the town of Pawtucket, and employed for service on the public roads thirty to fifty men, and he said the most of them were Democrats. He said they all voted for Mr. Pirce, and if they had been uninfluenced would have voted for the contestant and the Democratic ticket.

He himself, this man Garland, voted for Pirce and the Republican ticket, and, therefore, I think he ought to be regarded as an unimpeachable witness. He stated that the employment of these men depended on their having voted the Republican ticket. He stated further that Goodwin, chairman of the Republican town committee in Pawtucket, employed him, Garland, to work for his party on the day of the election; that Goodwin had given him credit at a bar-room in that city at which he could take his men to be treated, and adds further that every man in his service had the impression that his employment depended on the way he voted. What do you think of a state of politics which will prostitute the public service to the debauching of voters, the bread and meat of whose families depended on their subservience? I say, can gentlemen from any part of New England afford to justify intimidation of this character?

Mr. GALLINGER. It does not exist.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Let me ask the gentleman why make New England responsible for Rhode Island any more than he should make the entire Southern States responsible for some outrage in a parish in Louisiana?

Mr. TURNER. I am glad the gentleman from Maine gives me his support.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Whether Rhode Island be right or wrong, I do not see why any responsibility should rest upon New England for that.

I beg to enter a disclaimer against applying to New England anything that may be done in Rhode Island, whether it be right or wrong.

Mr. LONG. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. TURNER. I do not mean to be provoked into an arraignment of all New England in the discussion of this question. It is not necessary.

Mr. LONG. Did I not understand correctly from the report of the majority of the committee that they withdrew their charge of intimidation and relied exclusively upon bribery? Is not that the statement of the report?

Mr. TURNER. No, sir; the gentleman has been misled either by the gentlemen of his own party who have undertaken to discuss this question, or has misconceived the report.

Mr. LONG. I have read the report with care, and that is my understanding of it.

Mr. TURNER. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. There is no part of this case based upon the question of color of the tickets; but the question as to whether men in Rhode Island were intimidated from voting forms a very large part of the case; and if the gentleman has examined my report he will find it stated in the testimony cited by the committee.

Mr. LONG. Will the gentleman allow me to read a sentence from the report?

Mr. TURNER. The gentleman does not certainly deny the accuracy of my statement?

Mr. LONG. I am only asking the gentleman's attention to the language of his own report.

Mr. TURNER. I will not permit the gentleman to fritter away the small remnant of my time in disputing a fact as to which I now make a positive statement, and which is borne out by the report which the gentleman holds in his hand.

Mr. LONG. I ask the gentleman to permit me to read one sentence.

Mr. TURNER. Will the gentleman not permit me to proceed after making the statement I have made?

Mr. LONG. I only ask an explanation as to this point; and I read from the report:

> While it is likely that voters under the domination of Republican employers were deterred from voting for Mr. Page, there was no evidence before the committee defining the measure of this influence or estimating its effect.

Mr. TURNER. Now, the gentleman has taken a little extract from the report, which shows how he is willing to vote upon a garbled statement in the report.

Mr. LONG. I do not see how that can be when I have quoted the language of the report.

Mr. TURNER. The gentleman knows, if he examines it, and the gentleman from Michigan knows, if he examines it, that that relates to the intimidation which was sought to be exerted by the use of colored tickets; but the intimidation which was practiced at Pawtucket by a public officer of the State of Rhode Island is insisted on.

Mr. CRAIN. With the permission of the gentleman from Georgia I desire to ask a question for information.

Mr. TURNER. I have but a few moments.

Mr. CRAIN. Is it not true that the laws of Rhode Island provide that a foreign-born citizen can not vote within the limits of that State unless he owns a certain amount of property, and that a native-born citizen can vote without respect to the property qualification?

Mr. MILLIKEN. That has nothing to do with this case.

Mr. TURNER. I agree with my friend from Maine that that inquiry has nothing to do with this case. I have no desire to traduce New England or her institutions. The question of her suffrage, though restricted to such an extent that 15,000 votes only can be polled there in a Congressional election that was disputed by three parties when there were 35,000 voters in another district, belongs entirely to the State of Rhode Island, and I do not arraign her. Let her determine her own system for herself.

Mr. ELY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TURNER. I beg my friend from Massachusetts to pardon me. He must see the impropriety of my giving away my time entirely to his side.

Mr. ELY. My question is directly in point.

Mr. TURNER. The side of the gentleman from Massachusetts has already had nearly twice as much time as has been occupied on this side. I appeal to his sense of fairness that he should spare me further interruption.

Going over this whole field, passing this question from the one side to the other, and in the spirit of the greatest kindness to all sections of this Union, I want to say it is time, high time, there should be an lustration of American politics. They sometimes say that at the other end of the Capitol millionaires are seated by methods which are denounced as corrupt. I hope the time will never come when that end of the Capitol will be able upon sworn testimony to arraign this end of it and say that any party could be found which would stand up here and undertake to vindicate and to retain a purchased seat bought by the paltry pittance of two or three dollars a head. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. EDEN). The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. TURNER. I ask the privilege of supplementing my remarks with a few statements which shall not be in violation of the privilege if extended to me. My time has been so occupied by interruptions that I hope this privilege will not be denied me.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. ROWELL. I ask that the same privilege be extended to other gentlemen with the understanding that it shall not be held to cover anything of a personal nature.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask for myself the same permission to extend my remaarks.

Mr. TURNER. Then I withdraw the request.

Mr. DAVIS. We might perhaps refer to elections in South Carolina.

Mr. TURNER. As it seems I have unintentionally put New England on her mettle, I see the propriety of allowing a reply. I have no objection, therefore, to the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] obtaining the privilege he asks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request that gentlemen have leave to extend their remarks on the pending question?

There was no objection.

Mr. TURNER. I now ask for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. ROWELL. The vote, I presume, is first on the motion to substitute the minority resolution.

Mr. HOPKINS. Upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the substitute; and on that question the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] asks for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause the substitute resolution to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Mr. PIRCE was elected a Representative to Congress for the Second Congressional District of Rhode Island at the election on November 4, 1884, and is entitled to retain his seat.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the substitute.

CONFERENCE COMMITTEE APPOINTED.

The SPEAKER announced as the managers on the part of the House of the conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. 1458) to provide for holding terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States for the eastern district of Michigan at Bay City, in said district, Mr. COLLINS, Mr. ROGERS, and Mr. RANNEY.

RHODE ISLAND CONTESTED ELECTION.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 108, nays 130, not voting 80; as follows:

Mr. CULBERSON with Mr. E. B. TAYLOR.
Mr. OATES with Mr. KELLEY.
Mr. ROGERS with Mr. CASWELL.
Mr. MILLS with Mr. PAYSON.
Mr. STAHLNECKER with Mr. WAIT.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to announce that my colleague, Mr. ROGERS, is absent on account of sickness.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I was absent from the hall on business. Had I been present when my name was called I would have voted no.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The question was taken upon agreeing to the resolution reported by the majority of the committee, and the Speaker declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. SPOONER. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 103, noes 13.

Mr. SPOONER. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The point of "no quorum" being made, the Chair will appoint the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. SPOONER] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER] to act as tellers.

Mr. TURNER. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 130, nays 33, not voting 155; as follows:

So the resolution was adopted.

The following additional pair was announced:

Mr. DUNN with Mr. WADSWORTH, for the remainder of the day.

The SPEAKER. On this question the yeas are 130, the nays 34. The yeas have it.

Mr. SPOONER. Is there a quorum voting?

Several MEMBERS. Oh, yes.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Speaker, is there more than a quorum?

The SPEAKER. One hundred and sixty-four members have voted. One hundred and sixty-three constitute a quorum, being a majority of all the members chosen to the present House.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to know how many more than a quorum there are, because, as I am paired, I have only voted to make a quorum.

The SPEAKER. One hundred and sixty-four have voted; one hundred and sixty-three constitute a quorum. There would be a quorum without the gentleman's vote.

Mr. HISCOCK. I withdraw my vote.

The SPEAKER. On this question the yeas are 130, nays 33. The resolution is adopted.

Mr. TURNER moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 103, noes 19.

Mr. SPOONER. No quorum.

Mr. TURNER. I withdraw the motion.

Several MEMBERS. Too late!

Mr. TURNER. Mr. Speaker, have I a right to withdraw the motion?

The SPEAKER. There has been no decision upon it; and the rules provide that a motion may be withdrawn at any time before a decision or amendment.

Mr. TURNER. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. SPOONER. I object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman has a right, under the rules, to withdraw it.

Mr. SPOONER. I renew the motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not do that, because he did not vote with the majority.

Mr. SPOONER. I did not vote at all.

Mr. TURNER. I move that the House adjourn.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. 54) to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians upon the various reservations, and to extend the operation of the laws over the Indian Territory, &c.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCOOK, its Secretary, announced agreement to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10242) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

It further announced agreement to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2301) granting a pension to Lucy E. Anderson.

It further announced the agreement to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2098) for the relief of Rosella E. Hibbert.

It further announced the passage of a bill (S. 3173) to authorize the President of the United States to protect and defend the rights of American fishing vessels, American fishermen, American trading, and other vessels in certain cases, and for other purposes; in which concurrence was requested.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. DUNN, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence indefinitely on account of sickness.

The motion of Mr. TURNER was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, January 26, 1887.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

CREDENTIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the credentials of GEORGE GRAY, chosen by the Legislature of Delaware a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1887; which were read and ordered to be placed on file.

He also presented the credentials of FRANCIS MARION COCKRELL, chosen by the Legislature of Missouri a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1887; which were read and ordered to be placed on file.

Mr. HOAR presented the credentials of HENRY L. DAWES, chosen by the Legislature of Massachusetts a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1887; which were read and ordered to be placed on file.

PAYMENT OF SENATORS' SALARIES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following communication from the Secretary of the Senate; which was read and ordered to lie on the table, and be printed:

OFFICE OF SECRETARY OF THE SENATE,
Washington, January 25, 1887.

SIR: In response to the resolution of the Senate, directing the Secretary to report to the Senate "from what time, according to custom and precedent, the salary of Senators is reckoned and paid," I have the honor to report that, so far as I have any knowledge or information, the "time" is the beginning of the official term of the Senator. Under the act of March 29, 1867, payments were made from the 4th of March, after the Senator had taken and subscribed the required oath.

This law was subsequently modified by the act of March 3, 1883, so as to authorize payment to those whose term of office begins on the 4th of March, and whose credentials have been presented to the Senate, but who have had no opportunity to be qualified.

In cases of vacancy, by death or otherwise, the act of July 12, 1862, provides that the successor shall be paid from the time the compensation of his predecessor ceased.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ANSON G. McCOOK,
Secretary.

Hon. JOHN SHERMAN,
President of the Senate.

DISTRICT LIQUOR LICENSES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a letter from the commissioners of the District of Columbia, submitting, in reply to resolutions of January 14 and 17 of this year, a statement in regard to the sale of liquor in the District of Columbia and the issuing of licenses therefor. Such a letter usually would be read, but this is quite a lengthy paper.

Mr. MORGAN. I move that it be printed, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

CONTESTED ELECTIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6637) relating to contested elections, and asking a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

On motion of Mr. HOAR, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist on its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the conferrees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. HOAR, Mr. FRYE, and Mr. PUGH managers of the conference on the part of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. DOLPH presented a petition of wholesale and retail druggists of Portland, Oreg., praying for a reduction of the internal-revenue taxes; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. DOLPH. I also present petitions of citizens of Washington Territory, praying that an act entitled "An act to prevent unlawful occupancy of the public lands" be so amended that the school lands of Washington Territory be exempt from the operations of that act. The petitions are signed by a large number of citizens of Washington Territory.

I reported a bill on Monday last in relation to the school lands, which I think will probably remove the grievance complained of, but as the petitions are not directed to that bill, I move that they be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I present a petition of certain inhabitants of Greeley and Evans, in the State of Colorado, praying for the reduction of the internal-revenue taxes, especially the taxes upon spirits and tobacco. I do not think this petition expresses the general opinion of the people of the State of Colorado, certainly not my own. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PALMER presented a memorial of Emmett Hagadorn and 20 citizens of Fife Lake, Mich.; a memorial of N. H. Beebe and 10 other citizens of Big Rapids, Mich.; a memorial of George Collin & Co. and 13 other citizens of Greenville, Mich.; a memorial of George Hart and 13 citizens of Bay City, Mich.; a memorial of F. G. Russell and 14 other citizens of Baldwin, Mich.; and a memorial of G. H. Long and 11 other citizens of Lilley, Mich., favoring the repeal of special taxes, and remonstrating against the "obnoxious, prohibitory, and monopolistic features" of the oleomargarine law; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. PLUMB presented a petition of Earlton Post, No. 206, Department of Kansas, Grand Army of the Republic, and a petition of Dover Post, No. 262, Grand Army of the Republic, Dover, Kans., praying for the passage of what is known as the Edmunds-Tucker bill on the subject of polygamy; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Kansas State Board of Agriculture, praying for the passage of what is known as the Miller bill for the suppression of pleuro-pneumonia; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of the Kansas State Board of Agriculture, praying for the passage of the agricultural experiment-station bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PLUMB. I present a petition of ex-Union soldiers of Gardner City, Kans, praying for the passage of a bill to make up the difference between the $13 per month in currency paid to soldiers during the rebellion and the coin value of the currency at that time. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT presented the memorial of Hon. Henry G. Hubbard and 74 other citizens of Middletown, Conn., remonstrating against the removal of the custom-house from Middletown to Hartford; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CHACE presented the petition of Augustine Jones and other citizens of Providence, R. I., praying for the passage of a bill providing for the establishment of a permanent high court of arbitration; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CHENEY presented resolutions adopted by the New Hampshire Medical Association, urging the enactment of laws to prevent the immigration and exportation to United States ports of the so-called "defective classes" of foreign countries; which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. WHITTHORNE presented the petition of Demoville & Co., and other druggists of Nashville, Tenn., praying for the repeal of the internal-revenue laws; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I present the petition and other papers relating to the application of James T. Hood, of Oregon, for a pension, and I desire to say a word in relation to the case:

From numerous letters and petitions I have received in reference to this matter, I am satisfied that it is a very meritorious as well as a very sad case. This person served during the war, was incarcerated in several prisons of the South, and while there contracted catarrh in the head, which has resulted in almost total blindness. I ask the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Pensions to this petition. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MORGAN. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to report back an amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill, providing an appropriation for the purpose of establishing the boundary line between the United States and Mexico.

This amendment has been heretofore reported by the committee but seems not to have received attention. I now ask that it be sent immediately to the Committee on Appropriations, who I understand are about ready to report the sundry civil bill. The amendment has already been printed, and therefore it is not necessary to have it printed again. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CHACE, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2999) to incorporate the American Trust Company of the District of Columbia, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 346) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the National Safe-Deposit Company of Washington, in the District of Columbia," approved January 22, 1867, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MILLER, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5190) to enlarge the powers and duties of the Department of Agriculture and to create an executive department to be known as the department of agriculture and labor, reported it with amendments.

Mr. SEWELL, from the Committee on the Library, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3182) for the completion of the monument to Mary, the mother of Washington, at Fredericksburg, Va., reported it without amendment.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 10104) granting a pension to Caroline L. Shedd;

A bill (H. R. 8463) granting a pension to Elizabeth M. J. Meagher;

A bill (H. R. 10103) granting a pension to Minerva Abbey;

A bill (H. R. 7732) for the relief of Franz Rossrucker; and

A bill (H. R. 9009) granting a pension to Mrs. Susan E. Barry.

Mr. GRAY, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1915) for the relief of Mrs. Clara Morris, submitted an adverse report thereon, and moved the referenee of the bill, with the accompanying papers, to the Committee on Pensions; which motion was agreed to.

Mr. VANCE, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2919) to incorporate the Georgetown and Tennallytown Cable Railway Company of the District of Columbia, reported it with amendments.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3135) granting a pension to Catherine E. Babcock, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2778) to authorize the Billings, Clark's Fork and Cooke City Railroad Company to construct and operate a railway through the Crow Indian reservation, and for other purposes, to report it with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be passed now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the bill now. Is there objection?

Mr. HARRIS. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. EUSTIS. I am instructed by the Committee on Epidemic Diseases to report favorably the bill (S. 3157) to authorize the removal of the quarantine station from Ship Island, Mississippi, and I ask unanimous consent to have the bill considered at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the bill now. Is there objection?

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to say that I think we ought to go to the Calendar under Rule VIII, and in order that we may have an opportunity to do so I shall object to every request of this character during the morning hour.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill goes to the Calendar.

WILLIAM WEBSTER.

Mr. MORGAN. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to report back favorably two resolutions in response to the petition of William Webster, a citizen of the United States, in respect of certain claims that he has against the British Government for indemnity in consequence of the loss of lands which he owned in New Zealand at the time the British Government acquired possession of that country. I ask that the report be printed, and in connection with it, but separately, the resolutions which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reports two resolutions, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, That after due examination of the matters presented in the petition of William Webster, and the evidence brought to their attention in support of his claim for indemnity from the British Government for lands in New Zealand, purchased by him in good faith from native chiefs, and duly conveyed to him before the Government of Great Britain acquired the sovereignty over that country by a treaty made with said chiefs, the Senate of the United States consider that said claim for indemnity is founded in justice and deserves the cognizance and support of the Government of the United States; and that said claim, as a claim for money indemnity, was not presented by the United States to Great Britain prior to September, 1858.

Resolved, That the President is requested to take such measures as, in his opinion, may be proper to secure to William Webster a just settlement and final adjustment of his claim against Great Britain, growing out of the loss of the lands and other property in New Zealand of which he has been deprived by the act or consent of the British Government, and to which he had acquired a title under purchases and deeds of conveyance from the native chiefs prior to February 6, 1840, and prior to any right of Great Britain to said islands.

Mr. MORGAN. I am desired by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], a member of the committee, to state that he dissents from the report. I will also state that it is the opinion of all the other members of the committee that that report ought to be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions will be printed, and the report will be printed separately, as the Chair understands the Senator to ask.

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir; printed separately.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made. The resolutions will be placed on the Calendar.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MANDERSON (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3219) to increase the pension of Mrs. Harriet Clifford; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BLAIR introduced a bill (S. 3220) granting a pension to Hannah R. Langdon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 3221) for the relief of Edward Rice; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, introduced a bill (S. 3222) to reimburse settlers and purchasers in even-numbered sections of public lands within the limits of Congressional grants in cases of forfeiture of odd-numbered sections; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MORGAN introduced a bill (S. 3223) for the relief of Mary Jane Thompson, executrix of Jeter L. Thompson, deceased; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. MORGAN. I put my request in this form because this bill was once before the Committee on Claims of the Senate and was reported adversely. But I am satisfied on an inspection of the papers that that report was founded upon an error of fact as to the identity of the man, who was alleged to have been disloyal, but who was a different person from the one in behalf of whose estate this claim is filed. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask leave to send to the committee the accompanying papers, which establish this claim.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The papers will be referred with the bill to the Committee on Claims.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. HOAR, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Edward Rice be withdrawn from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Finance.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to offer, for reference to the Committee on Rules, an amendment to the rules; which I should like to have read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Amend Rule VII by inserting at the beginning thereof as follows:

"It shall be the duty of the President of the Senate to take the chair every day promptly at the hour to which the Senate has adjourned. As soon as a quorum shall appear prayer shall be offered by the Chaplain, and the Journal shall then be read.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I move the reference of this proposed amendment to the Committee on Rules, and I desire to say that the object of the change is to secure the presence of a quorum of the Senate before prayer is offered by the Chaplain. If the Senate propose to continue the expression of reverence to the Creator of the universe and of public dependence upon that Power for guidance and support, it seems to me it should be done decently and with decorum, and that the spectacle of divine service in this Chamber when perhaps only one, two, or three members of the body are in their seats ought not longer to be continued.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be referred to the Committee on Rules.

REPORT ON THE CONGO COUNTRY.

Mr. MORGAN submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy is directed to send to the Senate a copy of the report of Lieutenant Taunt of his explorations in the Congo country of Africa.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask the Senate to consider the resolution at this time. The report has been written up and prepared in the Navy Department, and has been waiting there for some time. I think that a similar resolution was heretofore passed by the Senate, but it has been somehow overlooked. I ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HARRIS. Let it be printed and come up to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution goes over under objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10242) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House insisted upon its amendment to the bill (S. 1458) to provide for holding terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States for the eastern district of Michigan at Bay City, in said district, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. COLLINS, Mr. ROGERS, and Mr. RANNEY managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 2301) granting a pension to Lucy E. Anderson; and

A bill (S. 2098) for the relief of Rosella E. Hibbert.

ALLEGED OUTRAGES IN TEXAS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there are no further "concurrent or other resolutions"——

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas rise to a resolution?

Mr. INGALLS. I rose to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a resolution previously submitted, Order of Business 1902, being a resolution to discharge the Committee on Pensions from the further consideration of the bill (S. 35) to remove the limitation in the payment of arrears of pension.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that under the rule the resolution which comes over under objection from yesterday must be placed before the Senate, and it is his duty now to present it. What disposition does the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] desire to have made of the resolution submitted by him yesterday, which comes over under objection?

Mr. HOAR. I desire to have it adopted at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, reported yesterday by Mr. HOAR from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, as follows:

Whereas Stephen A. Hackworth, a native citizen of the United States and of the State of Texas; James L. Moore, a native of Alabama and now for twenty years a citizen of Texas; and Carl Schutze, a native of Germany, for thirty years a resident of the United States, and now a naturalized citizen thereof, have presented their petition to the Senate, wherein they allege that they have been driven from their homes in Washington County, Texas, and compelled to abandon their property at a great sacrifice, and that armed and lawless bands of ruffians have taken possession of and destroyed the ballot-boxes in said county at a late election therein for county officers and members of Congress, and have murdered three citizens of said county, and overthrown republican government therein, and committed other outrages and crimes, all of which have been done in order that the majority of the voters therein may be deprived of their lawful and constitutional rights of suffrage, and that the minority may unlawfully usurp and exercise control in said county, and that the constituted authorities of said county and State refuse all remedy for said outrages and crimes;

Be it resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be, and is hereby, instructed to inquire into all the circumstances of, and connection with, the said alleged events, and that it report as soon as may be; and that said committee have power to send for persons and papers, to employ a stenographer, and to act by any subcommittee, and that any such subcommittee shall for the purposes of such investigation be a committee of the Senate to all intents and purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President——

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator from Texas permit me to suggest a verbal amendment before he proceeds?

Mr. COKE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAWLEY. I call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to an expression about eight lines from the beginning of the preamble, which is this:

have taken possession of and destroyed the ballot-boxes in said county.

That might be subject to the inference that they were all destroyed. It should read "certain ballot-boxes." They are specified in the petition.

Mr. HOAR. I have no objection to that modification.

Mr. HAWLEY. I suggest the insertion of the word "certain." The ballot-boxes destroyed are specified in the petition.

Mr. HOAR. And strike out the word "the" before "ballot-boxes."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be modified accordingly.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President, I am not averse, nor are the people of Texas, to an investigation of any charge that may properly be made against the State involved, in a subject over which Congress has jurisdiction; but I desire to protest against this investigation upon a charge preferred as this has been, and over subjects not within the jurisdiction of Congress.

The State of Texas has the autonomy of a State. It has a constitution, and laws, and government, in full force and operation. It can redress all grievances, personal or otherwise, occurring within its borders. The subject is one peculiarly within the jurisdiction of the State, and this resolution of investigation is an intermeddling with something belonging solely to the State and outside of the jurisdiction of this Government.

The memorial, it will be seen, was draughted evidently by a lawyer, and aims to present the subject in a way to confer jurisdiction upon the Congress of the United States; but when sifted down to the real charges made they are personal grievances of the memorialists. They are infractions of the laws of the State of Texas to which the guilty persons, if they be guilty, are responsible.

I deny the jurisdiction of Congress to investigate a matter thus solely within the jurisdiction of the State of Texas.

What will be done? How will the grievances of these men be remedied? They say they have been compelled to leave their homes. They say they had to sacrifice their property. They say they have been trespassed upon. Every act of which they complain is a breach of the laws of the State of Texas. The parties who have trespassed upon them are amenable to those laws. There is no Federal jurisdiction over these parties for such trespasses, and why have an investigation?

This charge is preferred upon the ex parte statement of one single individual, Stephen A. Hackworth. The memorial is signed by three, Stephen A. Hackworth, James L. Moore, and Carl Schutze. I find this note at the foot of the memorial:

By the written authority and request of Messrs. James L. Moore and Carl Schutze, I have signed their names to the above and foregoing petition, this the 6th day of January, 1887.

S. A. HACKWORTH.

So the whole depends upon the single statement of Mr. Hackworth. One single individual makes this charge. It has not been made under oath. The meanest felon in the United States before he can be arraigned is entitled to an investigation by a grand jury selected by a court, and here we have a State arraigned before the Senate and the country on the charge of one man, made ex parte, not under oath.

The facts which lead to this memorial and to the statements in the memorial are few and brief. On election day in November last a young man by the name of Bolton, who lives in Brenham, Washington County, Texas, went out to one of the county precincts in order to bring in the election returns. He was standing at the place of election, at the polls, and while there, without notice, without warning, without explanation, with no word of altercation or quarrel, was shot and killed by a negro and some confederates.

Mr. HOAR. Has the Senator any information as to how the person who was shot was dressed?

Mr. COKE. I have not, but the statements that I make will be substantiated.

Mr. HOAR. The statement which is made is that he was seizing the ballot-boxes, was dressed in a slouch hat coming down over his eyes, with a long coat extending from his chin down to his feet, and a white cloth tied over his face, disguising him so that it was utterly impossible that his nearest friends should know him; and he remained in that dress four hours.

Mr. COKE. He was shot in the daytime, in the presence of a large number of witnesses, when he was doing nothing in the world but waiting to get the result of the election to take back to Brenham. His father was a candidate for county commissioner, and this young man went out to get the result of the election to take back to Brenham, and while there, without any provocation, without any altercation, without any explanation, without any quarrel, he was set upon and murdered by these negroes.

Three of the negroes were arrested, taken to Brenham, and placed in jail. A mob gathered, got into the jail, took the three negroes out, and hung them. That was the commencement of this controversy. Such a mob as will get together in any State of the Union under such provocation got together and hung these men.

The three memorialists, Hackworth, Moore, and Schutze, were very active politicians; had been very active in the election. They had worked the deluded and ignorant negroes up to a condition of frenzy, and prepared them for just such deeds as the murder of young Bolton. When these negroes were hung, without being threatened, without being denied the protection of the laws, I do not know whether their lives were in danger or not, they supposed they were, and left the county.

I telegraphed yesterday for some information to Hon. D. C. Giddings, who resides in Brenham, who is well known in this and the other House, having been a Representative for many years in the other House of Congress, and received an answer, which I send to the desk, and ask that it be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

BRENHAM, TEX., January 26, 1887.

Senator RICHARD COKE, Washington, D. C.:

Stephen A. Hackworth, James L. Moore, and Carl Schutze are of the worst type of scalawags. They have been the main instruments of stirring up strife between the races and are charged with instigating the murder of Bolton on election day. They were not driven from home, nor were their lives threatened, nor were they denied the protection of the law. So far as I know or believe their own guilty consciences caused them to leave the country to its great good. Send you by mail authoritative refutation of charges made in their memorial. Affidavits by the thousand can be furnished as to their want of character and general worthlessness.

D. C. GIDDINGS.

Mr. COKE. Now, Mr. President, that is the statement of a gentleman who is a Democrat of course, but than whom there is no better man in that or any other State. There are gentlemen on this floor who have served in the other House with him; there are many Senators who know him, and they know he would state nothing but the truth; and that is his statement as to this memorial and the allegations in it.

In the election which occurred on the 6th day of November, Washington County being a Republican county, there was a colored man elected to the Legislature. It is a large and populous county; it is a wealthy county. There is a large majority of Republicans in the county; they have control of the county offices and have given majorities heretofore always for the Republican ticket; yet here are three men who claim that they have been compelled to leave that county because they are Republicans. Can that be the reason, sir? Must there not be some other reason? Can a large majority of Republicans be supposed to permit men to be driven out of the county for the simple reason that they are Republicans? The statement bears its own refutation on its face.

In that county the officers, who have always been Republicans, have been of such character that the county has been well nigh bankrupted. Twice within the last few years have county treasurers defaulted for large amounts of money in their possession, and, although the county is Republican, the people came to the conclusion that they must have honest county government, and for their county officers they put up a ticket known as the people's ticket. These men, Hackworth, Moore, and Schutze, Republican bosses, men who had led and deluded the negroes, seeing that the scepter was about to depart from them, used all their power to inflame and delude the negroes; and one of the results of their efforts was the killing of young Bolton in cold blood. They knew these facts to be true; they imagined that their lives were in danger, and they fled the county.

Their consciences made cowards of them. That they were compelled to leave because they were Republicans is refuted by a fact of their own statement that a large majority of their fellow-citizens of Washington County are also Republicans.

We are willing that Washington County, or any other county in Texas, shall be investigated upon a fair presentment of adequate cause, but do object to being arraigned upon the charge of a single individual who has had to leave his county and State and home because there is not public sentiment to maintain him there.

I submit, Mr. President, that the Senate should not adopt this resolution, because to adopt it and allow the good name of one of the States of this Union to be aspersed upon no testimony at all is an injustice that should not be tolerated in the Senate of the United States.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, this memorial is presented by persons who apparently have as high a title to respect as any citizens of the United States. One of them has been the district attorney, a State officer, in the State of Texas, an office employing and requiring a high standard of character and legal capacity. Another has been a county judge, a native Texan. The district attorney is a German, and the editor of a Republican newspaper. Another, Mr. Hackworth, has been county judge, as I say, a native Texan, son of one of Houston's soldiers in the war for the independence of that State. The third is a native of the State of Alabama. All three are men of property, who say that they were earning their living in peaceful, lawful, and honorable ways, and that they have been driven out from their homes on American soil. They were residents of that county. Nobody doubts that. They are refugees and exiles. Nobody doubts or questions that.

Among the facts that they allege is the fact that three colored men, election officers in that county, were taken from the jail and hung by a mob without trial when an application for habeas corpus was depending on the ground that they were imprisoned without right or without lawful charge; and the Senator from Texas admits that so far as the hanging of these men without right was concerned, his information is that it was necessary to do that because a colored man shot down the son of one of the candidates at the polls, who was peaceably and quietly awaiting the result of the election.

Now, Mr. President, without undertaking to pass upon the truth of the information which my honorable friend from Texas has received, anybody who knows human nature or the history of this country will, I think, agree that that is as improbable a story as could have been suggested. In the first place, the colored people in Texas and elsewhere know too well what happens if they, or any of them, make an attack on a white man. It would be very unlikely that, without provocation or insult or any explanation, one of them would shoot down a quiet, peaceable, and unoffending white Democrat who was standing by the polls. Those things do not happen often in the experience of mankind. In the next place, these men say that this peaceable, quiet bystander who was shot, was disguised as a kuklux; was disguised so that his most intimate friend could not have known him or detected him on sight. He had a slouch-hat down over his eyes, a long, loose coat, extending from his chin to his heels, and his whole face except the eyes covered by a white cloth. The Senator from Texas does not deny that. I do not suppose he is instructed about it.

Mr. COKE. The Senator will allow me to interrupt him. I do deny that, and say that there is not one single word of truth in it.

Mr. HOAR. On what authority does the Senator deny it? He was not present.

Mr. COKE. I deny it on the authority of gentlemen who were in Washington County, and who have talked with me, and upon the authority of the newspaper statements of the occurrence at the time.

Mr. HOAR. The communications that have been read do not deny it at any rate, and the Senator did not deny it in his original speech.

It is said that the man lay so clothed four hours. But suppose the Senator does deny it, here are these conflicting assertions, and it would seem that the side of the question which is most confident of its own integrity and correctness would be the one that would desire an investigation, and not the other. It would seem if the persons who are the informants of my honorable friend were quite confident that they were right, that they would be the persons most eager to have the matter investigated and the truth settled, and this charge, which we all hope will prove to be untrue, rejected.

Now these men, the Senator says, have not sworn to their petition. Letters were sent to the chairman of the committee by each of these two other petitioners, stating their desire that Mr. Hackworth should sign their names, and stating that they hoped a delay which would require the sending of the original petition to them and returning it would not take place. They were eager and anxious for the investigation. I have the letters here before me now.

The Senator says that the statement is not under oath. The Constitution of the United States, which secures to every citizen the right of petition, does not require that petitions from citizens of the United States should be under oath, and it is not the fashion or habit or precedent of the Senate to require it.

Mr. President, I do not want to go into this question in advance of the testimony. I do not think the Senate should take the rôle of Rhadamanthus either in dealing with these petitioners or with these parties accused, first to adjudge and afterwards to hear, judicatque damnatque. I think the process of hearing testimony should precede the adjudication and condemnation.

But the Senator says that this is a matter which wholly belongs to the State. These petitioners allege that these transactions took place at a national election, and that there is no republican government at this moment in that county.

The Senator says that they fled from their own fears. The petitioners say that they were conducted by a large number of white Democrats to the cars and to the border of the county, threatened with murder, threatened to share the fate of the three men who had been hung if they returned, and that as one of them left the county there was a stone thrown after him as the cars departed that bore him away, and a pistol shot also.

I do not wish to excite the Senate or the country, or to get excited myself over this matter, especially before the evidence is heard. It seems to me that if the information of my honorable friend from Texas shall turn out to be correct, every member of the Senate will be delighted and gratified at the result; but certainly it is a matter which it behooves the Senate of the United States to look into.

Yesterday some Senators spoke of war in regard to a foreign power whose worst outrage was seizing fishing vessels without any indignity or affront to the individuals they contained, and prohibiting them in one case to buy rations, so that the crew went with short rations for three days. Is the right of an American citizen any the less sacred in the eye of an American Congress when he happens to be on American soil? Is the right of an adopted German citizen thirty years resident here, the editor of a Republican paper, whose columns can be produced and will show whether he is or not, as the Senator from Texas conceives, a stirrer-up or inciter——

Mr. COKE. I will state——

Mr. HOAR. Wait a moment—a stirrer-up or inciter of one race against another. Is the right of that man any the less sacred than that of a Massachusetts fisherman?

Mr. COKE. I will state for the Senator's information that two-thirds of the white people living in Washington County are Germans.

Mr. HOAR. So I understand.

Mr. COKE. And this is the only one who has found it necessary to run away from it.

Mr. HOAR. And that is the complaint, that while a majority of the white citizens of that county are Republicans, a majority of the property owners are Republicans, these men who are the leaders of the Republicans are compelled by Democratic mobs to leave the county. That county does not happen to be situated on an island in the sea by itself. It is situated in the midst of the Democratic State of Texas with its seventy-five or one hundred thousand majority. The State troops of Texas are at the command of the dominant party there. That is the allegation which these men make. Whether true or not true I do not now undertake to say. It is for that reason they desire the authority of the Senate of the United States to ascertain the facts.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I stated yesterday, when this report was made from a committee of which I am a member, that it was made without my approval and against my protest.

I desire now to state that, in my opinion, the petition on which the resolution is based contains on its face evidence of the falsity of the allegations made by the petitioner. I shall not enter into any general discussion of the merits of the case, but I desire to say that hearing the allegation and charge preferred by one individual whose character has been assailed by a Senator who has spoken, who has come to the city and been in conference with counsel and the members of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, after he has stated his case as strongly as he can, he has overstated it, and shown that the very statements which he has made are false.

What is the charge? He charges that in one of the most populous counties of Texas, not upon the frontier of Texas, but in the central part of the State, where law and order reign as they do everywhere else where there are vast congregations of people in our country, there is such a state of terrorism, such a state of outrage, that he has been, because he is a Republican—for that is his statement—innocent of everything else except that he is a Republican, driven from his home and been compelled to seek refuge under the protection of the power of this Capitol.

Now, I state that if the Senator from Massachusetts should come here himself with a declaration of that kind, that the people of Massachusetts would not let him reside in the city in which he resides, simply because he was a Republican, I would not believe his statement; neither will I believe the statement of the man whose memorial he presents.

When this matter came up in the Committee on Privileges and Elections, having had connection with that committee for more than twelve years, and often seen the attempts to use it for political purposes, I protested against the entertainment of the petition and against the resolution. I protest against it in the name of that committee with which I have had the honor to be connected for more than twelve years, that it should be made the dumping ground for the complaints of every scalawag that chooses to come up here and present an indictment against his neighbors. I protest against it because it is derogatory to that committee. I say deliberately, in the face and in the presence of the members of that committee, that the entertainment of such allegations is derogatory to the committee which is one of the oldest committees of this body. It should not be made the vehicle for the dissemination of slander and of lies, too often against the people of the States of this Union. I protest against the entertainment of this resolution because it is derogatory to the character of this high body that, upon the mere allegations of a scalawag who, upon the testimony of Mr. Giddings, is one of the worst men in the State of Texas, this honorable body should be degraded by entertaining his petition and instructing a committee of this body, on his petition, in the face of the telegram of Mr. Giddings, and in the face of the assertions of the Senator from Texas, to investigate his charges. I hope the unanimous voice of the Senate will set their seal of reprobation upon any such attempt at making the Committee on Privileges and Elections, or the Senate of the United States itself, a party to the dissemination of such slanders and outrageous charges upon the people of Texas.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, suppose that this investigation were to take place, and suppose it should turn out to be true, as it will if the investigation does take place turn out either to be true or untrue—suppose it should turn out to be true that the charges made are sustained, what then would be the opinion of the Senator from Delaware as to the propriety of such an investigation upon high public grounds, assuming that we have the constitutional authority to make it?

The honorable Senator, I think, referred to political considerations or some phrase of that kind. What are they? Would it be a very good thing politically for the Republican majority of the Senate to take up a false petition, the petition of a "scalawag," as the polite phrase is, addressed to the Senate of the United States, and proceed to an investigation which turned out to show that the man was a fugitive from true justice, a vagabond and an outcast on the face of the earth, guilty of crimes which compelled him to flee from a county where law and order and Republicanism did prevail? Would that be hopeful for the Republicans of the Senate or of the country?

I should rather think not. It would show that the Republicans of the Senate had had too great a respect for the right of petition and inquiry, and had been led into an unnecessary investigation on the idea that there might possibly be something in these complaints of this acknowledged citizen.

Suppose, on the other hand, it should turn out that what these gentlemen say is true—I will call them gentlemen as distinguished from scalawags, for every citizen is presumptively a gentleman until he is proved to be something else—suppose it should turn out that what these gentlemen say is true in substance, and we find a solid Democratic body of Senators saying, "No, we will not investigate it because on a telegram or information we have received we do not believe there is anything in it." That might have a political effect. It might tend to show that the Democratic party is true to the instincts of its organization and its practices, and that it does not believe in a government of the people and by the people and in the equal administration and protection of the laws, unless that is to be attained through a government of white men of particular political opinions.

So, then, the reference of the Senator from Delaware to political considerations may have some weight. But, let us leave that. The question is whether we shall consider this respectful petition which states with substantial detail what these petitioners describe as, and what if truly described are, enormous outrages against the rights of American citizens as such, their rights to have political opinions and to express them, and to get all the votes they honestly can for a member of Congress of either side, their being assaulted, pursued, and their being unable to obtain from the State authorities there, as they say, any redress or equal protection of the laws, and having been, therefore, driven away, escorted, for the safety of their lives, by respectable white Democrats to the train to get them away from the more numerous part of the Democratic party which is differently constituted.

Mr. President, is there any doubt as to the constitutional authority and the duty of the Senate in such a case? The Constitution reposes in Congress the protection of Congressional elections. The Constitution says, since the fourteenth amendment to that Constitution, that every citizen of the United States shall in every State be entitled to the equal protection of the law. That is, that he shall have redress in the courts of that State, as they may be constituted, and shall have fair play, and shall not be mobbed or driven to run away, so that he can not appeal to the courts. Is it not, therefore, a constitutional inquiry to know whether any citizen of Vermont or of Texas has been in either State denied the equal protection of the laws? If it is not, then the fourteenth amendment was passed in vain, no matter how clear its language is; and I am afraid in some States and places in this country it has been passed in vain.

Then, Mr. President, it is perfectly clear, I submit, that it is within the constitutional authority of this body to make investigations into how citizens have been treated in respect to Congressional elections; it is within the constitutional authority of this body to make investigations as to how citizens have been treated in respect to equal protection under the laws of any State, where they say they have been denied. Any one who denies either of these propositions is, whether he means it or not, an opponent of the Constitution of the United States.

The simple question then is whether we will refuse to inquire because the opponents of these petitioners say they can not prove their petition. That would be a curious way of administering justice, and that is all I wish to say about it. I can only repeat that I am astonished that this resolution should not have passed by a unanimous vote of the Senate.

Mr. EUSTIS. Mr. President, I am a member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and I will vote against the adoption of this resolution. I take it that when we enter into an investigation it must be to lay a basis for legislation. We have nothing whatever to do with the condition of any community in any State, whether the community hangs people or whether the community expels people from its midst or harasses and oppresses people. I do not see that the Congress of the United States has anything whatever to do with reference to those offenses admitting them to exist. But if we desire to legislate upon a given subject, then, in order to render that legislation such as it ought to be, we may inquire into those conditions and circumstances which should become the basis of our proposed legislation. I do not understand the object of this inquiry to be to pass any law in reference to these occurrences. If that is not the object, what can be the object? The only other object can be to make political capital, to wave the bloody shirt, and it seems to me that this is a little in advance of the usual season, the Presidential election, to indulge in any such performance.

I represent a State where there have been a great many investigations. I remember the celebrated investigation in the case of Eliza Pinkston, where was charged a much more horrible crime than is described in this memorial. I remember how the Senate of the United States undertook that investigation, and how an attempt was successfully made to deceive the American people. What was the consequence? It resulted finally in a universal condemnation of any such proceeding or practice by the Senate.

As the Senator from Texas has well stated, the courts of Texas are in session. They have officers, they have grand juries, they have all the machinery which is necessary to arrest, try, and punish all persons who violate the law of the State of Texas. We have on the statute-books of the United States all the laws that are necessary to protect any voter at a Congressional election. The laws of the United States bristle with penalties. They are severe laws. They refer to every detail of conduct in any way possibly connected with any Federal election. And I say that it would tax the ingenuity of a Senator or a lawyer to make one single addition to that volume of legislation by which any new offense could be denounced or any stronger penalties could be inflicted. You need no more information than you have in reference to possible outrages at elections in the South. You have the history of every incident that has occurred and a great deal that has never occurred; and upon that, whatever the truth or whatever the falsehood that has been gathered, has been predicated the Federal legislation with reference to national elections in the Southern States. And, therefore, I consider this simply a proposition to make political capital and nothing else. It can have no other possible effect except to represent to the Northern people that Republicans are being driven from Southern communities simply because they are Republicans.

The Senator from Texas has denied that such is the fact with reference to that particular community, as I would deny if the charge were made against any community in the State of Louisiana that that is the motive or the object for any personal injury that may be inflicted upon individuals. That is not the cause of these disturbances, and you have no more right to charge these disturbances and outrages, so called, to political motives than we have to charge to such motives what occurs almost every day in every State of the North, as appears by the press, where all sorts of outrages continually occur. People are taken out of jail in Western States and Northern States and hung; people are banished from communities; lynch law exists as much at the North as it does at the South; and yet we of the South never pretend for a moment to attribute those violations of law and those outrages to political causes, and when the accusation is made against us we indignantly repel it because it is unfounded and it is untrue, and I do not, as a Senator, propose to spend the money of the people of the United States for an investigation that will turn out to be utterly unprofitable so far as any legislation is concerned and is simply to make political capital for the Republican party.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I do not regard this as a question that we are at liberty to consider or set aside as we choose. I think the consideration of this petition is a duty. The Constitution of the United States in language familiar to everybody says:

> Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

It does not require that this petition shall be supported by the evidence necessary to induce a presentment by a grand jury. Nothing is said in Constitution or statute, and nothing is found in usage, to prescribe any such necessary accompaniment of a petition. It is possible the petitioners may be illiterate, ignorant of law, unable to present their case as it ought to be presented; so much the more reason why the sovereign Government of the nation is bound to consider it.

But gentlemen deny that Congress has any jurisdiction. This is an old question after all. Section 4 of the first article of the Constitution says:

> The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators.

I shall agree probably with any of the gentlemen in the general definition of the relations between the State and the Federal Government; I shall acknowledge that murder might be a daily practice in any county of Connecticut or of the State of Texas, and the Federal Government be without remedy, for there is no Federal law that covers any State of the Union in such matters except in so much of that State as may be included within grants to the Federal Government for dock-yards, forts, &c. Everybody knows that. Everybody knows that it might so happen that, for example, in the great State of New York there might be one hundred men in arms on each side contesting for the governorship and the control of the State, and the Federal Government would be obliged to stand by idle for months, if you choose for years, theoretically obliged, and unless these contending parties should in some way trench upon the laws of the United States concerning the postal or customs service or the conduct of the judicial duties of its officers—in the absence of any such trespass on Federal rights the United States would be bound to stand by idle, unless the governor or Legislature of the State in the circumstances provided by the Constitution should make protest and call upon the Federal Government for its assistance.

I acknowledge and take pride in that division of power between the Federal and State Governments which leaves in general the protection of the personal rights of the people to the local authorities. It is best there; and we hear enough now-a-days of tendencies to trespass upon what I consider not alone the rights but the duties of the States. But in this case and cases like it the power is not only unquestioned but the duty is irresistible. The Federal Government has the right to prescribe entirely the manner of choosing Senators of the United States, excepting only that it may not change the place selected by the State; and under that we have a law familiar to every body in the Senate by which the Federal Government prescribes the day upon which the Legislature of a sovereign State shall vote, the manner in which it shall vote on the first day in each House; the manner of its assembling in joint convention upon the second day; the duty, choice failing on that day, of continuing the ballot from day to day. It prescribesas much in detail—more in detail than any State law preceding ever did prescribe the details—of electing a United States Senator. There is similar power over the choosing of Representatives in the other House of Congress.

I affirm that it is not to be denied that in case any State should fail to open the polls for the choice of Representatives in Congress, or should so conduct them as to practically deny the rights of the people, it would be the right and, under proper circumstances, the duty of the Federal Government to provide for polling places in every Congressional district in a State, to provide for the receivers and the counters of votes, to provide for the returns of the election direct to the Federal Government. Restricted as are the powers of the Federal Government in many respects, in whatever pertains to the maintenance of the existence of that Government, in whatever pertains to the rightful share of the citizen in that Government, the power is complete, undivided, and unshadowed even. The relation is direct between the citizen and the National Government, if the Government chooses to make it so.

Mr. BUTLER. May I ask the Senator a question there?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUTLER. I have not read the petition carefully. Will the Senator inform me whether there is any allegation in this petition or complaint, or whatever you may choose to call it, that there has been any infringement of rights in an election of a United States Senator? Does it not refer entirely to an election for the lower House of Congress?

Mr. HAWLEY. It refers to an election for the lower House of Congress. There were two candidates for Congress voted for at that election, and at three of the polling-places the boxes were destroyed.

Mr. BUTLER. Then I submit to the Senator from Connecticut that according to his own statement, the House of Representatives has absolute jurisdiction over the subject.

Mr. HAWLEY. I was about to say that if the Republican defeated at that election shall contest the seat in the House of Representatives, that will present a question belonging to the House; but the question whether by the general consent and practical co-operation of a whole community the national rights of a citizen have been entirely denied and nullified is a question we have the right to consider and that we must consider when a citizen of the United States comes under the Constitution to present his grievances to this body.

I dislike these discussions as much as anybody, and I am as much of a States-rights man within proper limits, I think, as any man on the other side of the House; but I have no doubt of my power here as a legislator for the National Government.

I do not go into the details of the petition. One of the arguments, if it may be so called, on the other side is to defame the character of the petitioners. The case may be considered to be substantially admitted by the gentlemen on the other side who say that these men had to leave their county because there is not public sentiment enough to maintain them there. That is precisely the allegation of the petition.

One Senator says that the motives are solely political. In one sense it may be so, for these three gentlemen are active and leading Republicans.

One Senator says we have no right to charge this conduct on the part of Democratic citizens of Washington County, Texas, to political motives; but the petition says these men are Republicans, and that they were driven out of the county because they were Republicans. The Senator from Texas himself says they are leading Republicans; nor does he allege against them any crime whatever. He speaks of them with characteristic contempt as "scalawags." That name, I think, has become historical Everybody knows what it means. It does not imply that the gentleman to whom that term may be directed is not a citizen of the highest personal character in the State. It does not imply that he may not have been even a gallant confederate soldier, as two of these petitioners were. One of them is the son of a veteran of the Texan war of independence, born and residing in Texas all his life, and a confederate soldier. There is no shadow resting upon his life, no charge of crime or dishonor; nothing to derogate from his character as a citizen; but he is spoken of with scorn and contempt here as "a scalawag." That term has gone into history, and has a meaning clearly known to the people of the United States. It means only that a man of the South as distinguished from a man of the North is a resolute Republican in his own locality. It is intended to convey, no matter how much of reproach and ignominy, but that is the simple fact.

Now, sir, these men tell you in a petition which they will swear to, which they will bring the witnesses to prove, that on the night of the election, while the votes were being counted in a certain precinct, a number of men appeared in the well-known kuklux disguise in that room, that pistols were drawn, that undoubtedly the intention was to do what they had done in other places, destroy the ballot-boxes and reduce the Republican majority in that county, that one negro against the advice of all the white Republicans—that will be proved, too, for the negroes were told, "keep your guns and pistols away; don't have any fighting about this matter; if there is any, let it be done by white men; you keep still, because they will simply massacre you"—but one colored man raised a shotgun and shot one of the men in disguise. That he was the son of a candidate was not known to the man who shot him. He was in that disguise and lay hours in that disguise. That issue is joined, and if the petitioners do not prove it you may reproach them.

But why should the Senator from Louisiana declare that this petition is false, or the Senator from Delaware declare that the petition is false? Why should either heap reproaches on these men? They come here clear; prima facie they are respectable citizens of the United States petitioning for a redress of grievances under the law. I affirm that they are such, and that the evidence will show it; that they are residents—two of them natives of Texas, and have always been there; two of them confederate soldiers, and without any stain whatever on their character; respectable in church, respectable in society, officeholders year after year by the confidence of their fellow-citizens.

The case is absolutely without a flaw. I considered personally every detail of it. I did not seek any connection with the matter. This wandering, banished citizen of Texas came to my room to tell me his case. He said he came to find General LOGAN, and General LOGAN was sick. I heard his story. What could I do? Was it for me to say, "I can not attend to this—I am busy," or to shove it over on to some other Senator, to pass it along? That is not my habit. It came to me under the Constitution and the laws as a Senator of the United States, and I advised him as to the manner of preparing his petition, advised him to be careful about his evidence and his statements, questioned him again and again, made him write to Texas for confirmation about one thing and another, and then when he had prepared a respectful petition for a redress of grievance I presented it, and I am here to defend the right to present it and to assert the duty of the Senate to hear it respectfully, and I am here also to assert my belief in the general truth of the statements these men have made. They state a grievance within the reach of the Congress of the United States—a grievance lawfully and honorably presented.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, I had no knowledge of any of the circumstances or of the existence of any foundation for the complaint that forms the subject of the petition and of the action of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, until the matter was opened in that body. What had already taken place on that subject was the presentation of the petition by these citizens of Texas and of the United States making a case of grievance, of oppression, and of denial and suppression of the right of suffrage at a Congressional election. Of the completeness and gravity of the subject complained of, and of the definiteness and accuracy of the details which supported the imputation, no one on reading this petition can doubt. When presented here there was no hesitation on the part of the Senate in receiving it as one suitable for entertainment here—respectful, grave, and important. Then it was referred to this committee having charge of such considerations, and that committee has reported these resolutions after an examination and discussion of this petition.

What now is the Senate asked to do? It is asked to take order for an examination into this very matter as it has occurred in the State of Texas. What is the objection to that? It can not be made an objection that the subject-matter is not within the jurisdiction of the United States legislation. It is quite true that as separated from legislation now in existence and legislation that may be contemplated in guarding and preserving the integrity of the suffrage at Federal elections, this subject is within that purview.

It may be said that this is a matter which has been bandied about, if you please, for many years under the imputation of false accusations on the one side and of unredressed grievances on the other. When now there is an opportunity, which, looking at it from one side and the other of this Chamber, might be rightly treated in the same spirit and in the same purpose, are we to be turned off from the grave and responsible duty brought to our attention by treating it in advance as a matter of political agitation and of political contumely and reproach?

For myself, it seems to me that there could be no circumstance in time or fact that would give a better opportunity to realize to the people of this country whether these grievances were real, or whether they were false and political for breeding ill-blood between the sections of the country. This occurred in the open daylight. This occurred during a period of several days, down to the final expulsion of these men. It was in a populous and, let us suppose, a prosperous region in Texas. Can it be true that such things are to be done in that population, and no voice either of justice or of public opinion or of intervention by the authorities of the law raised to touch or care for such an occurrence? If so, it rises from the condition of a private grievance to a wide and important public mischief regarding the suffrage and regarding the freedom of the suffrage.

If, on the other hand, this is but the aggravation of politics, if it is the timidity of timorous men, if there be no array of the public and the community against these men, but whatever there has been of severity or of injury has been of private malice, then it is of great importance to this country, it is of great importance to the State of Texas, it is of great importance to the Southern people, that now, when there is in their hands an opportunity to prove, under the authority of the Senate of the United States, that these are wavings of the bloody shirt and meant to affect elections, I can not conceive that the Senator from Louisiana could find a better time than now to have this investigation. He spoke of it as unusual to be thus far in advance of the election. Why, Mr. President, in that regard it is wisely and happily timed, and also in the fact that it immediately follows after an election, a prompt complaint, a prompt inquiry, a well-drawn indictment in all its details, a subject for investigation, so that now we have before us not only the question of these outrages, which may have occurred, or their refutation if they have not occurred, but an opportunity to inspect, in the presence of the people of the United States, this larger, and graver, and more serious problem of whether there is an array in communities that makes it impossible that freedom in the suffrage should be enjoyed.

I do not believe, Mr. President, that there is any community in the Northern country, I hope there is not but an exceptional case in the Southern country, where the operation of the personal right of suffrage is an indifferent subject to the people of the United States, when its operation is not only affected by temporary and casual irritation and excitement, but there is an absolute and complete array, however circumscribed, of an opinion and a purpose that the suffrage shall not be free. If in the city of New York, or in the city of Chicago, or in any of the smaller cities of the North it should be claimed here, upon an exhibition of facts like those now detailed, that there had been a denial of the right of suffrage and that the community had been indifferent, and the authorities of justice had not put its powers in operation, and it should be shown that thus in a single case an opportunity was given of throwing the whole weight and power of the Government of the United States, I do not believe that, in respect to Federal elections, such suppression of rights would be allowed to go without inquiry. If by any combination—casual if you please, temporary it is to be hoped—of organized opinion and action such a suppression prevails in any case, it deserves the attention of Congress.

Mr. President, the Senator from Louisiana has said that he repels these imputations. Would it not be better instead of repelling these imputations that these imputations should be proved to be false? Certainly there is no disposition in this Chamber, there is no disposition in the interest of politics, that I know of, that there should be a false and spurious agitation on any of these subjects. But when there does come to us an opportunity to ascertain the facts, in the interest of peace, in the interest of good feeling, in the interest of the suppression of false accusations and large and extravagant imputations upon neighborhoods and upon communities, why should we not seize this opportunity and by a general vote on both sides of this Senate show that, with the Senator from Texas, who repels and repudiates the basis and substance of these imputations, an opportunity will be afforded to disprove them? Let us not present the opportunity through the Senate to inflame public opinion by refused opportunities of investigation. If the allegations made should be discountenanced by the actual examination, that would prove that what is here alleged is a false and injurious imputation.

Now, I have not formed the least opinion. I am as free to accept the result of examination that should favor the views presented by the Senator from Texas as that which should be presented by these humble petitioners. I have only spoken thus far in the committee, and speak thus far here, to say that there is now presented to the Senate an opportunity, as I hope by common acceptance, to investigate a matter that by law and the Constitution is within our rightful inspection, and that under the circumstances presented to us, freed entirely from political agitation impending, to ascertain whether there be or be not foundation for such imputations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the resolution.

Mr. BUTLER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to offer an amendment to the resolution, after the word "be," in the fourth line of the first resolution.

The object of the amendment is to require that this investigation shall be in the county of Washington, in the State of Texas. That is the point where it is alleged these wrongs occurred, and that is the point where the committee should go to make the inquiry.

I was a member of the committee to investigate affairs in Copiah County, in the State of Mississippi, and the committee took up their residence in the Saint Charles Hotel, in the city of New Orleans, 140 miles from Copiah County, away from the scene where the wrongs were alleged to have occurred; and I suppose that unless the Senate instruct the committee to go to Washington County, Texas, to make this investigation there the people of Washington County will be investigated away from themselves and outside of the State. I want the committee, therefore, to have the examination, if this resolution should pass, in the county where the troubles are said to have occurred.

Mr. HOAR. I hope that amendment will be rejected. The committee should have the discretion left with them to decide where they shall conduct the investigation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Delaware will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 4, after the word "be," it is proposed to insert—

And that such investigation shall be made in Washington County, Texas, where the alleged wrongs are said to have occurred.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before the Senator from Florida proceeds, the Chair is in doubt—not having been present yesterday at 2 o'clock—whether the agricultural experiment-station bill is the unfinished business. The Chair believes that the motion which was adopted displaces that bill as the unfinished business, and gives several other bills a priority to it, but such evidently was not the understanding of the Senate at the time. The Chair wishes to be instructed as to his duty.

Mr. HOAR. I hope we shall proceed with the pending resolution. We can take up the unfinished business afterwards.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the resolution which has been under discussion until it be disposed of.

Mr. GEORGE. Would that displace the unfinished business?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question will then come up as to what is the unfinished business.

Mr. HOAR. The Senate will undoubtedly agree that it shall not displace the pending order. They can take up the pending order again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts to continue.

Mr. HAWLEY. I should like to say a word, lest there be any question on this point. I had the honor to be in the chair at the time the unfinished business was reached at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon, and the experiment-station bill was laid aside. I think I am correct in saying that the understanding of the Senate was that it should be the unfinished business for to-day. The Senator from Mississippi especially said, "I will not make any contest against this constitutional amendment if it can be agreed that it shall not permanently displace the experiment-station bill," and nobody objected.

Mr. GEORGE. I hope that we shall proceed with the unfinished business. It has been laid over now for about four weeks, and I think we can dispose of it to-day if we get it up. I hope the Senate will not take any action which will prevent the disposal of that bill to-day.

Mr. HARRIS. I, of course, have no objection to that bill being taken up and becoming the unfinished business, but upon yesterday at 2 o'clock when the unfinished business was laid before the Senate the Senator from New Hampshire proposed to move that it be informally laid aside in order that he might ask the Senate to consider the woman suffrage resolution. I raised the question of order that such a motion was not in order, that we must first in some way dispose of the unfinished business. The Senator from New Hampshire then moved to postpone the consideration of the unfinished business until to-morrow. By a majority of the Senate it was so postponed.

Mr. MORGAN. Until 2 o'clock to-day.

Mr. HARRIS. It was after 2 o'clock when it was disposed of, and it was postponed until to-day at 2 o'clock. That motion was sustained by a majority of the Senate. Then a majority of the Senate voted to proceed to consider the resolution of the Senator from New Hampshire. That is the exact state of the transaction.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that the motion to postpone made by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] would displace the bill; but it was evidently the unanimous consent, or rather the understanding of the Senate, that the agricultural bill should be taken up to-day. The question now is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] that the Senate continue the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. HARRIS. Unanimous consent was asked to informally lay aside the unfinished business so that it might hold its place. I objected, and therefore no such agreement was made; hence the Senator from New Hampshire had to resort to the motion to postpone in order to get his joint resolution before the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The motion of the Senator from Massachusetts is certainly in order.

Mr. BLAIR. It was the distinct understanding yesterday that the unfinished business as a matter parliamentarily considered was simply postponed until to-day at 2 o'clock, but not displaced. It may have been an error, but it was the universal understanding, I think, that it comes up at 2 o'clock to-day as unfinished business as though no action had been taken.

Mr. VEST. I ask consent now to move to take up the bill (S. 2288) to incorporate the Atlantic and Pacific Ship-Railway Company, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No such motion can be entertained now.

Mr. HOAR. I think we can finish this resolution in a few minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves to continue the consideration of the pending resolution.

Mr. HOAR. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] on all political questions, and I therefore announce my pair with him on this question. If he were present, I should vote "nay" and I suppose he would vote "yea."

Mr. DAWES (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY], now absent. If he were here I should vote "yea."

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON], otherwise I should vote "nay."

Mr. BECK (when the name of Mr. VOORHEES was called.) The Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] is paired with his colleague, [Mr. HARRISON], having transferred the pair of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], who would vote "nay" if here.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. PLATT. When my name was called I supposed I was paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE], but as he has since voted, I vote "yea."

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I am paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. FAIR]. If he were here I should vote "yea;" he would vote "nay."

Mr. MILLER (after having voted in the affirmative). I have had a standing pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA]. I saw him in the Chamber to-day and therefore supposed that he would be here to vote on this and all other questions; but as he is not here he undoubtedly expects me to maintain the pair. I therefore announce the pair with the Senator from West Virginia and withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—33.

Allison,	Evarts,	Mahone,	Sewell,
Blair,	Farwell,	Manderson,	Sherman,
Bowen,	Frye,	Mitchell of Pa.	Spooner,
Chace,	Hale,	Morrill,	Teller,
Cheney,	Hawley,	Palmer,	Williams,
Conger,	Hoar,	Platt,	Wilson of Iowa.
Cullom,	Ingalls,	Pugh,
Dolph,	Jones of Nevada,	Sabin,
Edmunds,	McMillan,	Sawyer,

NAYS—26.

Beck,	Colquitt,	Harris,	Vance,

Butler,	Harrison,	Mitchell of Oregon,	Voorhees.
Camden,	Jones of Florida,	Plumb,
Cameron,	Kenna,	Riddleberger,
Dawes,	Maxey,	Stanford,

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution reported yesterday by Mr. HOAR, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY].

Mr. SAULSBURY. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). I will announce for the last time my pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON.] If he were present, I should vote "yea" and he would vote "nay" on this question.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. FAIR]. If he were here I should vote "nay" and he would vote "yea."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 28, nays 32; as follows:

YEAS—28.

Beck,	Colquitt,	Harris,	Ransom,
Berry,	Eustis,	Jones of Arkansas,	Saulsbury,
Blackburn,	George,	Kenna,	Vance,
Brown,	Gibson,	McPherson,	Vest,

ABSENT—16.

Aldrich,	Dawes,	Jones of Florida,	Riddleberger,
Butler,	Dolph,	Maxey,	Stanford,
Camden,	Fair,	Mitchell of Oreg.	Van Wyck,
Cameron,	Harrison,	Plumb,	Voorhees.

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the adoption of the resolution, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I do not propose to make any speech on the pending resolution, but I wish to say that there is an objection to it which does not concern the subject-matter to which it relates, and that is the distrust of the people of the country which the resolution asserts. It is an attack upon the great organic principle of this Government that the safety and security of human life and property safely rests in the public opinion of the communities where the people live and where the property is situated. It is a declaration that the Senate of the United States, separated widely from the sympathies of the people, undertakes to declare that the people of the different States and communities can not be trusted with their own protection, but seventy-six men here can exercise power over them in their local affairs. It is an attack upon the very life of our Government and our institutions, and is a declaration in favor of monarchy and aristocratic forms of power, and the tendency of much of our legislation and all such resolutions is in this direction.

Suppose it is true that the whole people of Washington County, in Texas, are a set of ruthless violators of the law, unrestrained by principle or by religion, as the resolution asserts. Suppose you go beyond that, and assert that the people of the State of Texas are utterly depraved and can not be trusted with the protection of life and property in their midst, what do you then say but that the people are unworthy of trust and confidence, and that the people of a particular locality alone can be trusted with the functions which the Constitution has declared shall be reposed in them everywhere? What do you say but that great communities of people of States are incapable of self-government, and must be governed by centralized power, even in respect to the protection of life and property? What do we say but that the government under the Constitution and the Union must be subverted by the Senate and a new government made?

That is the objection to all of this character of legislation. While it is within the competency of the Senate to inquire as to anything, and it has power to do it whether it concerns the country or not, this is a declaration that we distrust the people, and declare that they can not be trusted with the protection of life and property, and the discharge of the duties which are imposed upon them under our form of government. I shall vote against it for this reason: I think our present form of government under our Constitution and laws is better than that which the resolution proposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the resolution.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. FAIR]. If he were here I should vote "yea," and he would vote "nay."

Mr. BECK (when Mr. VOORHEES'S name was called). I desire to announce that upon this question the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] is paired with his colleague [Mr. HARRISON]. If the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] were present he would vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to announce that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON], as has been stated by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK], is paired with his colleague [Mr. VOORHEES]. If the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON] were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. ALLISON. I have a general pair with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL]. He has not voted, and therefore I refrain from voting. If he were present I should vote for the resolution.

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—31.

Aldrich,	Evarts,	McMillan,	Sawyer,
Blair,	Farwell,	Mahone,	Sewell,
Bowen,	Frye,	Manderson,	Sherman,
Chase,	Hale,	Miller,	Spooner,
Cheney,	Hawley,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Telier,
Conger,	Hoar,	Morrill,	Williams,
Cullom,	Ingalls,	Platt,	Wilson of Iowa.
Edmunds,	Jones of Nevada,	Sabin,

NAYS—26.

Beck,	Eustis,	Jones of Arkansas,	Saulsbury,
Berry,	George,	Kenna,	Vance,
Blackburn,	Gibson,	McPherson,	Vest,
Brown,	Gorman,	Morgan,	Walthall,
Call,	Gray,	Payne,	Whitthorne.
Coke,	Hampton,	Pugh,
Colquitt,	Harris,	Ransom,

ABSENT—19.

Allison,	Dawes,	Maxey,	Stanford,
Butler,	Dolph,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Van Wyck,
Camden,	Fair,	Palmer,	Voorhees,
Cameron,	Harrison,	Plumb,	Wilson of Md.
Cockrell,	Jones of Florida,	Riddleberger,

So the resolution was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GEORGE. I move to take up the bill (S. 372) to establish agricultural experiment-stations in connection with the colleges established in the several States under the provisions of an act approved July 2, 1862, and of the acts supplementary thereto.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. VEST. I move, as an amendment to that motion, to take up Senate bill 2288, which is a special order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is bound to hold that the amendment is not in order. The rule provides that a motion to take up a particular bill can not be amended by a motion to take up another bill.

Mr. VEST. Is it in order to move to postpone the agricultural bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Such a motion would not be in order until after it is taken up.

Mr. VEST. I shall make a motion, if it is taken up, to lay it aside.

Mr. BECK. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. I ask whether Senate bill 2578 is not the next regular special order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By strict parliamentary rule the bill in charge of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] has lost its priority, and the bill referred to by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK], which is called the railroads attorneys' bill, is the first special order. But the motion of the Senator from Mississippi to proceed to the consideration of the agricultural bill is in order.

Mr. BECK. Then Senate bill 2578 is the first regular special order after the agricultural bill is disposed of?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. HARRIS. Without a motion to take up the agricultural bill, I suppose the bill referred to by the Senator from Kentucky would be the special order for to-day, would it not?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It stands at the head of the special orders, and would come up next after the agricultural bill, if the latter bill be now taken up. The question is upon agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Mississippi to proceed to the consideration of the agricultural bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. There were three special orders, and we disposed of one of them yesterday. Now there are two. I have no objection to taking up the special orders as they come. The bill to which I refer has been on the Calendar over seven months.

Mr. CULLOM. To what bill does the Senator refer?

Mr. VEST. I refer to the bill (S. 2288) to incorporate the Atlantic and Pacific Ship-Railway Company, and for other purposes. Unless that bill is taken up and disposed of at the present session it is the end of the whole project; no work can be done during the coming summer.

Mr. GEORGE. I think we can get through with the agricultural bill in an hour or two.

Mr. VEST. I shall not make a motion to postpone it. I want to have the bills taken up as they are named in the list of special orders.

AGRICULTURAL EXPERIMENT-STATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 372) to establish agricultural experiment-stations in connection with the colleges established in the several States under the provisions of an act approved July 2, 1862, and of the acts supplementary thereto, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. PLUMB, in section 4, line 4, after the word "agriculture," to strike out all down to and including the word "based," in line 7, as follows:

To determine annually a standard of the ingredients of commercial fertilizers, upon which the analysis of such fertilizers, as far as made by said stations, shall be based.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, when this bill was last before the Senate I was addressing the Senate on what I supposed to be a motion to strike out the fourth section. At all events, the objections to the bill that I was arguing at the time went to the fourth section.

My objection to the bill is really this, that it does not place within the power of the States any control over this subject. The bill merely contains a declaration that money is appropriated to the States—$15,000 to each State—for the purpose of maintaining these agricultural experimental farms, and then, as I observed when I had the floor on this bill before, the bill proceeds immediately after making that declaration, which can scarcely be called an appropriation, to require that this money shall be put into the hands of such agent or officer as the boards of trustees may appoint for the purpose of receiving the money. It then requires in its next provision that the board of trustees or other governing body of the college at which such station is located shall file an agreement as to the method of disbursing this fund; that they will maintain a farm of 25 acres in connection with the college, and that they will in other respects execute the provisions of the law in good faith. Then follows a provision, which I will read:

And shall also have executed and filed with said Secretary—

That is, the Secretary of the Treasury—their bond in the penal sum of $15,000, with two sufficient sureties, approved by the clerk of a court of record in such State, conditioned on the faithful expenditure of and accounting for all moneys so received.

I object that while this is a formal declaration of an appropriation to the States for the purpose of maintaining these experimental farms, it is really no appropriation at all. The very first step you take after making the appropriation is to require that the payment of the money shall be made into the hands of a person selected, not by the State, but selected by the board of trustees, and from that time forward all accountability is to the Government of the United States, and that accountability is secured by a bond which is made payable to the United States on the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

I think that the friends of this bill ought to place the control of these agricultural colleges and experimental stations entirely in the hands of the States. That is the effect of the act creating the colleges. The Congress of the United States did not provide the manner in which boards of trustees or other agents of the colleges should be elected, but the scrip arising from the public lands, or the scrip that was issued as an incumbrance or lien upon public lands, was all placed in the hands of the States to be by them employed under certain conditions and regulations in the establishment and conduct of these colleges.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the laws of Alabama enacted to carry into effect the agricultural college laws of the United States. In the last constitution of that State, which was adopted in 1875, in section 9, of article 13, it is declared:

The State University and the Agricultural and Mechanical College shall each be under the management and control of a board of trustees. The board for the university shall consist of two members from the Congressional district in which the university is located, and one from each of the other Congressional districts in the State. The board for the Agricultural and Mechanical College shall consist of two members from the Congressional district in which the college is located, and one from each of the other Congressional districts in the State. Said trustees shall be appointed by the governor, by and with the advice and consent of the senate, and shall hold office for a term of six years, and until their successors shall be appointed and qualified. After the first appointment each board shall be divided into three classes, as nearly equal as may be. The seats of the first class shall be vacated at the expiration of two years, and those of the second class in four years, and those of the third class at the end of six years from the date of appointment, so that one-third may be chosen biennally. No trustee shall receive any pay or emolument other than his actual expenses incurred in the discharge of his duties as such. The governor shall be ex officio president, and the superintendent of education ex officio a member of each of said board of trustees.

We find there that in the constitution of the State, predicated upon these acts of Congress, we have incorporated these agricultural colleges as a part of the State government, and have imposed such obligations upon the Legislature in respect of them that we are compelled to pursue this precise course in the administration, and the Legislature of that State can not give to one of these boards of trustees any compensation for their services beyond the actual expenses incurred in the performance of their official duties.

Mr. GEORGE. I will state to the Senator from Alabama that the committee have agreed to strike out the provision in the bill requiring a bond.

Mr. MORGAN. Then I have not any more remarks to make about that subject. But I think the committee ought now to proceed further than to give the legislative control of these agricultural establishments into the hands of the States, and not reserve the direction of these colleges in the hands of the Department of Agriculture or wherever else you propose to put it.

By the laws of Alabama the board of directors have the election of a president and a competent and sufficient corps of instructors, &c., who shall constitute the faculty of the college, and each one of the faculty shall receive such salary as may be fixed by the board. Then connected with that is a military department. The law provides that there shall be established by the board a military department of the college, and the board of directors shall elect a commandant and such other officers as may be necessary for the department. The law further provides that the president of the college shall make a report to the General Assembly at the commencement of each session of the amount of funds received under this chapter, the expenditure of the same, and the general operations and condition of the college.

Now, this $15,000 the president of the board would be required to account for to the State Legislature annually, and yet he is required by the bill to account for it to the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States. The effect of the bill, if these provisions are kept in, is that the Government of the United States require the accounts to be rendered annually, and that duty is devolved upon officers of the State, appointed under the constitution of the State, than whom there can be no others provided by law in Alabama, and they are also to be officers of the Government of the United States, accountable to that Government for the administration of this fund.

There is no necessity at all, it seems to me, for getting the bill into such a condition. Let the control of the fund be in the hands of one government or the other, and if we must have officers of the United States Government to administer this fund, so far as Alabama is concerned, do not put that duty upon those officers who are mentioned in the constitution of the State as being the officers of the agricultural college in that State.

That difficulty can be very easily remedied if the committee see proper to do it. At the proper time, after other amendments are disposed of, I shall move an amendment which I think will have the effect of correcting the bill in the event that the committee themselves do not come forward with some proposition of that character.

There is one other matter. I notice that in the sixth section it is made the duty of the boards of trustees of these colleges to keep up and maintain a farm of 25 acres in connection with each college. Precisely what that means I do not know. Does it mean a farm upon lands adjacent to and connected in that way with the college, or a farm which may be under the control of the board in some other part of the State? I do not understand it.

I wish now to inform the committee and the Senate how that provision would operate in Alabama. Our State has contributed money for the purpose of establishing an agricultural experimental station. We made various efforts to establish a farm of that kind in connection with the college at Auburn, but Auburn happens to be in a healthy, piney-woods region of country, and the place was selected on that account. The land there is very sandy, and very poor, whereas the great body of agricultural land in Alabama that is of any great value for agricultural purposes is found in the limestone formations of the valley of the Tennessee River and the shell-lime formations, as they are called, of the black belt in Central and Southern Alabama, that belt corresponding in its geological structure, I believe, with the southern part of Illinois and Indiana, the true black-belt prairie.

It is perfectly obvious, and we have proved it by experience in Alabama, that experiments of an agricultural nature made upon these sand lands are of no value when you come to apply them to the prairie lands and to the red lands, and yet very much the larger and most productive portion of the lands in Alabama fit for agriculture are either red lime lands or else they are black prairie lands.

So, if the meaning of the sixth section is that the farm shall be in actual juxtaposition to or with the college, it will be very unfortunate in our State. After we had established an agricultural experimental station out in the prairies in Alabama, and had resorted to all the modern methods of ditching and tiling for drainage, &c., we found that the people were getting information of a valuable character in regard to the fertilization of those lands and the best manner of treating them, and our experimental station has done very well.

I should be very glad indeed, if this bill is to be passed, that there should be a provision in it that the States also might contribute to the extent that they saw proper funds for the assistance of these stations. In Alabama, for instance, I should like to have two stations, one in the poorer region of the State, where the agricultural power of the land might be properly developed, and it might be ascertained what were the best classes of fertilizers for that sort of land, and the other where we now have our experimental station, in the black belt, so that we could get two or even three sections of the State informed through these experimental stations of the best methods of agriculture.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator from Alabama allow me to make an explanation which I think will assist him in the matter?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. The object of having the experimental farm connected with the college is that the fund contributed may be under the control of the agricultural professors, who are supposed to be able to give it intelligent supervision.

There is another object. It is of very great importance, in my opinion, that, as was intended, the labor on the experimental farms shall be done by the students at the colleges, and that the money shall be expended in part in aiding the pupils attending the college who do the work on the farms. I happen to be a trustee of the agricultural college in the State of Mississippi, now in very successful operation, and our experience is that a great many young men go to that college who do not possess the means to pay their board and sustain themselves during the time of their attendance, and who are materially aided by the disbursements made out of the college fund for labor done by them on the college farm. I myself regard this provision requiring the farm to be in connection with the college as very important in that view also.

Mr. MORGAN. It would be important in that view, for I was at a loss to know how the committee expected to have these farms worked, whether by hired labor or by the compulsory labor of the students, and I am gratified to find that the committee are of the opinion that the students can furnish the labor necessary by hiring them and paying them proper compensation to work the farms.

It will be observed that the development of agriculture through experiment, through practical experience at the farm in Auburn, Ala., would be of very little advantage and perhaps of no advantage at all, as I have stated, to the people who occupy the red lands of the Tennessee Valley and the lands of the black belt, the cretaceous belt, in Alabama.

So it would be almost impracticable in that State to do any service at all if you based your experimental farm upon the labor to be obtained from the students in the college. The country around the college is not fitted to it, is not suited to it. We tried it and failed at it. We could not do any good with it, and had to transfer it, as I remarked, into the black lands, a distance probably nearly 100 miles away from Auburn, where our college is located, before we could accomplish anything. I mention these difficulties in order to show the committee that the bill in that particular needs amendment.

If you will give this money to the State of Alabama and allow that State to use it in the establishment of experimental farms you will find a very much better result than Congress can prescribe in any general act of legislation. Of course we have got to make all of our legislation here uniform; it must apply alike to all parts of the country; and when we come to make a practical application of this measure we shall find that we are unable to do justice to and to promote the real purposes of the act we are now endeavoring to pass.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator allow me to explain one point there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. I take it that the Senator's criticisms upon the bill, from the temper in which they are made, are intended to point out real objections to it, and to have the bill amended so that it may be in the best form possible for the good of the country.

Mr. MORGAN. Unquestionably.

Mr. GEORGE. The answer to one of the Senator's objections, I think he will find in this, that $15,000 is not a sum large enough to be divided between two separate agricultural stations; that when the labor is paid for, when the experiments of the character designed are paid for, and when the other things, for instance the publication of results, bulletins, &c., are paid for, the whole sum will be consumed.

I wish to suggest to the Senator from Alabama that if he will read section 2 he will discover that the real objects of the experimental stations can be accomplished without reference to the character of the soil. If, however, as the Senator suggested in a former part of his remarks, it be preferred in his State that the State should aid in establishing two agricultural colleges, one in the sandy district, and one in the lime district, that purpose could be met by the State maintaining one, and another being maintained under this bill. Nearly everything required by section 2 to be done can be well done without reference really to the character of the soil.

Mr. MORGAN. I have noticed the difficulties which are presented in the suggestions of the Senator from Mississippi, and it is one of the defects of this bill, that there is not money enough in it. There ought to be more than $15,000 given to each State. Some of the States have two agricultural colleges. It would be a very poor show, I think, to divide $15,000 between two colleges in any State.

Mr. GEORGE. The bill provides that in that case the Legislature of the State may assign all of the appropriation to one of the colleges.

Mr. MORGAN. I should prefer, where a State has two colleges, that each of the colleges should receive $15,000, because it is just as essential to have each college at work at this matter as it is to have one of them, where the State is large enough and has population enough to have established two colleges.

I wish to call attention to the remark of the Senator from Mississippi that the objects which are mentioned in the second section are of such a character as that they may be entirely developed and well prosecuted in any part of the State of Alabama, for instance. It is known in the Southern States, it is known everywhere, I suppose, that that part of the country in which I happen to reside is one of the finest in the world for the production of peaches, apples, and pears. Where you get a soil that is suited to the trees in some portions of the State of Alabama, fruits of this character are produced in great abundance and in splendid varieties, the finest in quality of fruits; but in the black belt, that immense sweep of shell land, it is impossible to get a peach tree, an apple tree, or a pear tree to live more than four or five years. The consequence is that that part of the State is abandoned, so far as fruit culture is concerned, except for small fruit and very few of the varieties. If this experimental farm is to be worth anything at all, it ought, I think, to develop some means by which the portions of the State adapted to fruit culture should become an orchard country; but you may make your experiments at Auburn, in the sand lands, for a hundred years, and you will prove nothing at all in respect of the best methods of growing fruit trees and preserving them in the black lands.

I do not know anything through which we could really do more of advantage to the country from the revelations of these experiments than in the direction I have just been stating; but there are other matters of equally great value in which the difference between the soils of the State in which I live is so marked that certain plants and certain vegetables will not grow in portions of the State that grow in other portions. The very best natural fertilizer that I know of in my State, and I think all farmers there concede it, next to cotton-seed, is what we call the cornfield pea, or the black-eyed pea. That grows abundantly in all parts of the State and it is used as a fertilizing crop, turned under like clover very often. After the peas are ripened in the pod, and when the vine is green, large ploughs turn the whole crop under and produce a very fine and durable effect in fertilizing, because the vine is said to contain more saltpeter than almost any other that can be named that grows in the Southern States. The farmers in the cretaceous belt do not grow the black-eyed pea at all, for the reason that in consequence of some peculiarity of the soil it will kill all the stock that eats it. They have to abandon the cultivation of it. It is grown almost exclusively in the sand lands and upon the red-clay lands. I should think that this experimental farm might solve that difficulty, and if it was conducted in the black lands would certainly have a better opportunity through experiment of curing this trouble than any other means. There are a number of forage plants that do very finely in one section of the State of Alabama, but will not grow apparently, or with very ill success, in other parts of the State, with the same climate, the same amount of rainfall, the same conditions in every respect, except a difference in soil.

Mr. GEORGE. Does not the Senator see that if his objections are valid against the passage of this bill, they would be valid against any bill which did not provide money enough to have an agricultural experimental station in every portion of the State which had a distinct variety of soil and a different soil from the other portions?

Mr. MORGAN. Perhaps it may turn out that way, and that in the course of time we shall have these experimental stations in every part of the State that has any great quantity of distinct soil from the rest of the State; but what I insist upon is that the committee ought to raise the amount they name in the bill; that there ought to be $30,000 named in the bill instead of $15,000, and that a State ought to have the right to establish two or more agricultural experimental farms.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator allow me to answer that point, because I think he wants to get at what is right?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. GEORGE. I have no objection to $30,000 or $40,000 being donated to agricultural experimental stations in each State, but the committee doubt whether a larger sum than $15,000 would meet the sanction of Congress. If I may be allowed, without violating the rules of the Senate, I will state that is the sum agreed upon by the committee of the House of Representatives at the last session as well as the committee of the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. If the country feels any interest in these agricultural stations or farms it will justify us in voting all the money that is necessary to carry them on, for they are either worth nothing or they are worth a very large amount of money to the country.

Mr. GEORGE. As it is an experiment whether these stations are to be worth anything or not, would it not be better, I submit to the Senator from Alabama, to commence with a smaller sum, and if it shall be found out by actual experience that these stations are very valuable and that the sum appropriated is too small, it can be raised from time to time, as the necessities of the case may demand.

Mr. MORGAN. We had better start with one farm in each State, equipped with $30,000, than to start with one farm in each State that has two colleges, equipped with only $15,000, the State having population enough to justify two colleges.

We have plenty of means in a fund which I hope the Senator from Mississippi will consent may be resorted to for the purpose of raising this money, and that is the fund arising from the sales of public lands. During the past fiscal year we received in cash from these sales $7,412,767.31. This bill calls, I think, for $540,000.

Mr. GEORGE. Including the Territories, probably $600,000.

Mr. MORGAN. Say $600,000.

Mr. GEORGE. That is approximately correct.

Mr. MORGAN. We can take the cash sales for the last year and give $600,000 of that money and yet have nearly $7,000,000 in the Treasury of the United States derived from the sale of public lands. If there is any purpose to which the proceeds of the sales of the public lands could be properly applied for the benefit of the States, it is agriculture, agricultural experiment, agricultural development, the benefit of agriculture.

Take the lands that we dispose of to those who have no homes now and who are buying them at public sales and otherwise, and let the proceeds go as far as may be necessary to the establishment of these agricultural experiments. Here is money enough, at the rate the Senator from Mississippi states that the bill calls for, to sustain all of these colleges that we appropriate for here for ten or twelve years. There is no danger of the failure of the fund. The public lands are becoming more and more valuable every day, and those lands which are open to sale, as they are in the State of Alabama, are being now resorted to rapidly by people who are buying them. So there is no danger of the failure of the fund.

I claim that this bill ought to rest upon that fund, and that while we are trying to make something of these agricultural experimental stations we ought to make all we can of them, and equip them with a sufficient amount of money to insure their success so far as appropriations go, and place the whole subject in the hands of the States.

The money arising from the proceeds of the sales of public lands, it can not be too often repeated, is a trust fund in the hands of Congress, made so by the terms of the deeds of cession themselves, for the benefit of the States, as well those States that had no public domain outside of their own borders, as those States that had very vast areas which they transferred to the Government of the United States by deed. The trust inheres in the land, and however much we may have neglected it or abused it, the trust still remains, and it is just as incumbent upon Congress this day to apply the proceeds of the sales of the public lands to the benefit of the States, they not being needed for any other public purpose, as it would be incumbent upon a guardian to pay out for the clothing and education of a child in his custody, the child not being sick but well, and therefore not needing any doctors' bills to be paid or personal expenses of that kind that had prior demand or lien upon the funds in his hands.

I grant you, when on the sale of public land the money goes into the Treasury, that for the purposes of war, or the payment of war debts, or for any other great national purpose of protection which the Government gives to the farmers and persons interested in public lands, we have a perfect right to resort to this fund for all purposes of that kind; but when we get into the condition that we are now in, when we have a full and overflowing Treasury and no need of this income of $7,000,000 a year for the payment of our national debts, not having any debts within reach that we can pay with the money, then let us allow the real and the express purposes of the trust to fasten upon the money in the Treasury of the United States, and let it be expended for the benefit of the States who reserved that right and use in it. I have no objection to that. I would devote every dollar of this money, as it comes into the Treasury of the United States, in aid of the school fund of any State, because in doing so I should find that I was merely executing a trust to my own State, imposed upon me at the time it came into the Union, and a trust reposed not actually in the Government of the United States, but in the Congress of the United States; for that is the language of the deeds of cession.

This question has been so clearly settled in various decisions of the Supreme Court in cases which arose in Alabama that my attention was very closely drawn to it for years and years past, before I came to the Senate, and I never could lose sight of the fact that the Government of the United States was, after all, holding the whole public domain in Alabama in trust for the benefit of that State and the other States of the American Union. That is the nature of the trust; and whenever we have our coasts clear and no necessity for the money to be applied to some great overpowering national necessity in which the whole country is equally interested; whenever we get into that happy condition that we are now in, when we do not know what to do with money we are getting annually, let us take that fund and apply it to the use of the States. It ought to be done. The fund is very much larger in the aggregate than I have stated it, but a good deal of it comes from fees and from lands that have reverted, &c., and I thought I would merely give the cash proceeds annually.

Mr. INGALLS. Is not that diminished by the payment of registers' and receivers' fees and other office expenses?

Mr. MORGAN. No; it goes into the Treasury. This is the amount that goes into the Treasury.

Mr. INGALLS. As I understand, the total given is the gross proceeds of sale, which I understand is diminished by the payment of registers' and receivers' fees and other office expenses.

Mr. MORGAN. That may be or may not be, but I do not think it is the case. I have not looked to see whether this fund was diminished in the way mentioned by the Senator from Kansas, but the cash sales, as I have stated, amounted last year to $7,412,767.31.

Mr. INGALLS. That must be the gross receipts.

Mr. MORGAN. No; these are the cash receipts, and they are divided as follows:

Cash sales	$5,757,891 06
Homestead fees and commissions	986,873 62
Timber-culture fees and commissions	484,766 00
Military bounty-land-warrant locations	843 00
Fees on scrip locations	11 00
Pre-emption and other filings	148,375 25
Fees for reducing testimony to writing	435 78
Fees on donation claims	55 00
Fees on State selections	4,616 12
Fees on railroad selections	28,895 48
Fees on wagon-road selections	5 00
Total receipts from public lands	7,412,767 31

Then comes the fund to which I have no doubt the Senator refers as being reduced by the fees of the offices:

Receipts from disposal of Indian lands	$1,607,729 63
Fees for transcript of record furnished by General Land Office	10,587 40

Making a total of $9,031,084.34 received in money through the General Land Office of the United States in connection with the disposal of the public lands.

I found no necessity for being very accurate about this statement, or for being prepared to answer particularly the question of the Senator from Kansas, because I merely wanted to show that the fund is vastly greater than any necessity that we are under now for applying it under this particular bill. There is plenty of money for that purpose; and I am perfectly willing to devote the money now in the Treasury of the United States, by this act of appropriation, so that these experimental farms may have a standing fund out of which they shall be paid this money for the next ten or twelve years to come, without resort to further legislation for the purpose. I am perfectly willing to do it, for I think it is a just thing to do. I hope that we shall be able to arrive at some agreement about the bill so that we can all sustain it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. TELLER. Let the pending amendment be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 4, line 4, after the word "agriculture" it is proposed to strike out all down to and including the word "based" in line 7, as follows:

To determine annually a standard of valuation of the ingredients of commercial fertilizers, upon which the analysis of such fertilizers, as far as made by said stations, shall be based.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to say that that amendment was offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], a member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and that it is in accordance with the wishes of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I gave notice a day or two since, when this matter was under consideration, that I should offer an amendment to be added to the last clause in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] proposes an amendment which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of section 9 the following additional proviso:

And provided further, That in States having colleges entitled under this section to the benefits of this act, and having also agricultural experiment-stations established by law separate from said colleges, such States shall be authorized to apply such benefits to the experiment-stations so established by such States.

Mr. DAWES. I do not know that the end of section 9 is the proper place to insert the amendment.

Mr. GEORGE. That is as good a place as any.

Mr. DAWES. There is no objection, I think, to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. The adoption by the Senate of the amendment in section 4, striking out from line 4 to line 7, renders that portion of the section after the word "act," in line 11, down to and including the word "fertilizers," in line 15, superfluous. I move that those lines be stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The SECRETARY. In section 4, line 11, after the word "act," it is proposed to strike out the following words:

But nothing herein contained shall be construed to authorize said Commissioner to control or direct the work or management of any such station except as to the standard of valuation of commercial fertilizers.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANSOM. I beg leave to offer an amendment. In the first section of the bill, in line 9, after the word "colleges," I move to insert the words:

Or agricultural departments of colleges.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. In section 1, line 8, I move to strike out the words "in connection with," and to insert the words "under the direction of," so as to read:

There shall be established, under the direction of the college or colleges, or agricultural departments of colleges, in each State or Territory.

This amendment has the approval of the Senator in charge of the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to discuss the general features of this bill. I gave my reasons the other day why I could not vote for it, and I must confess that I have had very considerable misgiving as to the propriety of my course in the matter, not so far as my opinion is concerned as to the constitutionality of the bill or the general spirit which pervades its provisions, but as to the effect of it upon the agricultural interests of the country.

I do not pretend to be at all oblivious to the fact that agriculture is the most important industry in the United States, nor to the additional fact that my State is one of the largest agricultural States in the Union. I thought it very singular that with the agricultural interests in Missouri I have heard so little in favor of the passage of the bill. I know that there have been a few gentlemen at the Capitol here from other States urging very strenuously its passage, and I know that some officials of the Government have been very solicitous for it, but as to any general uprising such as we have heard of upon this floor in which the agricultural interest demanded the passage of this bill, I do not know of it.

In order to establish these agricultural colleges we gave a large amount of public land to each of the States. That I hold we had a perfect right to do. We are now asked to give $15,000 to each of these colleges out of the tax money in the Treasury, and that I say we have no right to do.

But waiving that question, let us see what has been the result of this liberality on the part of the General Government, and how far this generosity has been appreciated by its recipients in their respective States; in other words, whether the farmers of the United States have sent their sons to be educated in these colleges in the art of agriculture.

I addressed a note the other day to the Commissioner of Education upon this interesting subject, and I have a most remarkable reply, which I commend to the gentlemen who are urging the passage of this bill. We are told now that agriculture lies bleeding unless these appropriations are made and these experimental stations added to the colleges, and that all the young men of the country are rushing to learn agriculture. The Commissioner informs me that Alabama, for the year 1885–'86, had, according to the official report, 145 students in her agricultural college. By the same report she had 19 studying agriculture. Arkansas had for 1884–'85 83 in her agricultural college, and none studying agriculture.

Mr. GEORGE. It was not an agricultural college, then.

Mr. VEST. It was an agricultural college.

Mr. GEORGE. It was misnamed.

Mr. VEST. We shall see whether it was misnamed or not. I have a letter here from the Commissioner of Education, in which he says:

In accordance with your request, I have the honor to inclose a table showing the number of students attending the land-grant schools of the United States, and the number of students taking courses of agriculture, as far as I am able to report the same from the records of this office.

N. H. R. DAWSON, Commissioner.

The heading of this report from the Commissioner of Education is: "Number of collegiate and agricultural students in the 'colleges of agriculture and the mechanic arts' of the States specified below."

I repeat, that of 145 students in the college of Alabama there were but 19 studying agriculture; in Arkansas, out of 83, none.

Mr. GEORGE. That would be a violation of the provisions of the act.

Mr. VEST. In California, out of 243 students, five were studying agriculture; in Colorado, out of 69, seven; in Connecticut, out of 256, none; in Delaware, out of 58, twenty-eight; in Georgia, out of 386, fifty-three; in Illinois, out of 332, twenty-five; in Indiana, out of 146, fifteen; in Iowa, out of 252, none; in Kansas, out of 428, four hundred and twenty-eight. It seems that all the students are studying agriculture there. In Kentucky, out of 216, none; in Louisiana, out of 200, none; in Maine, out of 92, none; in Maryland, out of 43, none; in Massachusetts, out of 99, ninety-nine. The desire for agriculture seems to be sporadic and local. In some of the States all are studying it, and in other States none of them study it. In Michigan, out of 295, two hundred and fifty-five; in Minnesota, which is a great agricultural State, out of 293, one—a monumental example of agricultural indifference. In Mississippi, out of 291, one hundred and forty-one.

Mr. GEORGE. If the rest of the Senator's statistics are just as correct as those for Mississippi they are all wrong, because I know the fact to be that every attendant at the agricultural college of Mississippi is required to study agriculture. It is nothing else but an agricultural college.

Mr. FRYE. The statistics are equally wrong as to the State of Maine. It is there purely an agricultural college, and every one of the students studies agriculture.

Mr. VEST. Well, these are official records.

Mr. GEORGE. They are all wrong, then; that is all.

Mr. VEST. There is something wrong in the Department, then. In Missouri, out of 423 students, three hundred and seventy-two study agriculture; in Nebraska, out of 101, one hundred and one; in Nevada, no report; in New Hampshire, out of 50, none; in New Jersey, no report; in New York, out of 563, eleven; in North Carolina, out of 229, twenty; in Ohio, out of 323, eighteen; in Oregon, no recent information; in Pennsylvania, out of 69, forty-nine; in Rhode Island, out of 239, studies not specified; in South Carolina, out of 594, one hundred and ten; in Tennessee, out of 184, seventy-four; in Texas, out of 142, forty-six; in Vermont, out of 163, nineteen; in Virginia, at Blacksburg, 132, studies not specified; in Virginia, at Hampton, 341 students, and ninety studying agriculture; in West Virginia, out of 107, twenty-seven; in Wisconsin, out of 116, nine; making, in the aggregate, out of 7,803 students in the colleges, 2,022 in the whole Union studying agriculture.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri what the document is from which he is reading, and whence he obtained it. I was not present when he began to read from it.

Mr. VEST. I addressed a note to the Commissioner of Education to know how many students in these land-grant colleges were studying agriculture, in order to find out what had been the result of the beneficence of the Government.

Mr. BLAIR. I observed that the report for New Hampshire gave the number of students, and said that none of them were studying agriculture, as I understood the report.

Mr. VEST. I beg pardon of the Senator. In 1885–'86 the report shows that there were fifty students, "studies not specified."

Mr. BLAIR. "Studies not specified!" There is an experimental farm there, and they study agriculture if they study anything. They have actual practical work, and they have a separate agricultural organization.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. I understand the Senator from Missouri to read some statistics showing that a certain number of students in these agricultural colleges study agriculture, and a certain number do not. Is it not true that the grant was divided between agricultural colleges and colleges where a technical education in mechanics is pursued without reference to agriculture?

Mr. VEST. I am not able to give any information on the subject except what comes from the Commissioner of Education. He says that this is the "number of collegiate and agricultural students in the colleges of agriculture and the mechanic arts, of the States specified below," and gives in each State the whole number of students, and then he gives the number out of that whole number who are studying agriculture.

Mr. HOAR. There must be something wrong about that report, for this reason: In Massachusetts, unless I greatly err, and if I do my colleague will correct me, the land grant of 1862 was divided between two institutions, the agricultural college at Amherst and the school of technology at Boston. The school of technology in Boston is an institution not principally for education in agriculture, but in the mechanic arts, chemistry, engineering, architecture, and other branches of applied science of various kinds. It can not be true that all the students in those two aided institutions are correctly reported as studying agriculture. Probably the report as it relates to Massachusetts is confined to the agricultural college alone. But in other States there are colleges which combine those two things, and in those States the students who are not expecting to be farmers, although in the same institution, of course do not study agriculture.

Mr. VEST. This report shows that the land-grant college in the State of Massachusetts has ninety-nine students, all of them studying agriculture.

Mr. HOAR. I was reading within a few hours the report of the Boston School of Technology and, unless I err very much, there were four hundred and sixty-three students in that one alone. That is one of the aided institutions. So there is some mistake about the Senator's statistics.

Mr. VEST. Not "the Senator's statistics."

Mr. HOAR. The statistics he read.

Mr. VEST. The statistics come from the Commissioner of Education. I am not responsible for them.

Mr. BERRY. I wish to say that there are two or three hundred students, not less than two hundred, in the college in Arkansas, and have been for several years past. They have a farm connected with the college. I am not very familiar with the workings of it, but the students have been occupied there.

Mr. VEST. I know nothing personally in regard to the matter. I know no other way to obtain this sort of imformation except from the Commissioner of Education, and this is his report. Whether it be true or false is between that Commissioner and the people whom it affects. If this statement be correct, it is a lamentable showing in regard to the interest of the people of the United States in the subject of agricultural education.

Mr. INGALLS. Will the Senator permit me a moment?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. INGALLS. As a contribution to the debate, for the purpose of showing the objects for which this appropriation was made, it may be well to refer to section 4 of the original act, and ascertain what the intention of Congress was. It seems by that section that each State which might take and claim the benefit of the act was to support and maintain—now I quote the language—

> At least one college where the leading object shall be, without excluding other scientific and classical studies, and including military tactics, to teach such branches of learning as are related to agriculture and the mechanic arts, in such manner as the Legislatures of the States may respectively prescribe, in order to promote the liberal and practical education of the industrial classes in the several pursuits and professions in life.

So that it would be a wrong deduction to suppose that the intention of Congress was originally to make this appropriation exclusively for the purpose of what might be called agricultural instruction; and the statistics that the Senator has quoted are, therefore, misleading in that they are to be applied to a definition of this statute which does not exist.

Mr. VEST. The grant of land that was made by the original act was unquestionably for colleges to teach agriculture and the mechanic arts. I never said, and never pretended to say, that these colleges were established exclusively for agriculture, but I say now that every student who goes there can study agriculture if he pleases; and, unless these statistics are grossly wrong and misleading, they show the most lamentable indifference on the part of these people as to agriculture. That is all I presented them for.

Mr. TELLER. I noticed in the statement submitted by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] that Colorado is put down as having sixty-nine students for the years 1885 and 1886, in the agricultural college, seven of whom are studying agriculture. I find a note appended here: "All students pursue some agricultural branches apparently." I know of my own knowledge that that is purely an agricultural school with an experimental farm, and that all of the students who attend that institution are taught something in agriculture. I think perhaps the explanation would be that there are seven students there who are not interested in literary pursuits and who study nothing but agriculture. The State, long before it had a dollar of the fund spoken of, established this agricultural college for experimental purposes, and for the purposes for which it has been established it has been eminently successful.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Mr. President, in the State which I have the honor in part to represent here, under this grant of lands our Legislature organized a college in connection with our State University. The State University was organized under a grant of lands made to the Territory of Minnesota, and it embraced several departments, several colleges, one of which is an agricultural college. We have an experimental farm, which is of great value, with very fine buildings upon it, with very able professors, and all the departments of the college are in admirable condition and effective operation. This experimental farm is situated between the two cities of Saint Paul and Minneapolis, and affords a very fine opportunity indeed for students in agriculture. The agricultural college is a college in the university of our State.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, after the reading of the section in the original charter of these institutions by the Senator from Kansas it is perhaps needless to say that these colleges were not established or endowed for the sole purpose of teaching agriculture. Their object was to give an opportunity for those engaged in industrial pursuits to obtain some knowledge of the practical sciences related to agriculture and the mechanic arts, such as they could not then obtain at most of our institutions called classical colleges, where the languages, Greek and Latin, French and German, absorbed perhaps two-thirds of all the time of the students while in college. It is true that the smaller States having so small an endowment were compelled in some instances to unite the fund with other existing colleges; but in these there have been established professors of analytical chemistry, of geology, of mining, and theoretical instruction is given as far as possible in the mechanic arts, drawing, architecture, and they have made themselves useful in all parts of the country, and especially useful in agriculture, by the increased attention of farmers in general to the leading principle of profit to be derived from the different kinds of manure. These have all been tested and the results given as to the quality and as to the commercial cost of the various fertilizers that are sold in our country.

The Senator from Missouri should have remembered that in his own State there are two branches of these institutions, one where agricultural pursuits are taught and one where mechanic arts are taught. Of course in the mechanical institution there is nothing specially taught about agriculture.

But, Mr. President, it never was intended to force the boys of farmers going into these institutions so to study that they should all come out farmers. It was merely intended to give them an opportunity to do so, and to do so with advantage if they saw fit. Besides that, all the students that enter these colleges acquire more or less of the instruction that is now given to the farmers. They have certainly proved themselves remarkably useful, as was well shown by an examination made by the House of Representatives and a report made there some years ago by a committee, the chairman of which was Professor Monroe, of Ohio. He gave an account of each institution throughout the country, and that report was, almost without exception, favorable to every institution that had been so established.

So I do not think that we are erring in giving these institutions a little more help. I know that more than half of them absolutely need this help in order to go on with the work that is proposed, and no one will question but that the work proposed in these agricultural experiment-stations is useful, because farmers of twenty-one years of age up to fifty and sixty come there to seek instruction.

Mr. SPOONER. I offer an amendment to be inserted at the end of that which was inserted on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES], at the end of section 9:

And provided further, That, in case any State shall have established under the provisions of said act of July 2 aforesaid, an agricultural department or experimental station in connection with any university, college, or institution not distinctively an agricultural college or school, and such State shall have established, or shall hereafter establish, a separate agricultural college or school which shall have connected therewith an experimental farm or station, the Legislature of such State may apply in whole or in part the appropriation by this act made to such separate agricultural college or school; and no Legislature shall by contract, express or implied, disable itself from so doing.

Mr. MORRILL. I should rather hope that all these agricultural stations would be connected with the colleges. It would be a very easy matter for a State to change if it has made an establishment elsewhere. It seems to me there would be more symmetry about the bill, that the stations would then do better service, and as the regulations in relation to these colleges are entirely under the control of the different States, I should hope that we should make this bill symmetrical and leave it so that all these stations would be more or less connected with the agricultural colleges, where they have a staff ready to do the work, and where they have a laboratory. It seems to me it would be far better to leave it so that the States, if they chose, can supplement the work by transferring, if they have any appropriations annually made for other places, to these colleges.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, the State of Maine is reported here as having no students studying agriculture at its agricultural establishment, the State agricultural college. It is very well attended, and all the students in it study agriculture or the mechanic arts. Every year since it was established the State has made an appropriation to assist this college. The very fact that it was a State agricultural college has induced many young men to enter into higher studies who otherwise would never have had the advantage of them. I think these colleges have done as much good in that direction as any other in the inducement to young men, sons of farmers, to enter these colleges, and thus get a much better education than they otherwise would.

Mr. BUTLER. I trust that the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] will be adopted. In my State the proceeds of the land scrip under the act of 1862 were appropriated to what might be termed classical institutions. One is the State University, and the other the Claflin University, composed entirely of colored people. There is a very strong feeling growing up in the State that it would be much better, more advantageous, more profitable to the farmer to have a separate agricultural college, such as they have in Mississippi, and I believe in Michigan, where they have been especially successful. And I should like very much, indeed, that it be left to the discretion of the Legislatures of the States whether this fund shall be given to the colleges established under the act of 1862 or to separate institutions, as I understand this amendment provides. I hope, therefore, that the amendment will prevail.

In my State, at the last session of the Legislature, an appropriation was made to establish two experimental stations, one in the upper and the other in the lower part of the State. I am in hopes that out of that movement will grow a separate agricultural college. My own opinion is that there is an inconsistency in a classical college with agricultural features attached to it. Boys who enter a classical college generally do not desire to go on the farm and work and study practical agriculture and the mechanic arts. On the other hand, there are a great number of young men who would like to have the opportunity of going to an agricultural college and there studying agriculture and the mechanic arts practically. In the State of Mississippi I believe the agricultural college has done a vast amount of good in that direction, and my friend from Alabama tells me the same is true as to his State. I am informed that the same is true of Michigan. With these exceptions I believe these institutions have not heretofore been very successful. The feeling is prevailing in my State—how far it may go I can not say—that the two ought to be separated. This would give the Legislatures of the States the privilege of doing so if in their judgment it should be deemed best.

I hope, therefore, the amendment will prevail. I would like to have the amendment read again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be again read.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the bill add:

And provided further, That in case any State shall have established under the provisions of said act of July 2 aforesaid an agricultural department or experimental station in connection with any university, college, or institution not distinctively an agricultural college or school, and such State shall have established or shall hereafter establish a separate agricultural college or school, which shall have connected therewith an experimental farm or station, the Legislature of such State may apply in whole or in part the appropriation by this act made to such separate agricultural college or school; and no Legislature shall, by contract, express or implied, disable itself from so doing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. CALL. I wish to say before this amendment is voted upon, in relation to the statement made by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] as to the use of this appropriation and the one heretofore made, that in the State of Florida the agricultural scrip under the farm act has been used to establish an agricultural and industrial college which has a very fair proportion of the young men of the State engaged in studying these pursuits, and is meeting with very distinguished success.

I think myself that it would be advisable that this bill should be so framed that it would be within the discretion of the Legislature of the State to have the agricultural college either at the station or have the experimental station at the place where the college is already located, or elsewhere. For instance, in the State of Florida, covering a large area of 700 or 800 miles in extent, having a very temperate climate, running far towards the tropics, it may be very advisable to locate an experimental farm in the southern portion of the State, or it might be perhaps located elsewhere, not within the semi-tropical regions, and for that reason I think the discretion might very wisely be allowed the Legislature of the State as to where the experimental farm should be located under this proposed act. It may be that where it is now located would be more convenient to the general uses of agricultural and horticultural industry, and it might be better somewhere else. That should be left to the Legislature.

Mr. MORRILL. This matter, perhaps, is not of very great consequence, but I do regard it as rather important that the agricultural colleges which already have farms should also have the chance to have these experimental stations placed with them; and, besides that, the separation is to fritter away a large amount of this appropriation in obtaining laboratories, in putting up buildings, &c., where they would not be required if we allowed the money to go to the colleges themselves. I therefore hope that the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, in administering this grant of 1862, the Legislature of Wisconsin provided for the establishment of an agricultural department or college in connection with the State university, and the legislation was of such a nature in connection with the purchase of an experimental farm by the county in which the university is situated, as to constitute probably a contract on the part of the State to permanently apply the proceeds of that fund to that institution. I think I state what is simply the fact when I say that the agricultural department connected with the State university has not been considered by the farmers of the State to be a success; not from any want of fidelity on the part of the State in the expenditure of the money, nor from any want of good management upon the part of the university regents, because the corps of instructors has been in every way admirable, and so I may say of the line of study; but for the reason suggested by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] that it is almost impossible to secure the attendance of any large number of students devoting their time and labor to the study of agriculture in connection with a classical institution with three, four, or five hundred young men who are devoting their time and labor to the scientific or classical departments covering several years.

I do not wish, by this amendment, to do anything more than to leave the application of this fund open to change, by prohibiting any State from disabling itself hereafter from making such disposition of the money appropriated by this act as shall then seem wise. The farmers of Wisconsin may become extremely anxious that there should be a separate agricultural college or school, and I desire that the law shall be left in such form as that the Legislature, if such shall be the public sentiment at any time, may apply this fund, in whole or in part, in that way.

I want to say a word further. My information as to the desire of the farmers of the Northwest for the passage of this bill is not such as that suggested by the Senator from Missouri as to the farmers of his State. The farmers of Wisconsin take a very great interest in it. I have presented to the Senate resolutions of the State grange of that State and of the Wisconsin Horticultural Society praying for its passage. I have received a great many letters from some of the most intelligent farmers in the State asking me to promote, as far as I might be able to do so, this legislation.

The experimental farm, which has been established under what is called the "Morrill" act, has been of incalculable value to the farmers of the State, and the experiments there made have been exceedingly important and valuable to the people, who have been kept advised of them by frequent bulletins. There can be no wiser expenditure of public money than in promoting agricultural education and improved methods in every department of agriculture.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. Can the Senator from Mississippi inform me how section 6 now stands; whether any amendment has been made except in the date in line 11, in the draught as it came from the committee? If not, I think it should be amended.

Mr. GEORGE. In section 6, line 11, "July" was stricken out and "October" inserted, and "1885" was stricken out and "1887" inserted.

Mr. INGALLS. Then, as I understand the Senator, the section remains in its original state as to the method that is to be followed in paying this money over to the State and the liability of the trustees or regents in connection with the disbursement thereof.

Mr. GEORGE. I think a motion was made to strike out all after the word "college," in line 19, down to the word "received," in line 23.

Mr. INGALLS. It is obvious that the section in its present condition should not receive the approval of the Senate, for it provides that this money shall be paid over "on the 1st day of January, April, July, and October in each year"—that is, in quarterly payments—"to the treasurer or other officer duly appointed by the aforesaid boards of trustees to receive the same," and then it imposes a condition upon the board of trustees, or regents, or governing body, that they shall file a stipulation with the Secretary of the Treasury that the money shall be devoted to the objects for which it is appropriated; and, further, that they shall give a bond—that is to say, the board of trustees, or regents, or the governing body—shall execute a bond for the faithful disbursement of the money, when, as a matter of fact, the money does not go into their hands at all.

Mr. GEORGE. That was the amendment of the colleague of the Senator [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. INGALLS. The money being paid to the treasurer, if there is any bond to be executed the treasurer ought to execute it. The trustees ought not to be required to file any stipulations as to the method of the disbursement of this money, because the treasurer is required under the State laws to give a bond for the faithful disbursement of all funds belonging to the institution, in accordance with the original trust.

Mr. MORRILL. You do not want any bond at all.

Mr. INGALLS. There ought not to be any bond required at all; but if there is to be a bond it should be executed by the treasurer who receives the money. I will therefore move, in order to reach the sense of the Senate on this proposition, to strike out of section 6, after the words "eighteen hundred and eighty-seven," as it now stands in line 11, all down to and including the word "college" in line 19, and then to strike out the word "and" and insert "who" in line 19; then to strike out the words "also have," and for "executed" insert "execute," and "file" for "filed." I also move to strike out the first word "said," in line 20, and insert the word "the," and after "Secretary" insert "of the Interior," and strike out the word "their" following "Secretary" and insert "a;" so that the clause will read:

To be paid in equal quarterly payments, on the 1st day of January, April, July, and October in each year, to the treasurer or other officer duly appointed by the aforesaid boards of trustees to receive the same, the first payment to be made on the 1st day of October, 1887, who shall execute and file with the Secretary of the Interior a bond in the penal sum of $15,000, &c.

That strikes out the entire provision imposing this requirement of a stipulation from the trustees as to the disbursement of the money, and also the requirement that they shall execute a bond, when as a matter of fact they do not receive the money at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS].

Mr. GEORGE. I have no objection to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I now move to strike out all after the word "seven," in line 11 of that section, down to and including the word "received," in line 23. I do not think it is at all necessary that this bond should be given. The gentlemen who are engaged in this work are intrusted by their several States with a much larger fund, and they are among the most respectable gentlemen in every State. I move, therefore, to strike out all, from line 11, after "1887" down to and including the word "received," in line 23 of section 6.

Mr. CULLOM. Does that leave the bill in such shape as that the money will go into the hands of the treasurer, and not into the hands of the boards generally?

Mr. MORRILL. Yes, sir; into the hands of the treasurer.

Mr. CULLOM. It ought to be so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 6, line 11, after the date 1887, it is proposed to strike out the following words:

Who shall execute and file a bond, in the penal sum of $15,000, with two sufficient sureties, approved by the clerk of a court of record in such State, conditioned on the faithful expenditure of and accounting for all moneys so received.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not understand that that was stated correctly. I believe the Senator from Vermont moved to strike out——

Mr. MORRILL. I moved to strike out all after the words "1887" in line 11 down to and including the word "received" in line 23.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the motion of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] the other lines have already been stricken out and the Chair is informed by the Secretary that the Senator's object is accomplished by the amendment as reported.

Mr. MORRILL. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. I should like to know how the bill stands now.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish to invite the attention of the Senator from Mississippi, and other Senators also, to the very first line of the bill. Several changes have been made here, notably one relieving the Commissioner of Agriculture from the duty of prescribing standards, &c., so that it is hardly worth while to leave the words "the Department of Agriculture" in the third line of the bill. The bill ought to read:

That in order to aid in acquiring and diffusing among the people of the United States useful and practical information on subjects connected with agriculture, &c.

It is not to enable the Department of Agriculture to aid all these various colleges in the various States. I move to strike out the words "the Department of Agriculture," in the third line of the first section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER. In line 5 of section 6 I move to strike out the word "fifteen," before "thousand," and insert "thirty;" so as to read:

That, for the purpose of paying the salaries and wages of the director and other employés of said stations, and the necessary expenses of conducting investigations and experiments, and printing and distributing the results as hereinbefore prescribed, the sum of $30,000 per annum is hereby appropriated to each State.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to insert $30,000 there, but I am afraid that would operate very largely to defeat the purpose of the bill. If it be found that this sum is insufficient it can be raised. I hope, therefore, the amendment will not be adopted.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CULLOM. I have not risen to move an amendment, but only to say that there have been so many amendments made that it would be very important that the bill should be read as amended before we vote on it finally.

While I am up I desire to say that the State of Illinois has a very excellent college of the kind that we are legislating about, having some four hundred students or more now in it, and, so far as my knowledge has gone, it has adhered very closely to the spirit of the law under which it was organized. The State of Illinois has appropriated large sums of money for buildings and apparatus, and it is thoroughly equipped for the education of its students according to the law of Congress, as well as the law of the State of Illinois. I am very glad that this addition is to be made.

Mr. GEORGE. Have you not also a mechanical college?

Mr. CULLOM. Certainly we have agricultural and mechanical departments in connection with it, and they have been doing very excellent work. I hope the bill will pass finally, but I think it would be well to read it before we pass it to see just what we have got in it.

Mr. SEWELL. I desire to say in relation to this bill that the State of New Jersey has for years had an agricultural college which has received a yearly appropriation from the State, and that it is doing an exceedingly good work for our community.

The land of New Jersey is of that character that requires high fertilization. There is more money expended for fertilizers in New Jersey per acre than in almost any other State of the Union. This college has established an experiment-station in our State for the purpose of the chemical analysis of fertilizers, which has been of great benefit to our farmers. Fertilizers that were practically of no value have been driven from the market by the officers appointed to conduct the experiment-station. It does not suffer from the lack of appropriations, but it seems to be extremely appropriate that the National Government should assist in the work, and for my part I am heartily in favor of the bill.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, in section 5, after the word "that," in line 1, I move to strike out the words "in order to make the results of the work of said stations immediately useful." That is a declaratory statement that is unnecessary and has no place in a statute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS].

Mr. INGALLS. And it leaves the disposition of the information by the publication of bulletins exactly the same as it is now. It only strikes out the declaration of purpose.

Mr. MORRILL. May I ask the Senator from Kansas what the word "they" refers to that is left?

Mr. INGALLS. That is stated in the preceding section.

Mr. MORRILL. I think it had better be repeated, whether you mean the governor or the several stations.

Mr. INGALLS. If the Senator will look at the bottom of page 3, line 15, he will find:

It shall be the duty of each of said stations, annually, on or before the first day of February, to make to the governor of the State in which it is located a full and detailed report of its operations.

Then it goes on to say "they shall publish." That means the several stations by their appropriate officers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. I see in section 3 that these stations are to be "under the direction and control of the trustees or other governing body of such colleges, who shall have power to appoint a director and such assistants as may in each case be necessary."

It seems to me that the object and purpose of this appropriation would be practically destroyed if we provide that instead of expending this money under the direction of those who are already on the ground employed in the same transaction, there shall be a separate board of directors and assistants appointed to be paid out of this $15,000 per annum. There is a limitation on page 5 at the close of section 6 upon the amount that is to be expended in the direction of enlargement and repair of building or buildings, obviously for the purpose of retaining as large a proportion as possible of this amount for the actual object of conducting these experiments. There is undoubtedly at all of these colleges a force that is employed in the different States for the purpose of conducting the operations in these institutions, and I am at a loss to see why in making this appropriation for the purpose of aiding these institutions we should provide for a director and a separate corps of assistants to disburse this money and carry on these operations. There is no limitation whatever of their power. They can spend the whole of it in salaries if they choose.

Mr. GEORGE. I think the Senator is right. I think it ought to be under the direction of the colleges.

Mr. INGALLS. Ought they to have the power to spend the entire amount in salaries if they see fit?

Mr. GEORGE. No; I think the Senator's suggestion is right.

Mr. INGALLS. They have that power under the language of the bill. There is no limitation at all. They can only spend one-fifth part, that is $3,000, in the erection, enlargement, or repair of building or buildings, but if they are so disposed they can expend the entire remainder, the $12,000, in salaries.

Mr. GEORGE. I move to strike out in section 3 all after the word "colleges" in line 3.

Mr. HAWLEY. Why leave that in, because these colleges are already under the direction of trustees and directors provided for by the States? What is the use of saying to a State institution that it has our gracious permission to appoint trustees and professors?

Mr. INGALLS. Section 3 ought to be stricken from the bill. It is entirely superfluous.

Mr. HAWLEY. Let all of it be stricken out.

Mr. INGALLS. The bill provides, in section 6, for the appropriation of this money and its payment to the officer of the institution, to be expended in accordance with the provisions of the original act. I move to strike out section 3.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas moves to strike out section 3. The question is on that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. I move now to insert a new section:

SEC. —. That the grants of money authorized by this act are made subject to the legislative assent of the several States and Territories for the purposes of said grant.

The bill only provides for a payment directly to a treasurer of a local institution, a State institution, and says nothing about the Legislature or the State itself; does not require them to say, "We accept;" gets no indorsement whatever from the State. This amendment is modeled upon a similar provision in the original Morrill act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. Insert as a new section:

SEC. —. That the grants of money authorized by this act are made subject to the legislative assent of the several States and Territories for the purposes of said grant.

Mr. BUTLER. There is no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. Now, if there be no further amendment proposed to perfect the text of the original bill, I have an amendment pending as a substitute, which I wish to call attention to.

Mr. MORGAN. I will say to the Senator that the Senator from Texas, who is out of the Chamber for the moment, has an amendment.

Mr. INGALLS. Some amendment should be made to the text, as, for example, in lines 9 and 10 of section 2, to strike out "within the isothermal limits represented by the climate of the several stations and their vicinity." The object is, as declared, to ascertain "the capacity of new plants or trees for acclimation." I therefore move to strike out the language in lines 9 and 10 down to and including the word "vicinity."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 2, after the word "acclimation," at the end of line 8, it is proposed to strike out:

Within the isothermal limits represented by the climate of the several stations and their vicinity.

Mr. INGALLS. The object being to ascertain "the capacity of new plants or trees for acclimation."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. Now, I call the attention of the Senator from Mississippi to the first section of this bill, where there is a declaration of the purpose of Congress in enacting the measure, which is said to be "in order to aid the Department of Agriculture in acquiring and diffusing among the people of the United States useful and practical information," &c.

Mr. MORRILL. Those words were stricken out.

Mr. INGALLS. Very well.

Mr. COKE. I offer the following amendment, to come in in line 6, section 6: After the word "State" to insert:

And to each Territory entitled under the provisions of section 9 of this act, out of any money in the Treasury proceeding from the sales of public lands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 6, line 6, after the word "State," it is proposed to insert:

And to each Territory entitled under the provisions of section 9 of this act, out of any money in the Treasury proceeding from the sales of public lands.

So as to read:

The sum of $15,000 per annum is hereby appropriated to each State and to each Territory entitled under the provisions of section 9 of this act, out of any money in the Treasury proceeding from the sales of public lands.

Mr. COKE. Mr President, I should like to vote for this bill, but I am one of those who believe that education in the States is a subject alone within the jurisdiction of the States, and that it is outside the jurisdiction of Congress, and that Congress has no constitutional power to levy taxes upon the people and collect money to be applied to a subject outside of and beyond its jurisdiction as the subject of education in the States is. I therefore, if the bill remains in this shape, can not vote for it.

I have offered this amendment providing that the appropriation be made out of the proceeds of the sales of public lands. The public lands are by express grant of the Constitution within the absolute control of Congress. Congress has plenary power of disposition over the public lands, and consequently over the proceeds of the sales of the public lands. Congress has given away the public lands to the people for homesteads; it has given away the public lands to soldiers and sailors as bounty; it has given public lands to railroad corporations and various other enterprises, and among others has endowed the agricultural colleges with public lands. This amendment is in line with the original endowment of these colleges by Congress.

Congress having jurisdiction over the public lands and over their proceeds of sales can appropriate them for the purpose to which my amendment devotes them.

If this amendment is adopted the constitutional objection which exists in the minds of a number of Senators to this bill will cease to exist, because the appropriation will be made out of a fund that is absolutely under the control of Congress. I hope it will be adopted as there are a number of us who would like to vote for the bill, and can not vote for it in its present shape.

I have here the latest reports as to the proceeds of the sales of public lands referred to by the Senator from Alabama. The cash receipts for the last fiscal year were $5,575,891. The total receipts from public lands with fees, &c., and exclusive of Indian lands were $7,412,757.31. The appropriation under this bill will amount to between six and seven hundred thousand dollars per annum. The fund which my amendment devotes to this purpose is ample and abundant, and must continue so for an indefinite time. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. MORRILL. While I do not think the amendment necessary, I do believe it will make the bill stronger, and there is no doubt but there will be ample funds from the source designated. I hope, therefore, the amendment will be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. If there be no further amendment to offer to the text of the bill, I earnestly call the attention of the Senate to a proposed substitute, not because I drew it, for I really only copied the work of the illustrious Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] in 1862, taking his ably-drawn and perfectly constitutional and unobjectionable and sensible and business-like bill. I have merely made this a sort of codicil, a protocol to that bill, giving the States with established colleges a further sum of money, to be devoted to certain specific uses.

The act of 1862 is well known here and I need not undertake to read it at length, but the substitute I offer, credited in the print to Mr. HOAR, begins by saying:

That the sum of $15,000 per annum be, and the same is hereby, appropriated * * *

SEC. 2. That said sum shall be inviolably appropriated, by each State and Territory which may accept and claim the benefit of this act—

Giving it to the States directly—to the establishment and maintenance, in connection with the colleges established," &c.

Giving the State a right, where two such colleges may have been established, to divide it between such colleges unless they choose otherwise, and adopting, if you please, the other corrections made by the Senator from Wisconsin and the Senator from Massachusetts, to have the varying arrangements made by the different States.

Then section 3 of my amendment adopts the language, I think, precisely of one of the sections of the pending measure, prescribing the work of the experiment-stations. Then section 4 goes on to say:

That the grants of moneys herein authorized are made on the following conditions, to which, as well as to the provisions hereinbefore contained, the previous assent of the several States and Territories shall be signified by legislative acts:

First. It shall be the duty of the chief officer of each station to publish at least once every three months, in cheap and popular form, a bulletin or report of progress, which shall be sent to the Department of Agriculture and to each other experiment-station established under this act, and furnished at cost, singly or by the year to subscribers.

Second. A full report of the operations of each station, including a statement of receipts and expenditures for the fiscal year ending June 30, shall be made annually and sent to each other station, and to the Secretary of the Treasury and the Commissioner of Agriculture of the United States.

In the third clause there is given a right to reserve a small proportion, not exceeding one-fifth, of the sum received for the erection, enlargement, or repair of buildings, saying that no State or Territory shall be entitled to the benefits of this act until it accepts it within two years. You can make that time four years if you choose. Then, adopting another section of the pending bill, I provide:

Fifth. Whenever it shall appear to the Secretary of the Treasury, from the annual statement of receipts and expenditures of any of said stations, that a part of the preceding annual appropriation remains unexpended by such station, such sum shall be deducted from the next succeeding annual appropriation to such station.

That short bill does the whole work and is modeled upon the original law establishing these colleges. It defines the work to be done sufficiently, and gives the money to the States to be accepted by the States for that purpose just as it did originally, and does not attempt to bond State officers or to come in under a legislature and deal with its creatures or anything of that sort. The simple, clear substitute for the bill that I submit does the whole work.

In order that this proposed substitute into which might be incorporated some of the minor amendments that have been made may be considered, and that we may know what the original bill is—it has been hammered almost to death—I ask that the question go over until 2 o'clock to-morrow, and that in the mean time the bill be printed with its amendments.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask unanimous consent, and I think it will be convenient to the Senate, that if this amendment be adopted it shall be treated as open to amendment in detail afterward.

Mr. HAWLEY. I think it would be, being adopted in Committee of the Whole, when we come into the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It would on coming into the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. But it would be more convenient to do the whole thing in committee.

Mr. HAWLEY. I see no objection to that.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask the Senator from Connecticut may we not simplify his amendment still more? As his object is to get this money for the States, why not say simply that so much money shall be given to the States to do as they please for the benefit of agriculture?

Mr. HAWLEY. I prefer to specify.

Mr. PLUMB. Why not go further, if we are to appropriate public money to the States, and go back to the act of 1834 and give the surplus around to the various members of the Union, and thereby dispose of all questions as to the disposition of the public moneys.

Mr. HAWLEY. That is very good, in the Senator's best vein; but if he will look to section 3 he will see that the devotion of this money is very carefully designed and outlined, and that the best guaranty we know how to get is taken for the use of it, and that is the guaranty of a sovereign State.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut asks unanimous consent of the Senate that this bill be printed as amended.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And showing the amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And that its further consideration be postponed until 2 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But the bill is to be printed showing the amendments as made, as different from the original bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Such was the statement of the Chair, that the bill be printed as amended, of course showing the amendments.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And that it be the unfinished business at 2 o'clock to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And that it be postponed until and be the unfinished business at 2 o'clock to-morrow. Is there objection?

Mr. BERRY. I should like to ask what effect that will have on the next special order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This bill will be the unfinished business at 2 o'clock to-morrow, and when disposed of the first special order will be the regular order unless the Senate should order otherwise. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the order to print is made.

HIATT & CO.

Mr. PLATT. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate at this time to move the reference of a message of the President of the United States which was laid upon the table at my request. It is a message transmitting a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, with a draught of a bill for the relief of Hiatt & Co. I move its reference to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so referred if there be no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 3129) for the relief of Frank J. Burrows; and

A bill (H. R. 6764) to provide for holding terms of the United States circuit courts at Vicksburg, Miss.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 54) to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on the various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States and the Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. RANSOM. I present a memorial and resolutions of the General Assembly of the Territory of New Mexico asking immediate legislation upon measures necessary for the proper settlement of Mexican and Spanish land grants in New Mexico and the adjoining Territories. I have been requested by Hon. Mr. JOSEPH, the Delegate from New Mexico, to present this memorial to the Senate. I move that it be laid on the table, as the bill to which it refers is on the Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONGER presented a resolution of the Legislature of Michigan urging the passage of the Miller bill for the suppression of pleuropneumonia; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HAWLEY submitted the following report:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1024) to enable the Secretary of War to pay Rane C Hutchison for services rendered and expenses incurred in the military services of the United States, have carefully considered the same, and, in accordance with the resolution of the Senate of February 7, 1884, report as follows:

That they have referred the same to the Court of Claims under the provisions of an act entitled "An act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the executive departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government," approved March 3, 1883.

The report was ordered to be filed.

Mr. MAHONE, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. TELLER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CONGER (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3224) repealing the charters of the Washington and Georgetown and the Metropolitan Railroad Companies in the District of Columbia, and providing that franchises for the routes operated by said roads shall be offered for public competition, and prohibiting the future granting of like franchises for the District of Columbia, except after advertisement for public competition; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. MCMILLAN (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3225) to authorize the Stillwater and Cooke City Railway Company to construct and operate a line of railway through the Crow Indian Reserve, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

JOHN R. HARRINGTON.

Mr. EVARTS. I ask consent of the Senate to have the bill (H. R. 4594) for the relief of John R. Harrington, Calendar No. 1987, which was reported on the 20th instant by the Committee on Patents adversely, recommitted to that committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). If there be no objection——

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to know what the bill is.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 4594) for the relief of John R. Harrington.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is an extension of a patent-right.

Mr. EVARTS. I only ask that it be recommitted.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have read the report made in that case, and I can see no earthly reason why it should be recommitted. It seems to have received full and fair consideration of the committee. I presume that the parties interested are like all other applicants, exceedingly persistent and determined to try and force the passage of the bill through the Senate.

Mr. BECK. I call for the regular order.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CALL. I move to proceed to the consideration of the resolution relating to the forfeiture of public lands.

Mr. BECK. I understand the next special order is the bill (S. 2578) in regard to railroad attorneys.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next special order will be reported; but the Senator from Florida has interposed a motion to proceed to the consideration of a joint resolution, which the Secretary will report.

Mr. CALL. If it is proposed to go on with other business I will not interpose any motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida withdraws his motion, and the Chair lays before the Senate the next special order, being the bill (S. 2578) to prohibit members of Congress from acting as attorneys or employés for railroad companies holding charters or having received grant of lands or pecuniary aid from the United States.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BERRY. I desire to make a few remarks on the bill before the Senate, and simply want to take the floor upon it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I shall concede that to my friend.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont withdraws the motion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In order that my friend from Arkansas may take the floor on the subject he wishes to speak on——

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President——

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BERRY. I have the floor on the railroad attorneys bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes, sir. The Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and seven minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

DESIGNATION OF REJECTED NOMINEES.

Mr. HOAR submitted the following resolution; which was ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That after the Senate has refused its advice and consent to the appointment of any person to an office, it is contrary to the spirit and intent of the Constitution to designate the same person to perform the duties of the same office immediately thereafter.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT CHATTANOOGA, TENNESSEE.

On motion of Mr. HARRIS, it was Ordered, That the House of Representatives be requested to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. 7218) to amend an act entitled "An act for the erection of a public building at Chattanooga, Tenn., approved February 25, 1885.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 47 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, January 27, at 12 o'clock m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate the 26th day of January, 1887.

SECRETARY OF LEGATION.

Thomas B. Connery, of New York, to be secretary of the legation of the United States to Mexico, vice Joseph L. Morgan, resigned.

UNITED STATES CONSUL.

William Reed Lewis, of Pennsylvania, to be consul of the United States at Tangier, vice Felix A. Mathews, recalled.

POSTMASTERS.

John E. Banta, to be postmaster at Muncie, Delaware County, Indiana, vice Robert I. Patterson, whose commission expires February 7, 1887.

Aaron F. Vedder, to be postmaster at White Hall, Greene County, Illinois, vice Benjamin B. Hamilton, resigned, to take effect February 1, 1887.

For promotion in the Army.

POST CHAPLAINS.

Rev. William F. Hubbard, of New York, January 21, 1887, vice Brady, deceased.

Rev. Henry Swift, of Dakota, January 21, 1887, vice Crocker, retired from active service.

WITHDRAWAL.

The nomination which was delivered to the Senate on the 6th instant, of Robert E. Culbreth, of California, to be consul of the United States at Apia, is withdrawn.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, January 26, 1887.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MEXICAN PENSION BILL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, submitting an estimate from the Secretary of the Interior of an appropriation to meet expenditures under the Mexican pension bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PRINTING FOR COURT OF CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the chief-justice of the Court of Claims in relation to a deficiency appropriation for that court for the current fiscal year; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a report of the surveyor-general of New Mexico upon the private land claim known as Encinas tract, José Luis Valdez, claimant, No. 55; which was referred to the Committee on Private Claims, and ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a supplementary report of the surveyor-general of New Mexico upon the private land claim known as the Petaca grant, No. 105; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and ordered to be printed.

CLAIM OF ANN MOREAU.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of fact by that court in the case of Ann Moreau vs. the United States; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

PROTECTION OF AMERICAN FISHING VESSELS, ETC.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 3173) to authorize the President of the United States to protect and defend the rights of American fishing vesssels, American fishermen, American trading and other vessels in certain cases, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. BELMONT. I move that this bill be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs with leave to report at any time.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the committee have leave to report at any time. Is there objection?

There being no objection, leave was granted.

Mr. DINGLEY. As this bill passed the Senate with amendments, and not as originally printed, I ask that it be now printed by the House as passed by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, that order will be made.

There was no objection; and it was ordered accordingly.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same, namely:

A bill (S. 2301) granting a pension to Lucy E. Anderson; and

A bill (S. 2098) for the relief of Rosella E. Hibbert.

COMMITTEE CHANGES.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. HARRIS as a member of the Committee on Agriculture in place of Mr. AIKEN; and of Mr. HOPKINS on the same committee in place of Mr. PRICE, deceased.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged report on the Army appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10242) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 17, 18, and 30.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 16, 19, 20, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 29, and 31, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 14: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert before the words proposed to be inserted by said amendment the words "not exceeding;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 15: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert before the word proposed to be inserted by said amendment the words "not exceeding;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 21: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$12,661,918.69;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 27: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 27, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$9,600;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 28: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out from said amendment the word "ordnance" where it first occurs, and strike out the sum named in the last line of the amended paragraph and insert in lieu thereof "$80,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

EDWARD S. BRAGG,
EGBERT L. VIELE,
GEO. W. STEELE,
Managers on the part of the House.

W. B. ALLISON,
P. B. PLUMB,
A. P. GORMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement accompanying the report was read, as follows:

Mr. BRAGG, on the part of the House conferrees, upon the bill (H. R. 10242) making appropriation for the support of the Army, with the Senate amendments thereto, submits the following report explanatory of the report of the joint conferrees submitted for adoption by the House:

Amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 19, 20, 22, 25, 29, and 30: Are mere changes in matters of form, and do not change the bill in any substantive sense.

Amendment numbered 16: Reduces the sums appropriated for paymasters' messengers and traveling expenses of paymasters' clerks from $88,800 to $83,800.

Amendments numbered 17 and 18: Allowing a clerk to the general retired and additional pay to the superintendent of military prison are disagreed to. The former because the provision is not germane to this bill, but should be placed on the legislative bill; the latter because it was not thought proper to increase pay for a duty which properly devolved upon the office held and exercised by the officer as a quartermaster in the regular Army.

Amendment numbered 21: Merely conforms the total to the amount previously appropriated after the reduction made by amendment numbered 16.

Amendment numbered 23: Strike out the words "and at," which takes away commutation of rations to troops while in encampment engaged in target practice.

Amendment numbered 24: Increases the limit which may be paid civilian employés in the Subsistence Department from $105,000 to $110,000.

Amendment numbered 26: Strikes out the provisions of the House bill which related to the use of the funds in the Quartermaster's Department to be expended on transportation.

This amendment was concurred in by the committee for one reason only, namely, that the power to prevent deficiencies was vested in the Secretary of War by proper orders through the Lieutenant-General and officers commanding division departments, posts, and detachments, and a belief that he would exercise such power, his attention being by this action specifically called to the subject.

Amendment numbered 27: Reduces the appropriation for construction of quarters for hospital stewards from $12,500 to $9,600.

Amendment numbered 28: Reduces the apropriation for "ordnance service" from $90,000 to $80,000.

Amendment numbered 31: Increases the appropriation for manufacture of arms at the national armory from $300,000 to $400,000.

The total increase of the bill, as the effects of the amendments, is $81,900.

Mr. BRAGG. I desire, Mr. Speaker, to make one statement to the House in connection with this report, because I do not think the Military Committee ought to permit an assertion which is published in the RECORD of this morning to go unchallenged. It was said that the effect of the proviso attached to the bill by this House, directing the manner in which funds appropriated to the Quartermaster's Department should be disbursed, was in fact a proviso placing the Army under the command of the Quartermaster-General. On behalf of the committee whom I represent I can not permit that statement to go unchallenged. It was a proviso carefully drawn to protect funds that are appropriated by Congress, to be disbursed by the Quartermaster-General, from the foray to be made upon them by every officer in command in the United States Army.

The Military Committee of the House appreciated, as does almost every one who has any communication with the Army, that there are certain officers who executed high commands during the late war who feel exceedingly restive when they feel the weight of civil orders brought to bear upon them directing the mode of expending public funds. The committee thought that a time of peace was the time to teach the officers of the Army that the power that grants the money to them is the power that shall direct the way and method in which it shall be disbursed; and for that reason we provided, in the report made to the House in the bill from the Military Committee, that the money appropriated to the Quartermaster-General's Department should be disbursed by the Quartermaster-General under the direction of the Secretary of War. Furthermore, that whenever a commander of a division, or a department, or of a post, had an emergency arise which required an immediate expenditure of money in his judgment, before that expenditure could be made he should be required to make his order for the expenditure in writing, and to state what the emergency was.

That, we thought, was necessary for the purpose of preventing the continual return from certain departments of the Government, year after year of deficiencies without any responsible head to whom they can be charged. You call upon the Quartermaster-General to account for a deficiency in transportation, for instance: "Why, Mr. Quartermaster-General, do you permit these deficiencies to be made?" He replies: "Sir, they were made without my knowledge. This money was expended and the contracts entered into elsewhere; and the first information coming to me on the subject is when the bill is presented to be paid." It was, therefore, to correct that evil that the House committee made a proviso and attached it to the bill covering the point, and, as we say in our report, we only receded from the proviso upon a consciousness of the fact that the power does now exist in the Secretary of War to prevent it, and we receded in order to avail ourselves of this opportunity of saying to the Secretary of War that when deficiencies came in from the departments under his administration, that he, and not a bureau officer, is responsible for them, and the officers under his command who create the deficiency are responsible to him for them. If, then, he discharges his duty as the credit of his administration requires—and I have no doubt whatever that he will do so—a general order will be issued by him to department commanders directing that no such expenditure shall hereafter be made.

I move the adoption of the report, upon which I ask the previous question.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let me ask the gentleman from Wisconsin a question: What is the total amount of the increase?

Mr. BRAGG. Eighty-one thousand nine hundred dollars.

Mr. HOLMAN. And the item of $100,000 for arms has been yielded by the House?

Mr. BRAGG. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. Making the whole sum for this purpose $400,000?

Mr. BRAGG. Yes, sir.

The conference report was adopted.

Mr. BRAGG moved to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TERMS OF UNITED STATES COURTS, VICKSBURG, MISS.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I move by unanimous consent to take from the House Calendar the bill (H. R. 6764) to provide for holding terms of the United States courts at Vicksburg, Miss., and I desire to say I have several amendments to offer which will make the bill agreeable to all the representatives of Mississippi.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the counties of Tunica, Coahoma, Bolivar, Washington, Sun Flower, Sharkey, Issaquena, and Warren shall constitute a part of the northern judicial district of Mississippi, and shall be known as the western division of said district; and courts for the transaction of business pertaining to the persons and property in said western division shall be held at the city of Vicksburg on the first Mondays of January and July in each year, and shall be held for four weeks, or so long as business may require.

SEC. 2. That the said court to be held at Vicksburg as provided in section 1 of this act shall be possessed of and shall exercise all the powers and jurisdiction now possessed or exercised, or which may hereafter be granted to or exercised, by the courts in said district now held at Oxford and Aberdeen, respectively; and for the purpose of exercising the jurisdiction herein conferred the said western division shall be a separate judicial district; and all laws regulating and defining how suits against persons or property located or found in judicial districts shall be brought shall be applicable to and govern the bringing of suits in said division; and all laws touching the removal of causes from State courts to United States courts shall apply to said court hereby established.

SEC. 3. That it shall be the duty of the clerks of the courts now held at Oxford and Jackson, on demand of either party to any suit now pending in either of said courts, and properly belonging to the court at Vicksburg, to make out and certify a copy of the record and proceedings in such suit, and to transmit the same to the clerk of said court at Vicksburg, who shall enter said cause on his docket, and the same shall be proceeded with as if it had been originally brought in said court. The fees for such transcript shall be paid by the party applying for the same.

SEC. 4. That the marshal and clerk of said northern district of Mississippi shall appoint deputies, who shall reside at Vicksburg and act as marshal and clerk of said court.

SEC. 5. That the United States shall not be at any expense in providing for a building or room for the holding of the terms of said court.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CATCHINGS's amendments were read, as follows:

Amend the first section by striking out the words "Tunica," "Coahoma," "Bolivar," and "Sunflower," and by striking out the word "northern," in the fifth line, and by inserting before the word "courts," in the sixth line, the words "circuit and district."

Amend section 2 by inserting "courts" in place of "court," in first line, and by inserting before the word "courts," in line 5, the words "circuit and district," and by striking out the words "at Oxford and Aberdeen," respectively, and inserting "at Jackson;" also amend section 2 by adding thereto the following words: "but all crimes and offenses heretofore committed within said southern district shall be prosecuted, tried, and determined in the same manner and with the same effect as if this act had not been passed."

Amend section 3 by striking out the words "Oxford and Jackson," in the second line, and inserting "Jackson."

Amend section 4 by striking out the word "northern," in line 1, and inserting "southern."

There was no objection, and the amendments were agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CATCHINGS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCook, its Secretary, announced the passage of bills of the following titles, without amendment:

A bill (H. R. 191) providing for the erection of a public building at Los Angeles, Cal.;

A bill (H. R. 9371) for the completion of a public building at Santa Fé, N. Mex.;

A bill (H. R. 9644) for the erection of a public building at Jefferson, Tex.; and

A bill (H. R. 10051) for the erection of a public building at Charleston, S. C.

It further announced the passage of bills of the following titles, with amendments; in which concurrence was requested:

A bill (H. R. 2539) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to exchange property purchased at Abingdon, Va., as a site for a public building for more suitable property; and

A bill (H. R. 7218) to amend an act entitled "An act for the erection of a public building at Chattanooga, Tenn.," approved February 25, 1885.

It further announced the passage of bills and a joint resolution of the following titles; in which concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 1920) to increase the appropriation for the erection of a public building at Minneapolis, Minn.;

A bill (S. 1974) providing for the erection of a public building at the city of Hastings, Nebr., and for other purposes;

A bill (S. 2303) for the erection of a public building at Chester, Pa.;

A bill (S. 3001) for the erection of a public building at Milwaukee, Wis.;

A bill (S. 3055) for the extension and repair of a public building at Newark, N. J.;

A bill (S. 3121) for the erection of a public building at Hanover, N. H.;

A bill (S. 1322) to provide for the erection of a public building at the city of Morgan City (port of Brashear), State of Louisiana; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 51) authorizing and directing the Department of Justice to transfer certain rooms which have been occupied by the United States courts to the city of Jackson, Miss.

FRANK J. BURROWS.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I ask, by unanimous consent, that the Private Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 3129) for the relief of Frank J. Burrows.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause the account of Frank J. Burrows, postmaster at the city of Williamsport, State of Pennsylvania, to be credited with the sum of $3,500, on account of the loss of that amount in postage-stamps by the robbery of said post-office on the 2d day of August, A. D. 1884, it appearing that said loss was without fault or negligence on the part of said postmaster.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. FLEEGER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3129) for the relief of Frank J. Burrows, having had the same under consideration, respectfully report:

That Frank J. Burrows was postmaster at the city of Williamsport P. O., Pa., from 1882, to ——; that on the 30th day of August, 1884, the said post-office was robbed of 50,000 1-cent postage-stamps, and 150,000 2-cent stamps, aggregating in value $3,500, and also of $522 in money.

The said robbery was committed about a quarter to twelve o'clock (noon), when the postmaster, clerks, carriers, and employés of the post-office were at dinner, with the exception of the assistant postmaster, the mailing clerk, and the delivery and stamp clerk. The mailing clerk was busy at his desk. The delivery and stamp clerk was at the general delivery window, and the assistant postmaster, Mr. Shay, was occupied in the money-order office in the rear part of the office. The stamps and money stolen were in an iron safe belonging to the Department, and furnished for that purpose by the Department. The stamps were in the original packages in which they had been sent to the post-office.

While so engaged as aforesaid a boy came in and told the assistant postmaster that a gentleman in a buggy in front of the door wished to speak to him. Mr. Shay, the assistant postmaster, at once left his work and went to the door. The man in the buggy said he was sorry to have brought him out, but he was lame and could not get out of the buggy. He then said that he wanted to ask him how he would have to proceed to get seeds from the Department, &c. Mr. Shay replied that he was not able to give him the information, but supposed he could get them through the member of Congress from his district. Mr. Shay then returned to his office, not having been gone, as he thinks, more than three or four minutes. That afternoon it was discovered that the stamps mentioned had been taken from the safe and packages similar in size and appearance substituted for them; also that the money mentioned had been stolen. It is supposed that while the man in the buggy engaged the assistant postmaster in conversation, a confederate, or confederates, entered by a side door from the alley or through a window and committed the robbery. Diligent effort was made by the postmaster and the inspectors and officials of the Post-Office Department to discover and apprehend the thieves, but without success.

A. G. Sharp, chief inspector, Post-Office Department, in a letter to Hon. William T. Price, dated January 13, 1885, in answer to one for information as to the robbery, says:

"A thorough examination was made by an inspector to ascertain if there was any evidence of collusion between the thieves and the employés of the Williamsport office, or any of them, but none could be found. * * * A rigid and searching investigation was made of the accounts of the office, and everything was found to be in good shape, except the losses before stated. The assistant postmaster has the absolute confidence of the postmaster, and, in fact, the confidence of every one with whom he has come in business contact."

J. M. Speese, the inspector of the Post-Office Department who investigated the said robbery within a few days after the same was committed, states in a letter written by him to a member of this committee:

"This robbery was planned by ingenious and bold thieves from New York, and due vigilance could not have prevented its execution."

He also states—

"I have always found the Williamsport post-office intelligently and carefully managed, and the interests of the Department and the public carefully conducted."

From all the evidence your committee conclude that no blame can attach to said postmaster for said loss, and believing that he should have credit on his account with the Government for said loss as provided in the bill, recommend that the bill do pass.

There was no objection, and the Private Calendar was discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and it was taken up, ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. LANHAM. I ask by unanimous consent——

Mr. WILLIS. I demand the regular order of business.

UNLAWFUL INCLOSURES OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. PAYSON, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back the following resolution, with the recommendation that it be adopted:

Whereas Congress, by the act approved February 25, 1885 (23 Stats. at Large, page 321), prohibited any and all inclosures of public lands, except held under claim of title made in good faith, and the Secretary of the Interior shows in his last annual report to the President, dated November 1, 1886, that notwithstanding the provisions of said act the practice of unlawfully inclosing large areas of the public lands still continues, and the Secretary, in said report, suggests that "it is to some extent a matter of doubt whether the prohibitory provision of the law covers these cases, though I am of opinion that it does; and should there be any doubt in the mind of Congress upon the point, additional legislation will be needed:"

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be required to procure the opinion of the Attorney-General for the use of this House whether, to reach the cases cited by the Secretary of the Interior, especially as to lands in the granted limits of railroad land grants, any further legislation is needed.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. PAYSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REPORT ON INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing to report back, with a favorable recommendation, the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the House 15,000 copies of the corrected report of the committee of conference on the bill (S. 1532) to regulate commerce, together with the detailed statement of the House conferrees on the said bill.

The report of the committee was read, as follows:

The estimated cost of printing the same is $131.70. The Public Printer estimates the cost of the amount of printing previously estimated upon, ordered by Congress within the present fiscal year, at $134,364.12. The committee recommend the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to know whether the resolution provides for the printing of the detailed statement of the House conferrees.

Mr. BARKSDALE. It does.

Mr. SPRINGER. Why print that now? It was simply for the information of the House to enable it to comprehend what changes were made. It seems to me all we require to have printed now is the bill itself. I suggest that part of the resolution be omitted as the necessity for it has entirely passed.

Mr. BARKSDALE. The cost of the printing is very small indeed, as will be seen by the report, and the statement of the conferrees is very much desired by many members. I do not think the gentleman from Illinois should urge an objection to that.

Mr. SPRINGER. It was very desirable pending the consideration of the matter before the House, but now, as it has been determined and the will of the House has been declared, I see no necessity for it.

Mr. FARQUHAR. It is the whole statement of the merits of the changes made in the bill.

The resolution was adopted.

REPORT OF VISITORS TO MILITARY ACADEMY.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I am also instructed by the Committee on Printing to report back with a favorable recommendation the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That 5,000 extra copies of the annual report of the Board of Visitors to the United States Military Academy for the year 1886 be printed for the use of Members of the House of Representatives, in accordance with the recommendation of the Committee on Military Affairs, herewith presented.

The report was read, as follows:

The estimated cost of printing and covering 5,000 extra copies of said report is $152.20. The approximate cost of the amount of printing previously estimated upon ordered by Congress within the present fiscal year is $133,902.33.

The resolution was adopted.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CRISP). The regular order is the call of standing and select committees for reports.

ANDREW J. EDGERLY.

Mr. BRAGG, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 10353) for the relief of Andrew J. Edgerly; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. BRAGG, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back bills of the following titles, and they were referred to the Committee on War Claims:

The bill (H. R. 7419) for the relief of George M. Little; and

The bill (H. R. 9023) for the relief of Francisco V. De Coster.

WILLIAM C. SPENCER.

Mr. WHEELER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. 9905) for the relief of William C. Spencer; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S DEPARTMENT.

Mr. WHEELER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. 10804) to effect a re-arrangement of grades of offices in the Adjutant-General's Department of the Army; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORT.

Mr. CUTCHEON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back with an adverse recommendation the petition of Schuyler Hamilton; which was laid upon the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS AT HARRISONBURG, VA.

Mr. SNYDER, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. 2058) to complete the public building at Harrisonburg, Va.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT OWENSBOROUGH, KY.

Mr. SNYDER, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, also reported back, with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. 1536) for the purchase of suitable ground in the city of Owensborough, in the State of Kentucky, and the erection thereon of a public building for the post-office, United States collector's office, United States commissioner's office, and for the use of other United States officers in said city, and appropriating money for said purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ELIZABETH SAILER.

Mr. MATSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with an amendment the bill (H. R. 5963) for the relief of Elizabeth Sailer; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the amendment and accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MRS. ANNA ETHERIDGE HOOKS.

Mr. WINANS, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. 2884) granting a pension to Mrs. Anna Etheridge Hooks; which was referred to the committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ANNA B. KERR.

Mr. ELLSBERRY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 9898) for the relief of Anna B. Kerr; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ACCOUNTS WITH RAILWAY COMPANIES.

Mr. NEAL, from the Committee on Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. 511) to provide for the settlement of accounts with certain railway companies; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

HYLAND C. KIRK AND OTHERS.

Mr. HOWARD, from the Committee on Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. 2560) for the relief of Hyland C. Kirk and others, assignees of Addison C. Fletcher; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOWARD. I ask that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of the House bill (H. R. 7649) having the same title, and that the same be laid upon the table.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

JAMES H. GILBERT.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri, from the Committee on Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 10073) for the relief of James H. Gilbert; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ARREARS OF TAXES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BARBOUR, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back with an amendment the bill (H. R. 9469) relating to arrears of taxes in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SALES FOR OVERDUE TAXES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BARBOUR, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 9064) prescribing the times for sales and for notice of sales of property in the District of Columbia for overdue taxes; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY.

Mr. BARKSDALE, from the Committee on Printing, reported back with a favorable recommendation the concurrent resolution providing for the printing of 5,000 additional copies of the report of the Superintendent of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, &c.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JULIA A. SLUDER.

Mr. SHAW, from the Committee on Claims, reported back with an amendment the bill (H. R. 10178) for the relief of Mrs. Julia A. Sluder, executrix of E. Sluder, deceased; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

REPRESENTATIVES OF HENRY H. SIBLEY.

Mr. TRIGG, from the Committee on Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. 909) for the relief of the legal personal representatives of Henry H. Sibley, deceased; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. BUCHANAN, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to have the views of the minority printed with the report.

LAND CLAIMS IN ARKANSAS, FLORIDA, LOUISIANA, ETC.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The hour for the consideration of bills under the rule begins at nine minutes to 1 o'clock. The call rests with the Committee on Private Land Claims. The Clerk will report the title of the pending bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7214) to authorize the examination, approval, and patenting of certain unconfirmed private land claims in the States of Arkansas, Florida, Louisiana, and Missouri, and in the States of Alabama and Mississippi south of the thirty-first degree of north latitude.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill was under consideration on Monday last, and, by order of the House, was printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SPRINGER. Has the bill been considered in Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill is on the House Calendar.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is it not subject to be considered in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The present occupant of the chair is informed that when the bill was last up the Speaker held that it was properly in the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. It occurred to me that this bill provided for disposing of public lands; and, if so, it should have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. I was not aware that the Speaker had given an opinion on that point.

Mr. SADLER. Mr. Speaker, it appears that in section 12 of this bill there are two provisos. The last was intended by the committee to be a substitute for the first, and I therefore offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend by striking out all beginning with the word "provided," in line 14 of section 12, down to the word "provided," in line 42 of the same section.

Mr. SPRINGER. Has the bill been read, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The bill was partly read, and by unanimous consent of the House it was printed in the RECORD. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] desire to have it read?

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to have it read before it is acted upon, but if any gentleman desires to discuss it now, I do not object to that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a right to have it read whenever he desires. In the mean time, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SADLER] may proceed.

Mr. SADLER. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from Illinois to state how much time he wants for the discussion of this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois does not ask for time; he asks whether the bill has been read or not.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from Alabama will do well to proceed to explain the provisions of this bill before we are asked to vote upon it.

Mr. SADLER. Mr. Speaker, this bill refers to certain land claims originating under cessions from France under treaty with the United States in 1803. Since that date several acts of Congress looking to the adjustment ot these claims have been passed. The first was passed in the year 1805; after that, in 1807, another was passed, and several acts having the same object in view, the adjustment of these claims, have been passed since that date, the last, I believe, in 1860. Some of those acts provided for the adjustment of these claims by the appointment of a board of commissioners for that purpose; some referred them to the registers and receivers of the land offices; some to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, for approval. The act of 1860, however, referred the settlement of these claims to the United States district court. Notwithstanding these opportunities afforded by Congress to claimants in the various States and parts of States mentioned in the bill, there are yet in those States a large number of persons who have failed to avail themselves of these provisions; and there are still outstanding unsettled claims in all the States designated.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, does not ask for a dollar from the Government under any circumstances. It is simply a bill to quiet title, a bill necessary as well to the Government as to the citizens for whose benefit it is more particularly proposed. It is a measure of relief by the Government to citizens of these States who hold these lands and have held them by inheritance for more than three-quarters of a century.

The Government of the United States has never attempted to interfere with these claimants or the lands upon which they are located. It was provided in the acts of cession that the owners or occupants of the lands should be protected in their settlements; therefore, the Government of the United States could not, with propriety, as it never has done, interfere with these persons. But under the new order of things which occurs in what some term "the new South" these lands are now upon the market. Persons from other sections of the country go there and wish to purchase them. The occupants of the land have rested secure as they supposed in their possession, believing that sufficient. But when the terms of sale are agreed upon and the would-be purchaser demands title from the occupant, he has none to show, and therefore can not transfer his property.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Where are these lands chiefly situated?

Mr. SADLER. Most of them which have not been confirmed are, I presume, in the State of Louisiana. Many of them have been confirmed heretofore under various acts of Congress.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I wish to ask whether this is a unanimous report from the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. SADLER. It is a unanimous report.

Mr. BLANCHARD. And these are lands to which the Government now asserts no title.

Mr. SADLER. None whatever; and it has never done so.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. How much land is embraced in this bill?

Mr. SADLER. It is impossible to tell. It applies to all the lands which need a confirmatory act of this kind. The bill provides that the claimants shall file their petitions with the register or receiver of the land offices in the several districts in which the lands are located, or, if there are no registers or receivers in the district, then with the Commissioner of the General Land Office; and in each case the final approval of the Secretary of the Interior is required.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Is the passage of the bill recommended by the Interior Department?

Mr. SADLER. It appears, I think, that substantially this bill was draughted by the Secretary of the Interior. I have been so informed.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Not the present Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. SADLER. No, sir.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I understand that this bill has never been submitted to him or to the present Commissioner of the Land Office.

Mr. SADLER. I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HALSELL].

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, has anybody been recognized in opposition to this bill?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SADLER] called up the bill, and being entitled to an hour has yielded ten minutes of his time to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SADLER. I will yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] if he wishes to speak.

Mr. NELSON. This is an important bill, and I ask time in my own right to oppose the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that there is only one hour for the consideration of this bill this morning, and if its consideration be not completed at the end of the hour, the bill will take its place with the unfinished business of the House. The gentleman from Alabama having called up the bill on behalf of the committee, has the floor for one hour, and can occupy the entire time if he desires to do so.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Will there not be another hour on the next call?

The SPEAKER. There will not be, because this is the second hour of the committee. The bill comes over by reason of the fact that it was unfinished at the termination of the last consideration hour.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, under these circumstances I will avail myself of the courtesy of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SADLER], and briefly state my objections to the bill.

This is a bill which on its face purports to give authority to a great number of private claimants to go before the register and receiver of the local land offices in the several States interested to prefer their claims by petition and have them passed upon and allowed. And where there is no register or receiver the cases are to be acted on in the first instance by the Commissioner of the General Land Office. Where a case is acted on by a register and receiver they are to report the matter to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, whose decision is to be in a certain measure final, though he reports to the Secretary of the Interior. Claimants who are disappointed in the decision of the register and receiver at the local land office, or in the decision of the Commissioner, may appeal; but there is no corresponding right of appeal secured to the Government if the decision should be deemed adverse to its interests.

The object of this bill is to allow a number of private claimants to have their claims passed upon in this way by a sort of ex parte tribunal—first by the register and receiver of the local land office, and next by the Commissioner of the General Land Office. No provision is made for protecting the rights of the United States Government by the appearance of counsel in its behalf. Private land claims of this character ought to be preferred in some of the Federal courts where the rights of the United States would be protected by the local district attorneys. No provision of that kind is made in this case.

In addition to that, Mr. Speaker, whenever these claims are allowed as proposed in this bill there is to be, if they can not be satisfied locally, I mean if the local lands can not satisfy them, there is a species of land-scrip to be issued which is assignable and can be used to locate lands all over the Union. This is contained in section 11, and is a similar provision to that contained in the bill that passed the other day on the report of this committee, but which was eliminated by amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, without going into detail, I think this is a most dangerous bill. If these private land claimants have any claims as to land grants against the Government those claims ought to be passed upon and adjudicated in the Federal courts, and the United States ought to be protected by counsel appearing in those courts. I would, therefore, if I am entitled to make any motion, Mr. Speaker, move that this bill be recommitted to the Committee on the Public Lands with instructions to so amend the bill.

Mr. SADLER. I only yielded to the gentleman for debate, and not for amendment.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield for amendment?

Mr. SADLER. I do not.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the gentleman will yield to me.

Mr. SADLER. For how long?

Mr. SPRINGER. For ten minutes.

Mr. SADLER. I have already yielded for ten minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HALSELL].

Mr. SPRINGER. Very well, then; I will wait until after the gentleman from Kentucky has completed his remarks.

Mr. HALSELL. Mr. Speaker, the legislation proposed in the pending bill is in many respects really the re-enactment of several acts of Congress passed heretofore in reference to private land claims in the States mentioned in the bill. The last one of these acts expired by limitation in 1875.

As was stated by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SADLER], these private land claims had their origin in the governments of France, Spain, and Great Britain long before any of these lands were embraced in the States in which they are located. These private land claims arose before the sovereignty over these lands was ceded to the United States. Under the treaties by which those lands were ceded to the Government of the United States, it was specially provided that all persons having bona fide claims to such lands were to be protected in their rights. In order to carry out the obligations of those treaties various acts, as I have already stated, were passed by Congress, and efforts were made to close up the whole matter.

It is suggested by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] that this is merely an ex parte proceeding; that these parties have the right in the presentation of their claims to be represented by counsel, while there is no provision for representation by counsel upon the part of the United States. The bill provides at the same time that the register and receiver, or the Commissioner of the General Land Office, as the case may be, shall have the right, and it is their duty likewise, when witnesses are presented by attorneys, to cross-examine them in reference to the merits of the case.

So that, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me there is nothing at all in the gentleman's objection, and that the Government of the United States can be protected by its officials as provided in the bill.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. What was the practice of determining these private land claims under the acts which you say expired in 1875?

Mr. HALSELL. There was an act passed in 1860 for the settlement of private land claims, and there were other acts before that time and since. The last one of these acts which was in existence expired in 1875. Some of them contained substantially the same provisions as in the present bill for the settlement of these claims.

One of the provisions of the bill is that these claimants shall present their cases within three years after the passage of the act, and must prosecute them within five years. The bill further provides this shall be a final settlement of all these claims, and that if persons who hold such claims refuse or fail to present them within three years or to prosecute them within five years those cases shall be barred.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I understood from some gentlemen that some of these claimants have been in possession three-quarters of a century. The gentleman stated a number of acts were heretofore passed providing for the hearing and determining of these claims. Now, if these parties did not present their claims to have them determined and we are to have this act passed, when is there to be an end of this matter?

Mr. HALSELL. We propose that this shall be the end of it. Thinking these private land cases have had sufficient opportunity, this bill, it is intended, shall provide final settlement, so that cases not presented within three years shall be barred.

Mr. PERKINS. If, as I understand, there was no limitation in the previous acts, why could not these parties perfect their titles without the passage of this?

Mr. HALSELL. That right expired by limitation.

Mr. PERKINS. I understood that there was no limitation.

Mr. HALSELL. The law itself expired by limitation. There was no limitation as to the time of filing the claims, but the law under which they could be filed expired by limitation. That provision of law, as I have said, was renewed from time to time to enable these parties to present their claims with their evidence of title, and the last extension of it expired by limitation in 1875; so that without a provision of this character these parties are barred by that limitation from presenting their claims to perfect their titles. This bill, I repeat, is substantially the same bill that was heretofore passed extending the provisions of the original act for filing these claims from time to time.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Let me ask the gentleman one more question.

Mr. HALSELL. Well, my time is very limited.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Let me ask, have the various Presidents or the heads of the Interior Department from time to time brought the matter to the attention of Congress?

Mr. HALSELL. Yes, sir; the Secretary of the Interior has.

Mr. HOLMAN. And the Commissioner of the General Land Office?

Mr. HALSELL. The Secretary of the Interior recommends something of this sort.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is a question in reference to this bill that I would like to ask for information.

By the terms of section 6 a person having occupied these lands for a period of thirty years uninterruptedly, or who held them from a person who had occupied them for that period, would be entitled to the benefits of this act.

Mr. HALSELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, by the last clause of section 11 it is provided that the benefits of this bill shall apply only to those lands proved to be held in actual possession and occupancy as provided in section 6 of the act, that is to say, an actual uninterrupted possession. By the first clause of the eleventh section it is provided as follows:

SEC. 11. That if any of the land embraced within the limits of a private claim finally approved under this act shall have been disposed of by the United States in such manner that it can not be patented to the claimant, the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall issue, in legal subdivisions as near as practical, certificates of location to the claimant for a quantity of land equal to the land so disposed of, in the manner provided by act of Congress approved January 28, 1879.

Now, how does it happen that where there has been an uninterrupted possession of the land, under the claim of title, the Government could have disposed of the land in such manner as to entitle a party claiming to obtain a location elsewhere upon the public lands under a patent to be issued by the Government. Is not that a very objectionable feature of the bill?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. HALSELL. I am very sorry that my time was all taken up before I had succeeded in explaining the bill.

Mr. SADLER. I yield now five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER].

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I desire the attention of the House for a few moments in regard to some of the provisions of this bill. It provides for settling certain private land grants derived from foreign governments by a reference of the claims to the registers or receivers of the land office in the locality in which they are situated. The proceeding under the bill is wholly ex parte and the bill authorizes the register or receiver of the land office in the State where these grants may be found to hear and determine the questions of fact which may be brought by a claimant, to subpœna witnesses, and to take their testimony. If the decision of such register or receiver of the land office is adverse to the claimant, he may file with the Secretary of the Interior an appeal and the decision of the Secretary of the Interior of such appeal is final as to the claimant's right.

Section 6 provides that where the claimant can not prove his title by a continuous chain from the foreign government down to him, all that is required on his part is to prove actual possession and occupancy of the lands for thirty years; and in that event he may have a patent issued to him for the lands whether they are traceable to the foreign government or not.

Section 11 provides that if the person has a claim, and there is no land upon which he can obtain a patent, or the land which was granted to him has been disposed of by the Government to somebody else, that he may have a "float" or warrant given to him by which he can locate anywhere upon the public lands within the limits of the United States.

Mr. PERKINS. What do you think of that section?

Mr. SPRINGER. I think it ought not to be adopted. There can be no more dangerous provision by law giving authority to the Secretary of the Interior than that which would authorize, upon an ex parte examination of this kind, the issuance of a float or a patent which would authorize its holder to locate the warrant anywhere on the public domain.

Now, Mr. Speaker, section 6 provides that where the party can not prove the title from the foreign government down to him he only needs to prove that he has been in continuous possession for thirty years, upon which proof he shall be entitled to this privilege. Section 11 provides that if the lands which he claims and to which he has proven a title by this ex parte proceeding before the register or receiver have been sold by the United States to some other person, then the patent shall be issued to him to be located on any part of the public lands.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Will you allow me to call attention to section 12?

Mr. SPRINGER. In a moment.

It seems to me the powers conferred by the bill upon the registers and receivers of the land office are so broad and important that they should not be conferred in any case except upon a court of justice with the right of appeal to both parties to the Supreme Court of the United States. To confer upon a register or receiver of the land office this extraordinary judicial power it seems to me is without precedent in this country. These claims of title are questions that a court alone should decide. They are subject to too many contingencies to be intrusted into the hands of a register or receiver, and frequently are founded on fraud or have no foundation whatever in fact.

Mr. ELY. Is it not a fact that the decision of the receivers in such cases would have no effect unless approved by the Commissioner of the General Land Office?

Mr. SPRINGER. That is true, but the whole proceeding before the receiver, on which the Commissioner of the Land Office would act, is ex parte.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SADLER. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HALL].

Mr. HALL. This bill applies by its express terms only to lands to which the Government itself makes no claim. It applies to lands which are held by individuals under supposed grants or cessions from the foreign governments who at one time had the right to cede them to their inhabitants, and which were claimed by these individuals at the time the domain was acquired by the United States; and which class of titles were expressly recognized by the treaties under which that public domain was acquired.

Since then these claimants have continued to occupy and reside upon these lands, transmitting them by conveyance, by will, and by inheritance, as if they owned them, under that imperfect character of title which they obtained from governments having different land systems from that of the United States. These various claimants have been applying to Congress for confirmation of their rights under the treaties until, in 1860, the Congress of the United States, with a view of freeing itself from the vast number of applications of this kind, passed a statute conferring upon the registers and receivers of the United States authority to investigate and decide and transmit their decisions to the Interior Department, whose confirmation was to be certified to Congress, and Congress then could act advisedly. That enactment contained a limitation of, I think, ten years at least. Within that time a great many of these claimants filed their records in the office of the Secretary, but could obtain no relief owing to the fact that Congress could not act.

In 1867 that statute was extended for a period of three years. In 1872 it was again extended, and it has expired now by reason of its own provisions, leaving in the office of the Interior Department a vast number of these claims with their records, which were pending at the time the law ceased to be operative, and which claims could not be adjudicated, not by reason of omissions or fault of the claimants, but because they could not be reached and acted upon in the time limited by law.

In addition to this class of people there were many ignorant people who, as it is said, did not know the law and who have not filed their claims and who are year after year petitioning Congress for the assistance and aid this bill seeks to give. This bill is but a renewal of that old legislation and an attempt to relieve Congress of these private land claims and place them in the hands of the Department with authority to give the confirmation they should receive.

As has been explained by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HALSELL], these claimants own their lands and have as valid a right and title to them as any one has to any land under more modern methods of transfer. But the original inception of title which passes from the Government to the individual is wanting. Therefore, when they attempt to make sales or effect loans on their property or protect themselves against invasion their title is imperfect, owing to this defect. They have as absolute a right to this aid from Congress as any right can be—as absolute a right to a remedy in this respect.

This bill provides that the register and receiver shall be authorized by a proper proceeding, in which the Government may appear if it sees proper, to investigate, and report to the Commissioner of the General Land Office. If the two officers are unable to agree they certify the case, and it all goes to the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Mr. SADLER. I yield two minutes more to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HALL].

Mr. HALL. While it has been said that the Government itself has no right of appeal from the Commissioner of the General Land Office to the Secretary of the Interior in case the decision is favorable to the claimant, I suggest that the Commissioner of the General Land Office is an officer so high in that Department that his decision can be safely left where he puts it without further delay adverse to and hindering the rights of these claimants. That was the view of the committee.

As regards the eleventh section, it provides that in case any of the land the right to which has been recognized under these proceedings by the Government has been disposed of by the Government itself in such way as that it can not patent it, then a certificate of indemnity shall be issued to the claimant. I call the attention of the gentlemen who criticise this section to the fact that it applies by its own terms expressly only to cases where the claimant has been in actual adverse notorious public possession of the land for the last thirty years. That is expressly provided for in that section.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why retain the eleventh section?

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BRAGG. Does the bill make any provision to guard against elastic surveys?

Mr. HALL. There are none. The bill only applies to cases where the claimant proves that he has been in actual possession of the land.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the sixth section only applies to those who can not prove their title from the foreign government.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HALL] has expired.

Mr. SADLER. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PETTIBONE].

Mr. PETTIBONE. I have only two minutes, and I ask the attention of the House for that time. This is a bill to quiet titles to land. It may not be an ideally perfect bill, but it covers simply the old Louisiana purchase, and it provides where parties owning the lands where they trace their title either to Spain or France shall have their title perfected; or, in case they can not do that, when they have been in actual possession adversely for thirty years, cultivating, owning, possessing, and improving their lands, they shall have the presumption of law that they own those lands, and their titles shall be perfected. Believing that to be right, I favor the bill. That is all there is in it.

Mr. SPRINGER. A good deal more than that.

Mr. SADLER. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question upon the amendment and upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman will give an opportunity for the amendment of the eleventh section.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to recommit this bill to the Committee on Public Lands.

The SPEAKER. That motion can not be entertained when the demand for the previous question is pending.

The question was taken upon ordering the previous question on the amendments, and upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time; and there were—ayes 50, noes 73.

Mr. SADLER. I demand tellers.

Tellers were refused.

Mr. SADLER. No quorum, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SADLER] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER].

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 30, noes 19.

Mr. SADLER. I will withdraw the point of no quorum and the demand for the previous question, and accept the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, is not this matter open to debate if the demand for the previous question is withdrawn?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. PAYSON. Then if no other gentleman desires recognition, I would like to be recognized.

Mr. SADLER. I have not yielded the floor, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman necessarily yielded the floor when he demanded the previous question.

Mr. SADLER. I withdrew that demand in order to permit the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to offer an amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I send up the amendment, Mr. Speaker, and ask that it be read.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, what is the parliamentary condition of the bill now?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SADLER] demanded the previous question; no quorum voted; thereupon tellers were appointed, and during the count by tellers the gentleman from Alabama withdrew his demand for the previous question.

Mr. PAYSON. Was not that tantamount to yielding the floor?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so, and thinks that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] will be entitled to the floor when the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has been read.

The amendment offered by Mr. HOLMAN was read, as follows:

Add to the 11th section:

Provided, That such certificates of location shall be located in the State within the limits of which the original grant was situated, and not elsewhere: Provided, however, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to any land claim which shall exceed 160 acres in extent.

Mr. SADLER, Mr. PAYSON, and Mr. BLOUNT addressed the Chair.

Mr. SADLER. I yielded the floor, Mr. Speaker, simply for the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to offer his amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman demanded the previous question, which is always construed as yielding the floor. Afterward the gentleman withdrew the demand. Does he insist now that he withdrew the demand with the view of resuming the floor to address the House?

Mr. SADLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. PAYSON. I insist, Mr. Speaker, that that can not be done. The gentleman can not blow hot and cold at the same time. Having demanded the previous question and been beaten, he can not then resume the floor.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to renew the demand for the previous question?

Mr. SADLER. I do upon that amendment.

Mr. PAYSON. I understand the gentleman to say that he desires to demand the previous question upon this amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's statement now is that he withdrew the demand for the previous question only for the purpose of allowing the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to propose his amendment, intending to renew it as soon as the amendment had been offered.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is the case, Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge.

The SPEAKER. Upon that statement the gentleman is entitled to the floor to renew his demand for the previous question.

Mr. SADLER. I do renew it.

Mr. PAYSON. Let us vote it down again.

The question was taken upon ordering the previous question upon the amendment, and upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time; and the Speaker declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. SADLER called for a division.

The House again divided; and there were—ayes 36, noes 55.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] to act as tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 33, noes 35.

Several MEMBERS. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The hour for the consideration of bills called up by committees has expired.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BACON, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. GREEN, for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. LINDSLEY, for eight days, on account of important business.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILLIS. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to consider the river and harbor bill.

Mr. HATCH. Pending that motion, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of the special order, the pleuro-pneumonia bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is first on the motion made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH].

The question being taken, there were—ayes 73, noes 78.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. No quorum.

Mr. HATCH. I hope the gentleman will not press the demand for tellers. I have on several occasions asked the House to take up the pleuro-pneumonia bill on account of its great importance. But I do not wish to have time consumed by dilatory motions in trying to get the right of way, because consumption of time in that manner simply delays us that much longer. I reiterate what I have heretofore stated, that I am anxious to reach the consideration of this bill as soon as possible and to get it out of the way of the river and harbor bill; but I do not desire to have the time of the House taken up either by demands for tellers or by calls for yeas and nays.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. The gentleman from Missouri who has charge of the pleuro-pneumonia bill may consider this point as made by me simply for dilatory purposes, but he is entirely mistaken. I believe this bill to be of far greater importance than the river and harbor bill. If gentlemen do not want to waste time, let them take up this bill.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Kansas insist upon the point that no quorum has voted?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I do.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, and Mr. WILLIS were appointed.

The House proceeded to divide; but before the final report of the tellers,

Mr. HEPBURN said: Mr. Speaker, I call for the yeas and nays.

The question being taken, the yeas and nays were ordered; there being—ayes 24, noes 93; more than one-fifth voting in the affirmative.

Mr. HATCH. Did the Chair announce the result of the vote by tellers?

The SPEAKER. The Chair had not announced the result, but the count, so far as it had proceeded, was 63 ayes and 96 noes.

Mr. HATCH. I withdraw my motion.

The SPEAKER. The House has ordered the yeas and nays upon it.

Mr. HEPBURN. I desire to renew the motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri can not withdraw his motion except by unanimous consent.

Several MEMBERS objected.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois.

Mr. HATCH. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my motion. I hope gentlemen will not use my motion to take up time when the House, on a vote by tellers, has shown itself so largely against the motion.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. The House may change its mind. I object.

Mr. HEPBURN. I have no desire to take up time unnecessarily; but I believe on this vote we shall have enough to take up the gentleman's bill.

Mr. HATCH. The gentleman will find out after a while that he can not take up a bill of which I have control in this House without the consent of the committee I have the honor to represent. I hope no friend of our bill will vote with the gentleman.

Mr. HAMMOND. I rise to a parliamentary question: Is it not in order to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered?

The SPEAKER. That motion is in order, but it has not been made.

Mr. HAMMOND. I make that motion.

Mr. STEELE. I make the point of order that the process of calling the roll had begun, and nothing else is in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair had stated the question, but he believes the call of the roll had not commenced.

Mr. STEELE. The name of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS] was called.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is advised by the Clerk that the name of one gentleman was called, but there was no response. The Chair thinks the motion to reconsider is in order.

Mr. HEPBURN. I raise the point of order that the motion was not made in time; the roll-calll had begun.

The SPEAKER. But the vote had not actually commenced. One name had been called, but no response had been given.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I refrained from answering.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman did not respond, so that no vote was actually taken.

Mr. PERKINS. I desire to inquire how the gentleman who makes this motion to reconsider voted on the original question?

The SPEAKER. There was no vote by yeas and nays; and in such a case every gentleman is regarded as voting on the majority side, there being no record of the vote.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. HAMMOND, there were—ayes 89, noes 18.

The SPEAKER. The ayes have it; and the vote ordering the yeas and nays is reconsidered.

Mr. HEPBURN. I make the point that after the yeas and nays have been ordered by a sufficient number, it is not competent for the House by a majority vote to reconsider that action.

The SPEAKER. According to the rulings heretofore made a majority can adopt a motion to reconsider in this case; but the question at once recurs on ordering the yeas and nays, when one-fifth can again order them; and no further motion to reconsider can be made. The question will be taken again on ordering the yeas and nays.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 17, noes 125.

So (less than one-fifth voting in the affirmative) the yeas and nays were not ordered.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays having been refused, the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] is rejected.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill (S. 54) to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on the various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States and the Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes; when the Speaker signed the same.

ENTRY OF DISTILLED SPIRITS.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That it shall be in order on Tuesday, February 1, 1887, immediately after the expiration of the hour for the call of committees for the consideration of bills, to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering a bill (H. R. 7140) entitled an act to amend the laws relating to the entry of distilled spirits in distilleries and special bonded warehouses, and the withdrawal of the same therefrom, and for the payment of the tax thereon; and if said motion shall be agreed to, it shall be in order on each morning thereafter at the expiration of said hour to make the said motion until the consideration of the said bill is completed; but if on said February 1 said motion is not agreed to, it shall be in order on Tuesday, February 8, immediately after the expiration of the hour for the call of committees for the consideration of bills to make said motion, and if this said motion is agreed to it shall be in order each day thereafter, after said hour, to make said motion until the consideration of said bill is completed.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The question then recurred on Mr. WILLIS's motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to resume the consideration of the river and harbor bill.

Mr. HEPBURN demanded a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 117, noes 9.

Mr. HEPBURN. No quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER appointed as tellers Mr. HEPBURN and Mr. WILLIS.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 146, noes 19.

So the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. MCMILLIN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House resumes the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10419) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The Clerk will report the pending amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 6 strike out "Secretary of War" and insert "President."

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee arose it was voting on that amendment, but no quorum appeared. If there be no objection the vote will be taken again. [After a pause.] The noes seem to have it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I demand a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 11, noes 93.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If the amendment is to be rejected, it must be rejected by a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN appointed as tellers Mr. LA FOLLETTE and Mr. WILLIS.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 5, noes 165.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. NELSON. I move to strike out all after the enacting clause, and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

The Clerk read as follows:

That the sum of $7,500,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, which may be expended by a board of engineers, consisting of the Chief of Engineers and the four engineers now senior in service, either for the repair, preservation, construction, or completion of such public improvements of river and harbors as shall in their judgment afford practical and important facilities for the transportation by water of interstate commerce.

Mr. NELSON. I offer this amendment, Mr. Chairman, for this reason: It appears now, after a struggle of nearly two days or more on this river and harbor bill, that there is a determined effort to defeat the passage of any bill.

While I do not feel that this is the most appropriate way of expending the public money, while I feel it would be more in consonance with Republican principles and in accordance with our practice in making appropriations of the public money that the several items should be specifically designated, yet I prefer to take an appropriation in gross in this form rather than we should not have any appropriation at all for the coming fiscal year. There are many important river and harbor works all over the country which need taking care of, which need development—a great many rivers and harbors which need improvement in that way to increase the means we have of checking and restraining the rapacity of the railway system. And, sir, there are a great many who have the idea—and I do not mean any one in this Chamber—that some men outside who are opposing the river and harbor improvements from time to time do it in the interest of great railroad corporations. But, sir, however that may be, while it may be there are some items which ought not to be in the bill, which relate to some rivers and harbors upon which public money ought not to be expended, yet we must admit that great good is accomplished for the country by these improvements.

Take my own district in Minnesota, take my own city of Duluth, and you know, Mr. Chairman, that in this Chamber but a few years ago that city of Duluth was made the butt for the wit and fancy and for the eloquence of a most distinguished member from Kentucky, Hon. J. Proctor Knott. Yet, strange as it may seem, the day is not distant, but in the near future, when we will see fulfilled all the predictions of that gentleman in his most exuberant imagination. That city of Duluth increases with such rapidity that it promises soon to rival the greatest inland city of the continent, and at present has grown so great that it demands additional facilities for transportation in the way of river and harbor improvements.

And, strange as it may appear, what seemed to be the amplest and most bountiful harbor facilities a year ago, this year are found wholly insufficient; and what now seems sufficient for the next year I have no doubt will be utterly inadequate for the year to come.

I am unwilling, Mr. Chairman, to take up the time of the House further in discussing this amendment, but ask leave to append to my remarks a letter containing a few statistics in reference to the trade and commerce of Duluth.

There was no objection.

The statistics are as follows:

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE, DULUTH, MINN., January 3, 1887.

SIR: Referring to your esteemed favor of December 18, I would most respectfully submit the following statistics showing the business of Duluth during the year, 1886, as a basis for our claim for a large appropriation for the improvement of our harbor.

The common council have settled the matter of changing the dock-line, and the ordinance as passed has been forwarded to the Secretary of War.

I inclose you herewith a sketch showing the new dock-line.

The receipts and shipments of wheat during 1886 compared with 1885:

	Bushels.
Receipts, 1885	14,686,307
Receipts, 1886	21,236,572
Increase over 1885	6,550,265
Shipments, 1885	14,048,897
Shipments, 1886	17,983,192
Increase over 1885	3,934,295

Receipts of coal by water:	Tons.
Year 1885	595,000
Increase over 1885	137,000

Total arrivals and clearances of vessels at Duluth, season of 1885, 1,083, representing tonnage 1,372,238 tons; season of 1886, 2,179, representing tonnage 1,694,783 tons.

Elevator capacity of Duluth:	Bushels.
1885	6,000,000
1886	10,750,000
In sight, 1887	20,000,000

Shipments of flour:	Barrels.
1885	1,076,044

One hundred and twenty thousand tons of steel rails received at Duluth during the season of 1886.

The increased tonnage of vessels now building, amounting to 55,000 tons, is almost entirely for Lake Superior trade, and are of the largest class, averaging over 2,000 tons each, which will very largely increase our coal and heavy freight receipts for 1887.

Hoping these figures will help you in procuring a large appropriation for us, and with the compliments of the season,

I am yours, truly,

EDGAR R. MILLS, Secretary.

Hon. KNUTE NELSON, M. C., Washington D. C.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, unless some one wishes to oppose this amendment, I desire to say, recognizing the condition we are in, the pressure of business and the necessity of consuming the balance of the time of this short session on important appropriation bills, that so far as I am concerned I shall vote for the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota, and hope all the friends of the river and harbor bill will vote for it also.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Will the gentleman object to raising the amount to $10,000,000?

Mr. REED. What is the proposition?

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. We would all vote for it just the same if the sum was increased and this amendment adopted.

Mr. REED. I hope the House of Representatives of the United States does not propose to abdicate its legislative functions.

Mr. WILLIS. Only temporarily.

Mr. REED. That would be a most elegant thing to do.

Mr. WILLIS. It is only a temporary abdication. It will resume its functions at the proper time.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. The idea is that it will go over to the Senate, be amended there, and come back.

Mr. WILLIS. That is exactly what I expect.

Mr. STRUBLE. I think that would be a very bad precedent.

Mr. REED. An exceedingly bad thing for the House of Representatives to do.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I desire to offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will send it up.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I move to increase the amount covered by the bill from seven and one-half millions to ten millions of dollars.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. That will give it a new opportunity to get through.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. In response to the statement which was made a moment since, I wish to say that this is not an abdication of the functions of the House. When we take up the post-office appropriation bill, for instance, and appropriate the sum total carried by the bill for the various branches of this branch of the public service, we make an appropriation in that bill in the aggregate for the pay of the postal clerks; but we do not say in this House how much shall go to Chicago, how much to Saint Louis, and how much to some other city.

We appropriate a gross sum for the pay of postal clerks, and the Postmaster-General at the beginning of the year distributes it throughout the different portions of the United States according to their requirements. It is just as legitimate a proposition to put this sum in the hands of a body like that suggested as to provide, as we do provide, for the pay of postal clerks or for any other purposes covered by that bill; and moreover every one admits that there is this distinction between this appropriation bill and the other, that the other is generally assented to, inside and outside of Congress, as a proper bill for Congress to pass, while this has always been objected to regularly as an improper bill.

The gentleman from Kentucky says this is only a "temporary device." Whatever his motive may be I know not, but I am not only willing to vote for that amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota but for the additional amendment I have offered increasing the amount to $10,000,000 as a permanent change in the manner of making appropriations for this purpose.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I hope before a vote is taken on this question the House will understand thoroughly its bearing and what it means.

The gentleman, I undertake to say, not in good faith or the best of faith offers this amendment.

Mr. NELSON. The gentleman has no reason to impute anything of the kind to me.

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not mean to do so offensively. [Laughter.] It is a sort of trick, a species of legerdemain to get this bill through the House and over to that body, where it is expected its form will be changed.

Mr. NELSON. I never yet, I want to say, have resorted to the practice of filibustering indulged in by the gentleman from Iowa to defeat it.

Mr. HEPBURN. Well, I have.

Mr. NELSON. And it does not lie in the gentleman's mouth to accuse me of trickery in offering this amendment.

Mr. HEPBURN. This is a proposition, the object of which is to get this bill out of the House and out of its present difficulties.

Mr. NELSON. Did you not vote for just such a proposition a moment ago yourself; and now you are filibustering against this?

Mr. HEPBURN. I will say to the gentleman again, that so far as the rules of the House permit me to go to stop the passage of all measures I believe to be intrinsically and absolutely wrong, I will go, and will try on all occasions and by all the means in my power to check this method of legislation—to pass propositions of this kind in bulk, no one of which is calculated to be received by the members of this House if standing alone. In my humble judgment, I repeat, this is a parliamentary trick and nothing more. It is a confession that this bill in its present form can not pass the House.

The gentlemen desire to get it through. They propose now to pass it in bulk, stopping all criticism and all votes upon the different measures, and send it to the Senate in that form, where they think it will be re-formed, and re-formed into its old shape, and brought back as a single amendment, as was done during the last session, leaving to the House, as the only question, whether or not we will concur, and that will be a finality.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I hope that will not be done. I hope that the opponents of this bill will have an opportunity to consider it in all its parts if they desire, and that there will be an abundance of time for the members of this House to know just what is in it.

Mr. GROSVENOR rose.

Mr. NELSON. I ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] to let me have an opportunity to reply.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. NELSON. I am somewhat surprised at the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] making such charges as he has made on this floor. He charges this is a trick—and why? Because it attempts to make an appropriation by Congress, and to expend it under the direction of a body of five engineers. If that is a trick, the great triumvirate, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON], and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], have been for the last two days that this bill has been up resorting to about just such trickery. [Applause.]

They have proposed to put this in the hands either of the Secretary of War or of the President, both members of a political party, and to give them the absolute power over the expenditure, while I propose by this amendment not to put it in the hands of any Democratic officials, not in the hands of men who are voted in and out at elections, but to put it in the hands of public officials, engineers, who are in office under all administrations, and are supposed to be as honest and as competent and as well qualified as the gentleman from Iowa himself. If there is any trick in this business, the gentleman from Iowa has himself set the example; and more, he has attempted to carry out his trick by what I have not resorted to—filibustering. [Applause.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. If the opponents of this bill had seen fit to ciriticise in this House and before the country the separate items of the bill, and then submit to the judgment of this House upon their criticisms, this resort would not have been warranted. But they have not seen fit to do that. They have seen fit to come here in the latter days of January, with but thirty-one or thirty-two more legislative days of the life of this Congress, with all the important measures that are pending here, in which the people of this country are vitally interested—the question of these great agricultural bills, the questions involved in the general appropriation bills, the questions involved in the pension legislation that is proposed here—and they say that in the first instance they will, by every parliamentary resort, obstruct the progress of this bill at every step of the way, and thereby, by that sort of proceeding, by indirection, obstruct each individual item of the legislation which is pending here and now. They refuse to be governed by the majority. They refuse here to permit less than a quorum in the affirmative to settle any question upon the floor of this House.

And now the gentleman from Iowa says that for the friends of this bill to attempt to beat that sort of a move on their part by some other proceeding is a parliamentary trick. There is not an item in this bill, Mr. Chairman, that I am not ready to stand here and now to defend and to submit to the majority vote of a quorum of this House. But I am not willing to see this session of Congress destroyed. I am not willing to see these great public measures frustrated by the parliamentary proceeding which it is apparent has been agreed upon, and notice of which was served upon us several days ago.

Mr. STEELE. If the gentleman from Ohio is so anxious about the passage of the agricultural bill, why did he not vote for it a short time ago, after calling it up?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I was not here to vote upon that.

I am in favor of this proposition; I am not opposed to it. On general principles I should be very glad if such a system could prevail, and I said so a year ago to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. I said then that the substance of this amendment then proposed should prevail. I thought it was a wise and judicious one if the people of this country could be taught that a system of administration of that sort could be fairly and justly carried out. I am willing to appropriate this sum of seven and a half millions in gross, and if the Senate concur with us I am willing to try that experiment in the administration of this fund. And if the Senate sees fit to re-form this bill back to its present condition, they can get no better criterion for their judgment than the bill which the committee has reported.

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not wonder at the heat of the gentlemen and at the somewhat harsh expressions they indulge in. There is an appropriation in this bill for the Muskingum Canal scheme. There is an appropriation in this bill for providing surplus water in time of drought for the grain mills in Minneapolis. The gentlemen ought to grow warm possibly in the defense of their pet schemes. But I want to remind them that I have set, so far as I am concerned, no example for this legislation. I have sought by amendments to have a responsible person expend the money carried by this bill, in the direction and for the uses that were named in the bill. There was no proposition made by myself or supported by myself looking to any amendment to any section or paragraph of the bill save that one that was under consideration.

The gentlemen propose a substitute. They propose to wipe out all that has been done by the committee; and by the scope of this amendment they propose that there shall not only be a responsible head for the expenditure of this money, but this commission of engineers shall have power to designate where as well as how the appropriation shall be expended.

They remand the question of determining where the great needs for improvement are to this commission. They wipe out all the suggestions that there may be in the bill. I do not know, sir, but what that would be wise, for the committee, some of them, in looking after their own little schemes have not been able to see some of the great improvements. We have secured the Muskingum Canal at the behest of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], and in his anxiety to secure that he has lost sight of that other great canal which is demanded by millions of people, the Hennepin Canal.

Mr. GROSVENOR. On every occasion I have voted for the Hennepin Canal.

Mr. HEPBURN. I remember very distinctly that the gentleman has never been so anxious to secure a place for the Hennepin Canal in the river and harbor bill, where it would have a certain status, as he has been anxious and able to secure his little Muskingum with all its objectionable features.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Did not the gentleman himself oppose the Hennepin Canal every time he had the chance?

Mr. HEPBURN. No, sir; never in my life.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Did you not oppose the river and harbor bill?

Mr. HEPBURN. Never, when it was in it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It was in the bill last——

Mr. HEPBURN. Never when it was in the bill, except when it was in it as a mockery.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Your whole record is against the Hennepin Canal.

Mr. HEPBURN. That is not true.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS].

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not in order, as there are two amendments pending.

Mr. HEPBURN. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HEPBURN. This is a substitute for the bill, and I submit that it is not in order until all the paragraphs have been considered.

Mr. WILLIS. That point of order is too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the point of order would have been good if taken in time; but debate on the amendment has gone on for nearly half an hour, and the point is made too late.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I desire to know what amendments are pending.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], to strike out all after the first section of the bill, and insert "seven and a half millions." To that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS] offered an amendment proposing to strike out "seven and a half millions," and insert "ten millions;" and the question is on the latter amendment, on which debate is exhausted.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I desire to ask another question: After the vote is taken on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS], then debate will be in order, will it not?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; debate will be in order and amendments will be in order.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. At that time I would like to move an amendment.

The question was then taken on the amendment of Mr. ADAMS, and it was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON].

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, in the respect that the pending amendment proposes a responsible body, capable of investigating the lines of commerce, and capable of forming an opinion as to the relative importance of the improvement of the various streams and harbors of the country, I, for one, sustain it. In that respect I believe it to be far better than the method which is now pursued by the River and Harbor Committee in framing the bill which is regularly presented to the House, and if gentlemen on this side in good faith (as of course I shall assume them to be) desire and agree that hereafter appropriations shall be made upon the recommendation of this proposed board of engineers, and that the expenditure shall be made under the supervision of that board, I believe such course would be a very great advance upon the plan we have for years been pursuing.

But suppose this amendment is adopted and takes the place of the whole bill, and suppose that when the bill reaches the Senate an amendment like the river and harbor bill of the committee is adopted in the place of this provision for the board of engineers, so that the bill comes back to us as a conference report substantially as it has come from the committee, with some slight amendments by the Senate, then I rather fancy that some of the statements which have been made as to the parliamentary effect of the amendment would be found true. For myself, I prefer almost anything to this indiscriminate hodge-podge way of dealing with this question—not simply by this committee (for I have no reflection whatever to cast upon its members), but by every River and Harbor Committee during the eight years that I have been in Congress. Anything that is systematic is better than this.

And now I wish to say a word upon another point. Where a bill carrying seven and a half millions of dollars is presented as late in the session as this bill has been presented, I hold that the gentlemen who have failed to bring it forward sooner, namely, the committee of which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] is a member, must bear all the responsibility for the delay; and, furthermore, I claim the right, where a bill carrying seven and a half million dollars is to be voted upon, to demand that gentlemen favoring it shall not only furnish a majority, but also furnish a quorum to pass every item of it. That is my right, and I shall insist upon that right just whenever it may happen to suit my desire.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not propose, Mr. Chairman, to sit quietly under the criticisms of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] or the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], made because I choose to exercise a right belonging to every member on this floor, and differ from them.

With his usual illogical reasoning and bad form of statement, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] chooses to arraign myself and others who oppose this bill because we have not earlier made known our opposition to it on this floor. We certainly could not oppose it before it was brought in here by the committee with whom it has originated; and we have early—I speak for myself alone—I have from the first exercised my right of opposition to it since it has been placed upon the Calendar and brought before the House.

With reference to the remarks of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], I have this to say: When I oppose, under the rules, a bill which I believe to be constructed upon a bad plan, and according to a vicious system, no man has the right to stand on this floor and accuse me of a trick or trickery. My opposition has been open; my reasons for it have been stated on this floor; there has been no concealment. I believe those reasons to be sufficient; they are sufficient for me.

This bill contains forty or more items for works which the engineers state should be promptly completed, yet, under the system which requires donations to the districts of gentlemen on this floor in order to put through your bill, there are in this entire number of forty or more only five for the completion of which appropriations are made by the bill.

This bill contains items for works which the reports of the Board of Engineers say are in no sense of national importance, but are purely of local interest and significance; and in one instance they state that the improvement should be made by the people of the county in which it is located. There has been in preceding bills—I have not examined critically to see whether it is in this bill—an appropriation for a stream with reference to which the engineers were compelled to say that no boat had ever been seen on it, although one had been confidently expected a season or two before. There is in this bill an appropriation for a stream 60 feet wide and a foot and a half deep; yet, as to the great harbor of Boston, the engineers say that if the same system is to be pursued which has been heretofore pursued with reference to appropriations, the waste of money in the next five years will exceed $32,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. Do you mean $32,000?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I mean $32,000, and that with reference to an improvement at a single point in that harbor. If time permitted I could go on and enumerate similar cases which should appeal to the conscience, the good sense, the business judgment of gentlemen on this floor.

I wish to add that I am not opposed to river and harbor bills when properly constructed. Multiply your appropriations by 2, 3, or 4, strike out the donations to districts where the improvements are not of national significance, and no man will more cheerfully support your bill than myself. I come from a State which is almost surrounded by water, having the great lakes upon one side and the sweeping, navigable Mississippi upon the other. Fifty miles of my own district lie upon the Mississippi River. But, sir, you can not stop my mouth or my opposition by putting into this bill or any other constructed upon a like plan an appropriation for my district.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last two words. I live 1,100 feet above the sea and in a district that has in it no water, not even a "branch," to be benefited by this bill. I have no sort of personal interest in this bill. I may not care, in the main, whether it passes or not. But we have other business here to transact, and we ought to do that business. I do not enter into this quarrel as to who is guilty of a "trick;" I do not think anybody is "tricked." The half-dozen gentlemen who have given public notice that on every paragraph of this bill they intend to resort to dilatory motions are not guilty of any "trick." Every one understands what they mean. Nor when a gentleman proposes a substitute for the whole bill, is he guilty of a "trick." We are presumed to know just what the effect of that proposition is; and if the effect be to pass a bad bill without reading it, the burden lies upon the shoulders of the half-dozen gentlemen who have announced that no other business shall be done, nor this bill passed, until they have spoken themselves hoarse on every line in it.

This is all I desire to say. On whichever side I may vote in regard to this bill, I say, let us go on with business.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I was not aware that in the few remarks which I submitted I had used any language which imputed a parliamentary "trick" to anybody; and, but for the clear and lucid statement of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], delivered with that unerring logic born of his clear-cut mental organization and stated in that pleasant manner so conspicuous in all his discussions, I should never have thought that I used such language.

But, as he is an authority and understands every question he discusses, it must be I am mistaken. I rose to defend my friend from Minnesota here and those who believe with him from the charge made as I understood it in my innocence and ignorance and illogical condition and bad form. [Laughter.] I am not acting, as the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] understands it, in good form. He is in good form, elegant form, grand and magnificent form. He criticizes my form. I did not understand I was going to have a competitive examination in the House as to my form of speech. [Laughter.] I was trying to get out a compliment to the gentleman from Wisconsin. I knew he was not opposing this bill. [Laughter.] I supposed he would certainly support the amendment because it was the same proposition in substance he made two years ago, and made it with that same good form, that graceful form, that elegant form, that eloquent form with which he made his speech to-day. [Laughter.] I thought I was on his side, and I greatly regret I am not. That, Mr. Speaker, is all. [Laughter and cries of "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. Has the formal amendment been withdrawn?

Mr. BAYNE. I desire to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. GILFILLAN].

Mr. GILFILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to repel an attack inadvertently made on my district a few moments ago, and impliedly on the Representative of that district, by the honorable gentleman from Iowa. He charges, perhaps inadvertently and unintentionally, the bill contains a petty scheme for serving some private interest, to wit, certain mills at Minneapolis, in my district. I do not suppose the gentleman intended to make any wrongful impression on this House as to the contents or character of this bill, but I wish to say here that the Representative of that district has not been before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. He has not asked anything to be inserted in this bill, and if there is anything in it which contains anything of the nature of a petty scheme, or any other scheme for serving any private interest at Minneapolis, or any other interest except as it is involved in the general interest of the country, I am unaware of any such provision.

I say, sir, there is no such proposition in the bill, and that to say any such provision has been interpolated or smuggled into this bill is as unworthy as it is uncalled for.

Mr. BAYNE. I move to strike out of the proposition the words "Chief of Engineers" and insert "Secretary of War."

Mr. NELSON. I make the point of order that proposition has already been voted on and rejected. So that if it were to be admitted it would be identical with what has been voted on and rejected.

Mr. BAYNE. The proposition I make has not been voted on as a distinct amendment. The proposition voted on not only embraced the Secretary of War but the Secretary of the Treasury. This makes a modification so as to substitute the Secretary of War.

Mr. NELSON. There was a proposition for this gross amount to be distributed under the Secretary of War. If that is correct, then this amendment is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is in order.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I trust the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] and the friends of this amendment will accept the amendment to the amendment which I have suggested. That amendment should be made if this proposition is to go through. I hope it will be accepted, because the history of commissions in this country is not a savory one. I am opposed to this method of expending public money, believing the proper way to make expenditure is to appropriate a particular sum to each particular purpose.

It is assumed by those who criticise this bill that the money is expended without any direction. There is not a dollar reported in the bill but is to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War. The Secretary of War is responsible for the mode of expenditure of each one of these appropriations. The Secretary of War has seen fit to withhold appropriation after appropriation. The appropriations made by the bill last year and by the preceding bill have been withheld by the Secretary of War because he believed the amount inadequate, or because of some changed conditions of things, or because the amount to be expended would be a mere waste of the public money.

To assume that the money provided for here in this bill is not subject to the direction and supervision of the Secretary of War, is to misstate its meaning and import altogether; and when gentlemen proceed on that argument they fail to understand the meaning of the bill.

Now, sir, I am opposed to placing this vast sum of money in the hands of the Secretary of War or any other one man. I do not believe that any man in this country should have the control of that money to expend at his option.

Mr. NELSON. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. BAYNE. Not at present.

Mr. NELSON. Perhaps I can relieve the gentleman if he will allow me a moment.

Mr. BAYNE. I repeat I am opposed to placing the amount in the hands of any one man to expend.

Mr. WILLIS. I think if the gentleman will yield, that the gentleman from Minnesota is willing to accept the amendment.

Mr. NELSON. After consultation with friends on both sides of the Chamber, I wish to say that I will accept the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and I do that for the sake of cutting off debate and coming to a conclusion at once on this subject.

Mr. BAYNE. Very well. I wish to add a word further.

I repeat, I am opposed to placing this vast amount of money in the discretion of any officer of this Government. You will look in vain over all the appropriations made by Congress to find any such power vested in any other officer of the Government.

Mr. NELSON. I accepted the amendment for the purpose of stopping debate.

Mr. BAYNE. My friend from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS] calls attention to the appropriation made for the service of the Post-Office Department for payment of clerks in the railway mail service. That is true, but the wages or salary paid each route and postal agent is fixed by law, and the postal agent has the right to demand the last farthing of that amount, and the Government officers have not the right to pay him a cent more. It is a specific direction as to how the money shall be expended. Yet for myself, rather than have a river and harbor bill defeated, I, though opposed to this, and hoping better things may come before it goes through, will vote for it with this amendment, for I must regard, in view of the fact that so many are in favor of the bill and so few opposed to it, the opposition is simply a factious opposition.

Mr. NELSON. As I did not succeed in stopping the debate, I therefore withdraw my acceptance of the amendment.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to prolong unnecessarily this debate. I desire to witness the passage of this bill. It seems to me that we have now arrived at a point where the issue is changed, and the question is not whether we will have this particular bill, with these particular provisions, but the question now is, shall we have any river and harbor bill at all? The question presented to us is whether or not this is desirable legislation, all things considered, and whether in this form we shall make provision for the improvement of the rivers and harbors of this country.

Mr. Chairman, I do not stand here to allege, or to intimate, that any gentleman on this floor in his opposition to this bill acts in the interest of any railroad corporations or any other form of monopoly; but I do say that if I stood here as the champion and advocate of railroads and monopolies I would destroy this river and harbor bill if I could by preventing its enactment into law. I do not believe that it would be within the power of human possibility so effectually to favor the railroads and railroad monopolies as by preventing the passage of a river and harbor bill year after year. You may pass all of the interstate-commerce bills you please, but no interstate-commerce bill will be so effectually a barrier between the people of this country and the railroad monopolies as a proper and adequate provision for the improvement of our water-ways.

There are two classes of opponents to this bill. The first are opposed to it because it makes provision for small streams, and the other class are opposed to it because it makes provision for large streams.

My friend from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is opposed to it because it provides for the "nameless streams," as he says, that have no national significance; and then my friend from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] is dead against it because it provides for the improvement of the great Mississippi River and its tributaries, which, he says, it is impossible permanently and adequately to improve. But in years past we have improved them, and because of these improvements to-day the great tide of commerce of this country has been changed, and the great new Northwest, that region to the west of Lake Superior—Minnesota, Dakota, Montana, Iowa, and Wyoming—are pouring the volume of their wealth down through the great water channels of the the Northwest, through the chain of lakes, and through the Sault Sainte Marie Canal, to the amount of 3,500,000 tons a year.

This is increasing so rapidly that at the present rate of increase, before it is possible to create new locks there, the present capacity of the canal will be insufficient for the volume of commerce which will seek passage; and this question of the enlargement of that canal is becoming one of vast and urgent importance, because it is only a question as between that canal and the railroads as to a means of shipment of the vast commerce of the Northwest to the seaboard. In this bill is a provision for the enlargement of that canal. Defeat that, and you cast a vote in the interest of the railroads that extend from the State of my friend from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] to the seaboard, and compel the farmers of the Northwest to seek outlets at great loss on their products by railroad transportation rather than by allowing them to be shipped upon the open water-ways which nature has provided, and in comparison with which even the Mississippi River itself is but a rivulet.

I hope no gentleman, therefore, will take an attitude here that will prevent the passage, in some form or other, of the bill now before the committee.

Mr. HEPBURN. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not in order until the amendment to the amendment is acted on. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] to the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON].

The amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HEPBURN. I move to strike out the last word. I am very grateful to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON] for his solicitude in my behalf. The gentleman knows that I have at all times in my action here avoided, as far as possible, doing or saying anything that would allow any man to classify me as in opposition to the real river and harbor improvements of this country. Nor have I ever done anything, as the gentleman well knows, that would place me in any sense in the position of a railroad monopolist or a monopolist of any other kind. And I am glad that he, in his solicitude, is anxious to warn me of the rock that seems to be now right in front of me, intimating to me that if I do not—that is the logic of his suggestion—follow his view with regard to this matter I am in imminent danger of being classified with those obnoxious persons. I am thankful to the gentleman.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. HEPBURN. My time is very limited.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I wish just to say that the gentleman from Iowa has given us notice three several times that he will oppose the passage of this bill——

Mr. HEPBURN. Of this bill.

Mr. CUTCHEON. By every parliamentary means on every section. He knows that means the defeat of this bill in every possible form.

Mr. HEPBURN. I think it is better to defeat this bill, there being a predominance of bad in it, than to secure the good things in it at such an expensive rate. I am not going to fall into the difficulty or to run against the rock that the gentleman in his friendly feeling for me seems to be fearful of. I will say to the gentleman that I am ready at any time to support any measure that has in it the improvement of the great water ways and the improvement of the harbors of this country that enter into the commerce of the whole country. In that I will go as far as he or any one else. But I am unwilling that gentlemen should lug in the little pet schemes they have and saddle them on the great improvements of the country.

The gentleman from Michigan seems to intimate a reason why I am opposed to the bill. Would it be courtesy to intimate why there might be a reason for the gentleman's urgent advocacy of it. There are sixteen—ten of them being absolutely insignificant—harbors in the State of the gentleman that are amply provided for in this bill. Michigan is not known for its great rivers that enter into the interstate commerce of this country. And yet there are provisions for the improvement of seven of those rivers. Twenty-three slices of the pork that are in this barrel go to the peninsular State of Michigan.

Mr. TARSNEY. And her commerce warrants it.

Mr. HEPBURN. That is a matter of opinion. I am entirely willing that Michigan should have all the commerce that is possible. I would rejoice just as much as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TARSNEY] in every evidence of the prosperity of that State. But I do not want, under the pretense of improving the navigation of your waters and of advancing the interests of national commerce, to appropriate hundreds of thousands of dollars to be expended on purely local works for the individual benefit of even such a distinguished gentleman as my friend [bowing to Mr. TARSNEY], in whose prosperity I shall always rejoice.

Mr. TARSNEY. Twenty-five per cent. more commerce passes through the Sault Sainte Marie Canal than through the great Suez Canal annually.

Mr. HEPBURN. I want to improve that work, but I do not want to improve the other twenty-two under the pretense of improving that one.

Mr. Chairman, those persons who have seen fit to oppose the passage of this bill are as ready, I want again to say, as the gentleman from Michigan is to engage in all legitimate river and harbor improvements. But we do assume the right of determining for ourselves what are legitimate, and we do resent a little the supercilious manner in which certain gentlemen seem disposed to enforce all of their little schemes upon us and to compel us against our own volition to accept their view of what is important.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, rose.

Mr. WILLIS. Can we not agree that debate on this amendment shall be closed in five minutes?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I have the floor. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas has been recognized.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I simply rise to say a word in regard to one suggestion which has been made as to the motive of those opposing this bill. It has been said that they are influenced by railways. [Laughter.] It has been suggested that gentlemen who oppose this bill really do so for the benefit of railways, whether they do so intentionally or not. Now I have never seen any member of the railway lobby about this House advocate opposition to a river and harbor bill. I think instances can be adduced where very large appropriations in previous bills have been made for the express purpose of furnishing terminal facilities for railroad companies.

Mr. FELTON. Where are they?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I did not catch the gentleman's remark.

I will state furthermore that in the last river and harbor bill appropriations were used for the express purpose of riprapping the abutments of railroad bridges. And for one, giving to all gentlemen the most magnanimous right to entertain whatever opinion they may as to the motives of the opponents of this bill, I shall say for myself that the reason why I oppose it is just because it does not provide for those improvements of the great water ways which would advance such navigation as would furnish competition with railways. The committee has not included in the bill before us the Hennepin Canal; that would be of great effect upon the transportation question. It has not included the New York and Erie Canal; that would be of still greater effect.

Mr. T. J. CAMPBELL. Newtown Creek.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. It has not looked to the deepening of the channels of those streams over which to-day the great volume of your commerce goes so much as it has to the improvement of little streams, which, in some instances, are used merely for logging purposes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Or for swimming.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Swimming! There is not water enough in some of them to enable a tadpole to swim. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, if there were proposed in this bill a plan looking to the development of the rivers that are really useful for commercial purposes, I would heartily advocate it, but I do not propose to be drawn into a great many of the appropriations that are in this bill—not by a long shot. [Laughter.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I withdraw the formal amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON].

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order that a vote cannot be taken upon that amendment, it being in the nature of a substitute, until every part of the bill has been considered; and I call attention to Rule XIX.

Mr. WILLIS. That point has been already passed upon.

Mr. HEPBURN. The point has not been made before.

Mr. WILLIS. Then it comes too late.

Mr. HEPBURN. I desire to be heard upon the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HEPBURN. I ask that Rule XIX be read.

The rule was read, as follows:

When a motion or proposition is under consideration, a motion to amend and a motion to amend that amendment shall be in order, and it shall also be in order to offer a further amendment by way of substitute, to which one amendment may be offered, but which shall not be voted on until the original matter is perfected, but either may be withdrawn before amendment or decision is had thereon.

Mr. HEPBURN. It will be remembered, Mr. Chairman, that the point of order was raised against the reception of this substitute, and the Chair held that the point came too late, and the member making that point yielded, of course, to the decision of the Chair. The point I now make is, that no vote can be taken upon this amendment, which is in the nature of a substitute, until every part of the bill for which it is a substitute has been considered. I want to call attention further to the fact that this must be a substitute, because the gentleman's motion includes the striking out of all after the enacting clause, and the insertion in lieu thereof of the matter that has been read. That makes it a substitute for the whole bill.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, The point of order is not well taken, for this reason: The Chair has already decided, on a previous point of order, that the amendment was properly pending, and that the point that it was not properly before the House was made too late. Now if the amendment is properly pending for debate or for any purpose, then it is pending to be voted upon. It is not pending for any half-way purpose. The gentleman cannot make a distinction of that kind, and have the amendment pending to a certain extent, merely for debate, but not pending when we come to vote upon it. The amendment is either wholly out of order ab initio, or it is in order to be voted upon.

Mr. HEPBURN. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that there is a distinction there which the gentleman does not consider. The Chair simply ruled, as I understood, that the objection which was made to this amendment came too late to prevent its discussion. The committee having discussed the proposition, and having reached the point where a vote is to be taken, I now, at the first moment after that stage is reached, raise this point. There has been no time before when I could have raised it. I could have raised a point of order earlier so as to prevent the occupation of the time of the House in the discussion of this proposition; but I could not earlier have raised the point I now raise upon postponing the vote on this substitute until the balance of the bill is matured.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that in the state in which the Chair finds the question it is in order to take the vote upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON].

The gentleman from Minnesota was permitted to offer his amendment without objection or interposition of point of order. It has been discussed at length, and an amendment has been offered to it which has not only been discussed but been voted upon by the committee; and the proposition of the gentleman from Minnesota has, for an hour or more, been considered in the absence of any proposition to further amend, perfect, or even consider the original text of the bill. During all that time no further amendment to the text of the bill has been proposed; nor is any offered now. There is no other amendment pending than that of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], and none other being offered, the Chair thinks it is in order to vote upon it.

Mr. HEPBURN. I respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. An appeal being taken, the question is: Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 118, noes 46.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. NELSON; and there were—ayes 125, noes 21.

Mr. HEPBURN. No quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON].

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 140, noes 27.

Mr. HEPBURN. I call for the yeas and nays.

The CHAIRMAN. The yeas and nays can not be taken in Committee of the Whole.

So the substitute of Mr. NELSON was adopted.

Mr. WILLIS. I now move that the committee rise and report the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MCMILLIN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10419) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back with an amendment in the form of a substitute.

Mr. WILLIS. I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky moves the previous question upon agreeing to the amendment and ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. HEPBURN. I wish to make a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HEPBURN. I desire to say that the provisions of the bill making separate and distinct appropriations have not been considered in the Committee of the Whole, and no vote has been taken upon any provision appropriating a specific sum of money. Before the Committee of the Whole had proceeded beyond the consideration of the eighth line, before any subsequent paragraph had been read, this amendment was offered, and against objection a vote upon it was forced prior to the taking of any vote upon any one of the subsequent provisions of the bill. I make the point of order that the vote can not be taken upon the adoption of this substitute until the provisions of the bill have been separately read and considered in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Of course the House now has nothing before it, and the Chair has nothing before him except the report of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The facts stated by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], if they be facts, might constitute a good reason for the recommitment of the bill by the House to the Committee of the Whole. But the Chair must deal with the report as presented. The bill is out of the Committee of the Whole and in the House, by the action of the committee, which the Chair can not revise or overrule in any manner. The point of order is not sustained.

The question is on ordering the previous question upon the amendment, and upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. HEPBURN. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, there being ayes 35, noes 100—more than one-fifth voting in the affirmative.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 166, nays 64, not voting 87; as follows:

So the previous question was ordered.

The following-named members were announced as paired until further notice:

Mr. BACON with Mr. LINDSLEY.

Mr. GREEN with Mr. SWINBURNE.

Mr. PINDAR with Mr. DAVENPORT.

Mr. CANDLER with Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska.

Mr. CLARDY with Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana.

Mr. BLAND with Mr. GOFF.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia, with Mr. STEWART, of Vermont.

Mr. MORGAN with Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR.

Mr. THROCKMORTON with Mr. ATKINSON.

Mr. REAGAN with Mr. HISCOCK.

Mr. COX, of New York, with Mr. BURLEIGH.

Mr. SPRIGGS with Mr. HOUK.

Mr. MITCHELL with Mr. WHITING.

Mr. BOYLE with Mr. CURTIN, on this bill.

The following-named members were announced as paired for the remainder of the day:

Mr. DUNN with Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. HEARD with Mr. KELLEY.

Mr. BARRY with Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois.

Mr. BALLENTINE with Mr. JOHNSON, of New York.

Mr. LE FEVRE with Mr. HARMER.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, with Mr. LAIRD.

Mr. ROBERTSON with Mr. HANBACK.

Mr. ERMENTROUT with Mr. ROCKWELL.

Mr. STAHLNECKER with Mr. DUNHAM.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri, with Mr. KETCHAM.

Mr. RANDALL. My understanding was that I was paired on this bill with my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL], and I think I communicated that fact to the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. I find, however, that my colleague is announced as paired with the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN]. Now, I omitted to vote on this roll-call under the information and belief I have stated, and I am corroborated by the officer who is accustomed to take charge of the pairs for members.

The SPEAKER. Where a gentleman states that he has withheld his vote because he believed he was paired it has always been the practice of the House to permit him to vote. The Clerk will call the name of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RANDALL voted in the negative.

Mr. DUNHAM. Mr. Speaker, I was present during the roll-call and desire to vote. I have heard my name read from the desk among the pairs, but no one was authorized to make a pair for me. I wish to vote in the affirmative.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's vote will be so recorded.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate insisted on its amendments disagreed to by the House to the bill (H. R. 6637) relating to contested elections, agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. HOAR, Mr. FRYE, and Mr. PUGH.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DINGLEY. It is as to the parliamentary situation of this bill. If the House shall refuse to agree to the substitute amendment would the vote then come up under the operation of the previous question on passing the bill for which the substitute was made, or would the bill have to go back to the Committee of the Whole to be considered?

The SPEAKER. If the House refuse to agree to the substitute the next question is on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time; that is to say, on the bill referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, without regard to any amendments which may have been agreed to.

Mr. BURROWS. But suppose the bill has never been considered in Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. That is a question for the House. The committee has reported it back to the House. The committee has no power over it.

The Chair will further state, in response to the gentleman from Maine, that the bill will not go back to the committee unless the House refers it to the committee. Under the rules and practice of the House, when the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union strikes out the enacting clause of a bill, the effect of which is to destroy the bill, and the House refuses to concur in that action, the committee resumes its session. But where the committee strikes out all after the enacting clause it is but an amendment. Then a vote to non-concur in the amendment of the committee in the nature of a substitute would at once bring the House to vote on the bill.

Mr. DINGLEY. As it was when it went to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. The presumption is it has been read and perfected.

Mr. HEPBURN. A very great presumption.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Would it not then require a motion to send it back to the Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. It would.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I understand gentlemen to say under the point of order the bill has not been considered in Committee of the Whole. Would the Speaker hold that point of order to be well taken?

The SPEAKER. That is a question for the House.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It would be a question for the House to determine.

Mr. LONG. But a motion to recommit is in order.

The SPEAKER. It is, if made at the proper time; that is, after the previous question has been exhausted on the third reading and engrossment of the bill and the previous question has been demanded on its passage.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask for information, as there was some confusion, whether, if the substitute is voted down, the bill reported from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors is not before the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has so stated.

Mr. REED. Then by judicious ruling on the bill by the chairman of the Committee of the Whole, the duty of the committee to consider the bill can be evaded.

The SPEAKER. The committee has reported the bill. [Laughter.] The question recurs on the amendment of the committee in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. STEELE. If gentlemen proposing this amendment vote against it, would they not be guilty of sharp practice?

The SPEAKER. The question is not a parliamentary one.

Mr. CUTCHEON. If this substitute is voted down, and the bill comes before the House, would it be subject to amendment?

The SPEAKER. It would if the previous question should not be ordered; but if the previous question is ordered it would cut off amendment.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 44, noes 100.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. No quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER appointed as tellers Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, and Mr. WILLIS.

Mr. STEELE. I demand the yeas and nays in order to put gentlemen on record.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 46, nays 176, not voting 95; as follows:

On motion of Mr. LONG, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The following additional pair was announced:

Mr. PIDCOCK with Mr. LIBBEY, for the rest of this day.

Mr. MCRAE. My colleagues, Mr. ROGERS and Mr DUNN, are absent on account of sickness.

The result of the vote was then announced, as above recorded.

The question recurred on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. RYAN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 143, nays 88, not voting 86; as follows:

So the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. I ask leave to withdraw my vote on this and the preceding call to-day, as I find I am paired.

On motion of Mr. CABELL, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The following additional pair was announced:

Mr. CROXTON with Mr. MILLARD, for the rest of this day.

The result of the vote was then announced, as above recorded.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. HEPBURN. This bill I believe has not been read the third time?

The SPEAKER. It has not. It has just been ordered to be read the third time.

Mr. HEPBURN. I ask for the reading of the engrossed copy.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right, before the vote is taken upon the passage of the bill, to have it read.

Mr. HEPBURN. As I understand, we have simply ordered it to be engrossed. Now I desire to have that engrossed copy read. We could not have had it earlier.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the gentleman. The gentleman has the right to have the engrossed copy of the bill read before the question is taken on its passage. Pending the demand for the previous question, or even after the previous question is ordered, the gentleman has the right to demand the reading of the engrossed bill before the vote is taken.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. HEPBURN. I now demand the reading of the engrossed bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is advised that the bill has not yet been engrossed.

Mr. WILLIS. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. If the House adjourns now does this come up as the first business in the morning?

The SPEAKER. It is the unfinished business, the previous question having been ordered upon it, and will be first in order after reading the Journal.

Mr. WILLIS. In view of the lateness of the hour, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rules, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BARBOUR: Petition of H. H. Scott, of Culpepper County, Virginia, praying that the war claim of Lucy Hudson, deceased, be referred to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. TOOLE: Of 61 citizens of White Sulphur Springs, Montana.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, January 27, 1887.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EULOGIES ON THE LATE SENATOR LOGAN.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, after consultation with my colleague [Mr. FARWELL] it has been determined that I shall announce to the Senate that on Wednesday, the 9th of February next, I shall offer proper resolutions and ask the Senate to take appropriate action upon them with reference to the life and services of my late colleague, Senator LOGAN, deceased.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of War, submitting an estimate of appropriation of $5,000 for the purchase of land near Fort Meade, Dakota Territory; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of January 13, 1887, a report of the First Comptroller in regard to money paid to officers in the United States in the prosecution of causes in State courts; which, on motion of Mr. VEST, was, with the accompanying papers, ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in compliance with the act of July 22, 1854, reports of Surveyors-General Pullen and Julian on the private land claim known as the Cañada de Santa Clara, No. 138, New Mexico; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 3129) for the relief of Frank J. Burrows was read twice by its title.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Pennsylvania. As that bill relates to the claim of a postmaster, I move its reference to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill (H. R. 6764) to provide for holding terms of the United States courts at Vicksburg, Miss., was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Grand Forks, Dak., praying for the speedy ratification of the treaty of the United States Indian Commission with the Red Lake Indians of Minnesota; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Pennsylvania, presented the petition of Joseph D. Potts, James M. Swank, and other business men of Philadelphia, Pa., and the petition of the workingmen of the Leggitt Spring and Axle Company, of Pittsburgh, Pa., praying for a repeal of internal-revenue taxes; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Pennsylvania. I also present a memorial of O. H. Allerton, jr., and 84 citizens of East Liberty, Pa., representing that the heavy wholesale and retail dealers' taxes in the act known as the oleomargarine law have fostered a monopoly in behalf of the large manufacturers and crushed out the small ones. They therefore ask for a reduction of these special taxes and a repeal of the monopolistic features of the act. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FARWELL presented resolutions adopted by the Illinois house of representatives favoring the passage of a bill which has for its object the care and maintenance of the honorably discharged soldiers whose names are now borne upon the pension-rolls; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of the National Wholesale Druggists' Association and petitions of citizens of Chicago and Bloomington, in the State of Illinois, praying for the repeal of the internal-revenue taxes; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of George A. Hoyt, president of the Pennsylvania Coal Company; Swift's Chicago Fresh Beef Company, located on the Harlem River; George S. Coe, president of the American Exchange Bank, and 350 other prominent citizens of New York city, praying for such legislation as will authorize the Secretary of War to contract with Charles Stoughton and his associates for the entire work of improving the Harlem River, New York; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented resolutions adopted by citizens of Maroa, Ill., indorsing the interstate-commerce bill and urging Congress to enact such laws as will place the Government in control of cattle suffering from pleuro-pneumonia, also favoring the payment of losses to owners of cattle destroyed under such laws by the Government; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Thirty-fifth General Assembly of Illinois, and resolutions adopted by the Consolidated Cattle-Growers' Association of the United States, favoring the speedy enactment of a bill now pending before Congress for the suppression of exotic contagious diseases among cattle; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. EVARTS presented a petition of citizens of Saranac, N. Y., praying for the repeal of the internal-revenue taxes; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Several weeks ago I presented to the Senate the memorial of J. Goldsborough Bruff, of the District of Columbia, relative to a national coat of arms, and on the subject of heraldry, which was referred to the Committee on the Library. Several interesting papers relating to the subject of the memorial were also referred at that time to the committee. He has since placed in my hands some additional papers concerning the subject of that memorial, which I ask may be received and referred to the Committee on the Library.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made.

Mr. WILLIAMS presented a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of San Diego, Cal., remonstrating against the abolition of the port of entry and customs district of San Diego; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of California, favoring the restoration of ex-Governor George Stoneman to the retired-list of the Army of the United States with the rank of colonel; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CULLOM presented a resolution adopted by the Trade and Labor Assembly of Chicago, Ill., remonstrating against the passage of the bill ceding Dearborn Park, in the city of Chicago, jointly to the Chicago Public Library, the Veteran Soldiers' Organizations, and the Academy of Design; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CULLOM. I present a memorial of C. P. Moulton and 30 other citizens of Sangamon County, Illinois, setting forth that $100 only is required for a wholesale whisky dealer and $480 for a wholesale oleomargarine dealer, and asking for an equalization of those taxes. I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MANDERSON. I present a petition signed by George Scherrer and 68 other citizens of Lincoln, Nebr., declaring that the special taxes on oleomargarine are exorbitant and that the large manufacturers who advance these license fees confine the trade in their own hands, thus creating a monopoly, and they therefore pray for the repeal of the special taxes of the oleomargarine law. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I present the petition of J. S. Burchenal and a large number of other citizens of Delaware, praying for an appropriation for the improvement of the navigation of Saint Jones or Dover River, in Kent County, Delaware. I also present a similar petition from George P. Fisher and a large number of other citizens of Delaware, praying for the same appropriation. I move the reference of the petitions to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VEST presented the petition of L. C. Doggett and 125 citizens of Saint Louis, Mo., in respect of the special taxes on oleomargarine and other objects of internal-revenue taxation, and praying that the special taxes on oleomargarine may be reduced; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. INGALLS presented the petition of W. J. Felch and 16 other citizens of Fargo, Dak., praying for certain modifications of the law regulating the sale and manufacture of oleomargarine; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. DAWES. I present the petition of Samuel B. Symonds and 52 citizens of Beverly, Mass., setting forth that a retail dealer in malt liquors is only required to pay $20 per year as special tax, while a retail dealer in oleomargarine is compelled to pay $48 per year, and praying for an equalization of such special taxes. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3054) for the relief of S. D. Barclay, G. D. Adams, and William H. Kimbrew, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5775) for the relief of James M. McKamey, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I am directed by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads to report favorably, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, the bill (S. 337) to provide for the establishment of a postal-telegraphic system. I will state that the substitute reported consists of the first eleven sections of the bill reported favorably by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads during the Forty-eighth Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. MORGAN. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to report back the bill (S. 1107) for the relief of J. G. Fell, Edward Hoopes, and George Burnham, with a substitute therefor in the shape of a new bill. I am also directed by the committee to make some explanation of the reasons for the reporting of the bill in the form which the committee have agreed upon.

The bill (S. 3226) to determine the liability of the United States under the law for damages to the property of citizens of the United States sustained in the depredations of Indians was read twice by its title.

Mr. MORGAN. The claims for Indian depredations, now ascertained by the Department of the Interior to be valid so far as the claims are concerned and so far as the amount and character of the injuries for which indemnity is asked are concerned, amount now to about $13,000,000. These claims are coming in after the reports which have been made by the Government agents individually, each claim addressing itself to Congress for its allowance.

The general principles upon which these claims proceed are that the Government of the United States has assumed a sort of guardianship over the Indians, accompanied with the duty of keeping them in their reservations, and preventing them from depredating upon the property of citizens; that they are quasi-prisoners of war, many of the tribes at least, and that the depredations committed by them are in that sense committed by the United States, and, therefore, they have a right of action or a right of claim against the Government of the United States.

It will be impossible to consider this question in respect of all the different petitions so as to dispose of it at the convenience of Congress within a number of years to come, and the committee have concluded that it was their duty to take this case, which is for the relief of J. G. Fell, Edward Hoopes, and George Burnham, and refer it to the Court of Claims, with an instruction to that court that it shall decide upon the question of the legal liability of the United States for these Indian depredations, and that their decision, of course, shall not go beyond that, but the question of the amount of the claim, and its validity as a bona fide claim, and the question of appropriating money for the payment of the claim is reserved expressly in the bill which we now report to the Senate

The Court of Claims, to whom this particular claim is referred, is required to pass upon the general subject of the liability of the United States, with the right of appeal either on the part of the United States or the claimant from the judgment of that court to the Supreme Court of the United States; and both the Court of Claims and the Supreme Court of the United States are required to advance the cause on the docket so that it may be speedily heard, or at least as speedily heard as is consistent with the other public duties of those courts.

In the event that the Court of Claims shall decide that in this case the Government of the United States has a legal responsibility, then the court makes a certificate of a proper allowance for attorneys' fees, to be paid by the Government of the United States; and money is appropriated by this bill to pay that certificate upon its presentation in proper form to the Treasury Department.

The object of the committee is to have presented in some legal form and by a competent tribunal, by the Supreme Court of the United States, the great leading question in these cases, whether there is a responsibility upon the United States, and what are the limits of the responsibility and the conditions upon which it arises.

Hence the committee have instructed me to make this oral statement in regard to the bill and call the attention of the Senate to it, as it is a matter of very great public interest; and in order to prevent these claims from being delayed unnecessarily and indefinitely, the Senate will be asked to proceed at some very early day to consider this very important matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar; and the bill for which it is a substitute will be postponed indefinitely, if there be no objection.

COLUMBIA RIVER SALMON FISHING.

Mr. DOLPH. By direction of the Committee on Commerce, I report a resolution introduced by my colleague [Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon] on the 9th of December last, directing the Secretary of War to inquire what obstruction fish-traps and other methods of fishing on the Columbia River work to navigation. I ask for the immediate consideration of the resolution. It is a mere resolution of inquiry.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to; as follows:

Whereas it is alleged by persons interested in the commerce of the Columbia River that sundry persons engaged in the business of salmon catching on that river have erected certain structures known as salmon traps and salmon wheels, and that sundry other persons engaged in such salmon fisheries on said river have from time to time during the season placed salmon gill-nets of large dimensions in the waters of said river at various points and places; and

Whereas it is alleged that said wheels, traps, and gill-nets are obstructions to the commerce of said river and seriously interfere with the navigation thereof: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed through the proper Engineer Bureau of his Department to investigate the subject of the salmon fisheries on the Columbia River in the State of Oregon and Washington Territory, the manner in which carried on, whether by gill-nets, traps, or wheels, in what manner the same are placed or used in reference to the navigable waters of said river, and to report to the Senate at the earliest practicable convenience whether such traps, wheels, or nets, or any of them, and which class, in any manner and in what respect and to what extent interferes with or obstructs the navigation of said river and its commerce.

ADDITIONAL CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I am instructed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred a resolution submitted by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. MCMILLAN], on the 24th instant, to report it favorably without amendment; and I ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to; as follows:

Resolved, That there be an additional clerk for the Committee on Commerce for the remainder of the session, at a salary of $8 per day; and that the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay the said salary out of the appropriation for miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Pennsylvania. If there be no further formal morning business, I desire at this time to ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10457) for the relief of dependent parents and honorably discharged soldiers and sailors who are now disabled and dependent upon their own labor for support.

Mr. CULLOM. There are some other formal matters to be brought in during the morning hour.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Pennsylvania. If the Senator will allow me, I desire to complete my statement, so that Senators may understand it. This bill passed the House of Representatives on the 17th instant, a week ago last Monday, by over a two-thirds majority. I am under the necessity of leaving the city for a few days this afternoon. There is a great deal of anxiety in regard to the measure, and I should be very glad if the Senate would take up the bill and dispose of it to-day. I have no purpose to interfere with the formal morning business.

Mr. SAWYER. It will not take five minutes to dispose of the bill, I think.

Mr. CULLOM. I am for the bill, and I shall waive any rights I have as to morning business if it can be taken up and disposed of now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the bill indicated by him. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and will be read at length.

Mr. MANDERSON. I should like to introduce two resolutions for reference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill being before the Senate, the Chair, by unanimous consent, will receive morning business.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to inquire what is the condition of the business of the Senate at this moment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order is "reports from standing and select committees." Pending that call, the Senator from Pennsylvania asks the unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill reported by the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to ask the reference of a resolution introduced by me yesterday to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. I do not want to have that displaced.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will not be displaced; it will be presented in its regular order. The bill called up by the Senator from Pennsylvania will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. BECK. The bill is being read for information, subject to objection after the bill is read, is it not?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair submitted the question and called for objection, and heard none. The bill is now before the Senate.

Mr. BECK. I thought the bill was to be read, and then objections to be asked for. There were all sorts of confusion around me, and I could not hear. I do not want to have other business displaced by a great bill like that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is any doubt about the Senator's having had an opportunity to object, the Chair will consider the motion to take up the bill as open to objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the reading be finished.

Mr. HARRIS. What is the necessity to finish the reading of the bill if objection is made to its consideration?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill will be continued.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. I suppose there will be no objection to the whole of the bill appearing in the RECORD, but I shall, as I have done several mornings heretofore, object to it or any other bill being taken up out of its order during the morning hour; and we may just as well save the time which may be consumed in reading it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As Senators have stated that they did not hear the call for objections, the Chair is of opinion that it is proper to object now, and the bill will go over.

Mr. INGALLS. No; I understand that the Senator from Pennsylvania proposes to move its consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate did proceed to the consideration of the bill, but the Senator from Pennsylvania can not make the motion now during the morning business except by unanimous consent, under the rule of the Senate.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Pennsylvania. I asked unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the bill, and I understood there was no objection to it. Certainly I shall not insist on the consideration or the further reading of the bill at this time, but when the proper order of proceeding is reached I give notice that my purpose is to make a motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are but a few lines of the bill yet remaining to be read.

Mr. HARRIS. I do not object to the reading being concluded.

Mr. CULLOM. Let the bill be read through and we shall have the reading done with when we get at it again.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill.

Mr. INGALLS. Let the bill be printed in the RECORD without reading.

Mr. HARRIS. I suggested that the rest of it be printed in the RECORD as part of it had been read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be restored to its place on the Calendar, subject to a motion to proceed to its consideration.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. VANCE introduced a bill (S. 3227) to amend section 621 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. INGALLS introduced a bill (S. 3228) to amend section No. 3232 of the Revised Statutes, which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Pennsylvania. I understand that the order of resolutions is now reached, and I ask the Chair whether it would be in order to move to proceed to the consideration of the pension bill.

Mr. CULLOM. We are not yet through with the morning business. I have a resolution that I should like to offer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Concurrent or other resolutions are now in order.

MILITARY CLAIMS.

Mr. COCKRELL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War report to the Senate at as early a day as practicable the number of claims filed in War Department, under the act approved June 3, 1884, entitled "An act to provide for the muster and pay of certain officers and enlisted men of the volunteer forces," stating the number filed in the years 1884, 1885, and 1886, separately; and also the number of such claims acted upon during each of said years, and the date of filing the last claims acted upon, and whether such claims have been acted upon in the order in which they were presented, and what length of time will be required to enable the Department to adjust and dispose of all such claims now filed.

FRACTIONAL SILVER COIN.

Mr. CULLOM submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Whereas since March 31, 1885, the Secretary of the Treasury in all his monthly statements of the public debt has treated the fractional silver coin in the Treasury as no portion of the cash balance available: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Finance Committee of the Senate is hereby authorized and directed to examine into this subject and report whether in their opinion additional legislation is required to make the fractional silver coin now held in the Treasury a part of the available cash balance; and also whether it will or not be judicious to provide for having said fractional silver coin recoined into standard silver dollars; and that said committee be required to report by bill or otherwise.

MILITARY ACADEMY REPORT.

Mr. MANDERSON submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That 2,500 additional copies of the annual report of Board of Visitors to the United States Military Academy for the year 1886 be printed; 2,000 for the use of the Senate, and 500 for the use of the Senate members of that board.

INTERSTATE-COMMERCE REPORT.

Mr. MANDERSON submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Senate 10,000 copies of the corrected report of the committee of conference on the bill (S. 1532) to regulate commerce, with the detailed statement of the conferrees on said bill.

DESIGNATION OF REJECTED NOMINEES.

Mr. BECK. If there are no——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution submitted yesterday by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], which comes over on objection.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That after the Senate has refused its advice and consent to the appointment of any person to an office, it is contrary to the spirit and intent of the Constitution to designate the same person to perform the duties of the same office immediately thereafter.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORT ON THE CONGO COUNTRY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate another resolution coming over under objection.

The resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. MORGAN was read, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy is directed to send to the Senate a copy of the report of Lieutenant Taunt of his explorations in the Congo country of Africa.

WILLIAM WEBSTER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate two resolutions, reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], which come over from yesterday under objection.

The resolutions were read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, That after due examination of the matters presented in the petition of William Webster, and the evidence brought to their attention in support of his claim for indemnity from the British Government for lands in New Zealand, purchased by him in good faith from native chiefs, and duly conveyed to him before the Government of Great Britain acquired the sovereignty over that country by a treaty made with said chiefs, the Senate of the United States consider that said claim for indemnity is founded in justice and deserves the cognizance and support of the Government of the United States; and that said claim, as a claim for money indemnity, was not presented by the United States to Great Britain prior to September, 1858.

Resolved, That the President is requested to take such measures as, in his opinion, may be proper to secure to William Webster a just settlement and final adjustment of his claim against Great Britain growing out of the loss of the lands and other property in New Zealand of which he has been deprived by the act or consent of the British Government, and to which he had acquired a title under purchases and deeds of conveyance from the native chiefs prior to February 6, 1840, and prior to any right of Great Britain to said islands.

Mr. MORGAN. I am entirely ready to proceed with the resolutions, but the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations has only found its way to the desks of Senators this morning, and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] indicated some opposition to the resolutions. If they can be passed over without losing their place I should be glad to have them do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions will naturally go to the Calendar if no action is taken upon them this morning.

Mr. COCKRELL. Ought they not to go to the committee before they are considered by the Senate?

Mr. MORGAN. This is the report of the committee after very elaborate consideration, and the printed report will be found on the Senator's desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions will be placed on the Calendar.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (H. R. 7218) to amend an act entitled "An act for the erection of a public building at Chattanooga, Tenn.," approved February 25, 1885.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 8923) to amend an act in relation to the immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes, approved June 10, 1880;

A bill (H. R. 191) providing for the erection of a public building at Los Angeles, Cal.;

A bill (H. R. 9371) for the completion of a public building at Santa Fé, N. Mex.;

A bill (H. R. 9644) for the erection of a public building at Jefferson, Tex.; and

A bill (H. R. 10051) for the erection of a public building at Charleston, S. C.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BECK. If there is no further morning business, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2578) to prohibit members of Congress from acting as attorneys or employés for railroad companies holding charters or having received grant of lands or pecuniary aid from the United States. This is the bill that was taken up yesterday afternoon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania asked unanimous consent a few moments ago to proceed to the consideration of the bill which was read. Does the Senator object to that?

Mr. BECK. I do object to that, and make this motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has that right. The Senator from Kentucky moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill indicated by him.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Pennsylvania. I move to postpone the pending bill for the present, for the purpose of making a motion to proceed to the consideration of the pension bill to which I call attention.

Mr. FRYE. I wish the Senator from Pennsylvania would postpone the pension bill until to-morrow morning, and have it printed so that we can act upon it after examination.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Pennsylvania. The bill passed the House of Representatives, and is printed.

Mr. FRYE. Has the Senate Pension Committee reported it without amendment?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Pennsylvania. The Senate committee has reported it without amendment.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a question of order. I desire to make a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts rises to a question of order, which he will state.

Mr. HOAR. To postpone a bill "for the present" is not one of the motions which is enumerated in the rule. The Senator from Pennsylvania should fix to-morrow or some other specific day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is well taken. The motion to postpone for the present submitted by the Senator from Pennsylvania is not in order in that form.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Pennsylvania. Then I move that the consideration of the bill now before the Senate be postponed until 2 o'clock to-morrow; and I will state that my purpose in making the motion is to ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the pension bill to which I have already called attention.

Mr. BECK. I hope that will not be done. The railroad attorneys bill is a special order. It was once passed by the Senate, then reconsidered, then reported, and delayed day after day. It has been taken up twice at the present session, and is now taken up again; and I hope the Senate will dispose of it. The pension bill has plenty of time between now and the 4th of March, and it was just reported in the last day or two. There is no reason why the Senator from Pennsylvania should press that bill this morning.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President——

Mr. BECK. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] has the floor on the railroad attorneys bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Mr. BERRY. Yesterday evening, the President pro tempore not occupying the chair at the time, this bill was before the Senate and I was entitled to the floor and yielded the floor to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] to make a motion to go into executive session. Am I not entitled to the floor now, when the bill again comes before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas is entitled to the floor whenever the Senate proceeds to the consideration of the bill, but a motion is now made to postpone the consideration of the bill, with a view to take up another bill.

Mr. BERRY. Did not the motion of the Senator from Kentucky bring the bill before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Undoubtedly; but after it is taken up the Senate may take up another bill, and as a motion is pending to proceed to the consideration of another bill, debate is not in order at this time.

Mr. BERRY. I submit that if I was entitled to the floor on the railroad attorneys bill, I can not be taken from the floor by a motion to take up another bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas was clearly entitled to the floor, but he did not claim it at the time, and the Senator from Pennsylvania rose and made a motion to postpone.

Mr. BERRY. I did not get an opportunity to claim the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves that the pending bill be postponed until to-morrow at 2 o'clock and remain as a special order, with a view to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10457) for the relief of dependent parents and honorably discharged soldiers and sailors who are now disabled and dependent upon their own labor for support.

Mr. BECK. Is not the first question on the motion to postpone?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. BECK. I hope that will not be done. The pension bill can be passed at any time between now and the 4th of March. The railroad attorneys bill has been up time and again, and there is no reason for shoving it off.

Mr. INGALLS. I suggest to the Senator from Pennsylvania to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the pension bill to-morrow after the conclusion of the formal morning business.

Mr. ALLISON. That will do. That is right.

Mr. BECK. I should have no objection to that if I knew that the railroad attorneys' bill would be concluded to-day. If the railroad attorneys bill is not completed to-day I shall feel it my duty to call it up to morrow. The pension bill has been reported only one day, and we ought to have a right to examine it.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Pennsylvania. As the Senator from Kentucky, without regard to the rule which, as the Chair stated, does not permit remarks to be made at this time on the subject, was allowed to say something, perhaps it may be proper that I should state for the information of the Senate that the pension bill covers precisely the same questions in relation to pensions that are covered by a bill which was passed by the Senate last May but does not go nearly so far; and also the same points which were covered by a bill passed by the Senate during the Forty-eighth Congress on the same subject, but it does not go nearly so far as that bill.

The bill to which I have drawn attention and which I desire the Senate to take up and consider at this time was passed by the House of Representatives a week ago last Monday by more than two-thirds of the members of that body present and voting upon it. It is a very simple measure. It was reported by the Committee on Pensions of the Senate without amendment. There is a good deal of anxiety about it in the country. The committee of the Grand Army of the Republic upon the subject of pensions appeared before the Committee on Pensions of the Senate and urged that the Senate accept this bill although it is not entirely satisfactory to them, nor is it satisfactory to the Senate committee. I have repeatedly during the last week asked the Senate to take it up and consider it, but constantly something has prevented its consideration. The bill about which the Senator from Kentucky appears so very anxious is now made to combat this proposition. I think that the Senator's bill can afford to wait better than the pension bill. I believe that the sentiment of the country demands action more positively upon the question of pensions than it does upon the subject which is covered by the bill to which the Senator from Kentucky draws attention.

I trust that the Senate will proceed now to the consideration of the pension bill. I may perhaps be permitted to say that it will not be convenient for me to be here to-morrow; that I have remained in the city a week in the hope that this measure might be disposed of; and that I desire to go away.

Mr. HOAR. I ask leave to make a statement to the Senate.

I believe I have in charge the attorneys' bill, having reported it as amended from the Committee on the Judiciary. I propose to bring it up and to have a vote on it, and discussion on it, and to address the Senate on it myself. The Senator from Kentucky need not be in the least alarmed on the subject.

Mr. BECK. I have seen no symptom of any effort being made to call it up in that quarter.

Mr. HOAR. It is not my habit to exhibit any symptoms to the Senator from Kentucky. He is not the physician I call in for that purpose.

Mr. BECK. Not on this bill.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] proposes to address the Senate at length on that subject. He is, as I understand, to make an address in Baltimore this evening, and it will be more agreeable to him to address the Senate to-morrow in regard to that bill. I understand he will be ready to proceed with his remarks then.

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MITCHELL] is unable to be here to-morrow and desires very much to go on with the pension bill to-day. Under these circumstances, so far as my consent can have any effect on it, I desire to consent that the attorneys bill may proceed to-morrow and the pension bill come up to-day.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair allows debate to proceed without objection.

Mr. EVARTS. I rise as I have been referred to, merely to say what I have already said to my friend from Kentucky. I have been ready to take part in this debate, but as I said to him last week if it should run until this very day I should be awkwardly situated. I hoped it would have been reached yesterday or the day before, and I might have been free from any entanglement; but the engagement which has been referred to is one that was made nearly a month ago.

I will only say that I should prefer to be able to be present at the whole debate and then to take part in it, though I hope not at any great length in my own estimate of the subject; but I feel bound to leave the Senate Chamber as early as 3 o'clock to-day, and if there may be an understanding that would be agreeable to the Senator from Kentucky that the bill should stand for to-morrow at this hour with its right, it would be considerably more convenient to me. I do not feel any disposition, nor am I at all at liberty to stand in the way of a prompt disposal of the bill.

Mr. BECK. Now, Mr. President, only one word. Inasmuch as the Senator from Pennsylvania seems to make a contrast between the importance of certain measures, I will say that I do not know that I have any objection to his bill, but his bill was only reported on the 19th of this month, about a week ago. No notice has been given until this moment that he intended to call it up to-day, and no one had a copy of the bill. The Senator from Maine referred to that. The intimation that a great number of persons desire to have this done is no reason why it should displace other business that has the legitimate right of way over it.

I am willing to vote for all fair pension bills, but I do not think it is quite fair for gentlemen, because they uphold bills which they think popular, to press every other measure out of the way without giving full opportunity to have the measures they present considered and heard.

The bill that the Senator says I am so anxious to get up I have shown no great anxiety to press unduly. It was made a special order in the early part of December. It was postponed then for the convenience of the Senator from New York and other gentlemen, and it lost its place by other special orders. The day before yesterday I had it called up, intending to give the Senator from New York an opportunity to speak upon it, and yesterday I had it called up again for that very purpose. He knew I would call it up to-day. I think now, if we get it up for consideration and he wants to go away at 3 o'clock, the Senator from Arkansas will give way so that the Senator from New York may speak and be back in the morning.

The Senator from Massachusetts wants the honor of claiming that this is his measure. All I ask him to do is to have it considered and not let it lose its place, as I have felt it would have done time and again if I had not held it to the place to which it is entitled.

Now, if an arrangement can be made whereby it shall be the special order to the exclusion of everything else at 2 o'clock to-morrow, or whenever the agricultural experiment-station bill is disposed of, I am content. I do not want to disturb the pending bill or interfere with the convenience of the Senator from New York, or of any other Senator. I simply want to have this matter disposed of by the Senate as they think proper.

Mr. EVARTS. I should hope that might be done. The Senator from Kentucky knows very well that there is every disposition so far as I am concerned to have the bill disposed of.

Mr. BECK. And we have tried, both of us, to get it up.

Mr. EVARTS. We both tried to get it up.

Mr. BECK. And I thought you would have time to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill to which the Senator from Kentucky refers is now at the head of the Special Orders, and naturally will be announced at 2 o'clock, and would be to-day but for the unfinished business—the bill in charge of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE].

Mr. BECK. Then I will agree that to-morrow at 2 o'clock, even if something else intervenes after this bill passes, in the absence of the Senator from New York, if the agricultural experiment-station bill is finished to-day—I will not attempt to call up the railroad attorney bill until to-morrow at 2 o'clock, when the Senator from New York will be here.

Mr. HOAR. I am perfectly willing, if the Senator from Kentucky would prefer, to do better than that—to call it up at the close of the morning business to-morrow.

Mr. BECK. The Senator from New York will be satisfied to have it called at 2 o'clock, as that will give him full time.

Mr. EVARTS. I shall be at your service to-morrow morning at 12.

Mr. BECK. I think 2 o'clock would be better.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the bill now pending, and referred to by him, shall be placed as the unfinished business for 2 o'clock to-morrow. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Pennsylvania. With the understanding that the pension bill shall be taken up and considered at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania is still pending. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10457) for the relief of dependent parents and honorably discharged soldiers and sailors who are now disabled and dependent upon their own labor for support.

Mr. CALL. I ask to be heard before consent is given as to the disposition of to-morrow. I ask unanimous consent to say a word.

I do not wish to interpose any objection to any measure that is desired to be brought up, but I desire to have an understanding myself that upon the conclusion of the agricultural experiment bill, if it should be concluded to-day, the resolution which I have been urging before the Senate may be the special order of the Senate. I will not interpose any objection provided I can have a hearing; but I do not like to have three or four days occupied with other business. I am prepared to have the resolution considered now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What does the Senator from Florida propose?

Mr. CALL. I desire to have the resolution with which I am intrusted made the special order immediately after the conclusion of the agricultural bill.

Mr. VEST. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made the proposition can not be received, as it requires unanimous consent.

Mr. VEST. I do not want the Senator from Florida to suppose that I am objecting to his particular resolution; but the bill of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] is a special order, and the next special order is a bill in which I am concerned, and the understanding was that we should go on and finish the agricultural experiment bill, and then take up the special orders regularly. We know that the sundry civil appropriation bill is coming to-morrow. The bill relative to the Nicaragua canal has been here for eight months. The sundry civil bill comes to-morrow and takes the right of way, and that is the end of everything else for this session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill moved by the Senator from Pennsylvania will be continued.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. BERRY. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry in regard to the bill that has been postponed until 2 o'clock to-morrow, the railroad attorneys bill. I was entitled to the floor when that bill came before the Senate this morning, but the Chair recognized the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MITCHELL]. I wish to know what my rights are by reason of that recognition?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas is clearly entitled to the floor whenever the consideration of that bill is resumed, unless he himself yields.

Mr. BERRY. I did not expect to yield this morning, but the Chair recognized another Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As the Senator from Arkansas did not rise, and the Senator from Pennsylvania rose, the Chair was bound to recognize the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The bill called up on motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania is before the Senate.

PENSIONS OF DISABLED SOLDIERS AND DEPENDENT PARENTS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10457) for the relief of dependent parents and honorably discharged soldiers and sailors who are now disabled and dependent upon their own labor for support.

The bill is in the following words:

Be it enacted, &c., That in considering the pension claims of dependent parents, the fact and cause of death, and the fact that the soldier left no widow or minor children, having been shown as required by law, it shall be necessary only to show by competent and sufficient evidence that such parent or parents are without other present means of support than their own manual labor or the contributions of others not legally bound for their support: Provided, That no pension allowed under this act shall commence prior to its passage, and in case of applications hereafter made under this act the pension shall commence from the date of the filing of the application in the Pension Office.

SEC. 2. That all persons who served three months or more in the military or naval service of the United States in any war in which the United States has been engaged, and who have been honorably discharged therefrom, and who are now or who may hereafter be suffering from mental or physical disability, not the result of their own vicious habits or gross carelessness, which incapacitates them for the performance of labor in such a degree as to render them unable to earn a support, and who are dependent upon their daily labor for support, shall, upon making due proof of the fact according to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may provide in pursuance of this act, be placed on the list of invalid pensioners of the United States, and be entitled to receive, for such total inability to procure their subsistence by daily labor, $12 per month; and such pension shall commence from the date of the filing of the application in the Pension Office, upon proof that the disability then existed, and continue during the existence of the same in the degree herein provided: Provided, That persons who are now receiving pensions under existing laws, or whose claims are pending in the Pension Office, may, by application to the Commissioner of Pensions, in such forms as he may prescribe, receive the benefits of this act; but nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to allow more than one pension at the same time to the same person, or pension to commence prior to the passage of this act: And provided further, That rank in the service shall not be considered in applications filed thereunder.

SEC. 3. That no agent, attorney, or other person instrumental in the presentation and prosecution of a claim under this act shall demand or receive for his services or instrumentality in presenting and prosecuting such claim a greater sum than $5, payable only upon the order of the Commissioner of Pensions, by the pension agent making payment of the pension allowed, except in cases heretofore prosecuted before the Pension Office, when, in the discretion of the Commissioner of Pensions, a fee of $10 may be allowed in like manner to the agent or attorney of record in the case at the date of the passage of this act; and any agent, attorney, or other person instrumental in the prosecution of a claim under this act who shall demand or receive a sum greater than that herein provided for, for his service in the prosecution of the claim, shall be subject to the same penalties as prescribed in section 4 of the act of July 4, 1884, entitled "An act making appropriation for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, and for other purposes."

SEC. 4. That section 4716 of the Revised Statutes is hereby modified so that the same shall not apply to this act: Provided, That this act shall not apply to those persons under political disabilities. And no person shall be pensioned under this act for any disability incurred while engaged in the military service against the United States.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Pennsylvania. I do not intend to detain the Senate by any discussion of this bill. I suppose when Senators look at it they will all understand it without any such discussion.

As I stated before, it covers the same questions upon which the Senate has, during the last two years, twice taken action; but the bill which comes to us now from the House of Representatives does not, as I also stated before, go nearly so far upon the one subject of pensioning disabled Union soldiers as do both of the bills formerly passed by the Senate. Therefore, I may state, I think, as the sense at least of this side of the Senate, that the bill now coming to us from the House is not satisfactory to us, but we are satisfied that it will do a great deal of good, and we are willing to accept what we can get at this time.

The bill simply proposes, in the first place, to change the rule of evidence in relation to the proof of dependence of parents. The existing law requires that that proof shall relate to the time of the death of the soldier. This bill proposes to change that rule so that if any parent be now dependent, first the mother and then the father shall be entitled to a pension on account of the death of a son in the service. That is all the first section does.

The next section, which is the most important, relates to soldiers not only in the late war, but soldiers in all of the wars in which the Republic has been engaged.

Mr. FRYE. May I be allowed to ask a question?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. FRYE. I understood the Senator from Pennsylvania to say that practically this includes a portion of the bill which we sent over to the other House twice, only it does not cover as much ground. I ask the Senator if the Senate ever sent over a proposition to the other House to pension all the soldiers of all the wars that this country has been engaged in from the beginning up to the present time, as this bill provides for.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Pennsylvania. In reply to the Senator from Maine I will state that neither of the bills to which I referred did so. They related only to the soldiers who were engaged in the late war against the Southern rebellion.

Mr. FRYE. Then I will ask the Senator whether or not this does not pension all the soldiers engaged in the Seminole and Mexican wars and other wars, entirely regardless of their having subsequently gone into rebellion against the Government?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Pennsylvania. Yes, Mr. President, it does that unless the disability under which they labor was incurred in the service of the rebellion, fighting against the Government. The Senator will see, if he refers to the last section, that that question is met by a proviso.

It is true that this bill contains a partial repeal in effect of section 4716, which the Senate understand prevents the payment of pensions to those who were engaged in the rebellion on the part of the Confederate States.

Mr. FRYE. So that this bill practically changes that whole policy which we have kept on the statute-books so long.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Pennsylvania. This bill does to that extent allow a pension to a soldier who was engaged in the Mexican war, or in any of the Indian wars, if now totally disabled, or, in my judgment, if disabled to any considerable degree, without regard to his having been in the rebel army; but it does not propose to pension him for any disability which was incurred in the rebel service. The bill assumes that he must have incurred his disability fighting for the Government—at least, not in fighting against it.

Mr. FRYE. Now, just one word more. Does not the Senator see that that opens the door to a very serious difficulty and trouble in this: If a man who served in the rebel army is to-day disabled by rheumatism, or by any chronic disease, is there not an utter impossibility of determining whether or not that was incurred while serving in the rebel army?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Pennsylvania. Yes; undoubtedly there will be difficulty in administering the law in those cases. I confess that in my own mind, as an original question, I would not be inclined to go so far on that subject as this bill does; but since the passage of the Mexican pension bill it appears to me that we ought to be willing to accept those who fought in the old wars and who may have been engaged in the rebellion, and place them on the pension-roll if they can satisfy the Government that they now labor under any disability which was not incurred by reason of that service. The burden of proof will be on them if the issue is made against them, and the Government will take care that it is. We agreed to this principle by the passage of the Mexican pension bill.

I desire to say a word as to the construction that is to be applied to this act. It was held when this bill was up in another place that the second section would only cover cases of total inability to perform manual labor. To my mind that ought not to be the construction of this bill, if it become a law, and I come to that conclusion from its letter and the analogies of the practice under the old pension law. The old total disability rate was $8 in all cases not involving a question of rank. By the practice of the Pension Office that total disability was divided into different degrees; in some cases one-fourth, in others one-half, three-fourths, &c., and that without any express provision of law. Then subsequently an act was passed raising the rate which might be divisible to $18 per month; so that there is a well-settled practice of the Government in that respect, and it appears to me that this bill ought to be construed to cover the case of any Union soldier, or any other soldier included within its provisions, who is now disabled to any considerable extent. Any disability which disables a person from gaining a livelihood by manual labor, I think, is provided for by that section.

A desire to call attention to the provisions of the bill which the Senate passed last May, but not desiring to detain the Senate for the purpose, I will ask that the bill, as it was passed by the Senate, may be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MANDERSON in the chair). It will be so printed, if there be no objection.

The bill passed by the Senate is as follows:

A bill for the relief of soldiers of the late war, honorably discharged after three months' service, who are disabled and dependent upon their own labor for support, and of dependent parents of soldiers who died in the service or from disabilities contracted therein.

Be it enacted, &c., That every person specified in the several classes enumerated in section 4693 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and the amendments thereto, who served in the military or naval service, as mentioned in said section, for the period of three months during the war of the rebellion, and has an honorable discharge therefrom, and who is or shall become disabled from any cause not the result of his own fault, and shall also be dependent upon his own exertions for support, or upon the contributions of others not legally bound thereto, shall, upon making due proof of the facts, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the proper authority, be placed upon the list of pensioners of the United States, and be entitled to receive a pension during the continuance of such disability and dependence at a rate proportionate to the degree of such disability; and such pension shall commence at the date of filing an application therefor. The highest rate of pension granted under this section, which shall be for total incapacity to perform any manual labor, shall be $24 per month, which is hereby made divisible upon that basis for any less degree of disability: Provided, That no person entitled to or receiving an invalid pension under existing laws, or such as may be hereafter enacted, granting pensions for disabilities contracted in the military or naval service of the United States, and in line of duty, greater than that provided for herein, shall receive the benefits of this act; but any applicant for such invalid pension having an application therefor pending, or who shall hereafter file his application for such pension, may, by a declaration over his own signature, at any time, elect to prosecute his said claim under this act or under the general laws, and his pension, when allowed, if prosecuted under this act, shall commence from the date of such election: Provided further, That no pension paid under any law hereafter shall be rated at less than $4 per month.

SEC. 2. That in considering the claims of dependent parents, the fact and cause of death and the fact that the soldier left no widow or minor children having been shown as required by law, it shall be necessary only to show by competent and sufficient evidence that such dependent parent is without other present means of comfortable support than his or her own manual labor, or the contributions of others not legally bound for his or her support; and such as may be found to be entitled to $8 a month under existing laws, as modified by this section, shall receive in lieu thereof $12 a month from and after the approval of this act.

SEC. 3. That in all applications under the general pension laws, including this act, where it appears by record evidence that the applicant was regularly enlisted and mustered into the service, that fact shall be conclusive evidence of soundness at the time of his enlistment, except in case of fraud.

SEC. 4. That no person shall be entitled to more than one pension at the same time under any or all laws of the United States, whether such pension shall have been already obtained or shall be hereafter obtained, unless the act under which such pension is claimed shall specially so declare.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Pennsylvania. It appears by that bill that soldiers who were engaged in the late war on the part of the Union for three months or more and who were disabled and are dependent on their labor for support would be entitled to a pension not exceeding $24, according to the degree of disability, to be ascertained by proper examination through the Pension Office. The total rate in that bill was fixed at $24. In this bill the extreme rate is fixed at $12, and is or is not divisible according to the construction that shall be placed upon it.

Mr. CULLOM. May I ask the chairman of the Committee on Pensions a question?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Pennsylvania. I have no objection.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to know whether under the bill now under consideration if a soldier is pensioned and placed on the pension-roll at all he must be paid $12 a month; in other words, whether that is the lowest pension under this bill as well as the highest?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Pennsylvania. I have already stated that in the view which I take of this subject I believe that the rate of $12 is fixed by this bill as the total rate, and that it is divisible according to the degree of disability; but the bill which was passed by the Senate is subject to no question of construction of that kind. It is clear and express. It fixes the rate of $24, and makes it divisible according to the degree of disability from which the soldier might suffer.

The provision in relation to dependent parents is substantially the same as that in the bill passed by the Senate, and that is a very wholesome provision.

I may be allowed to say, perhaps, as a matter of interest to the Senate, that if this bill becomes a law it will, as I think, at least in respect to that section of it, relieve Congress from a great many private pension bills. We are constantly called upon now to relieve poor old parents, especially mothers who are now dependent but who are unable to show that they were dependent at the time of the death of the soldier.

I ought to state that the Secretary of the Interior recommended that Congress should grant relief to that extent to cover these cases of dependent parents, and I might say also in the same connection that the President in his late message drew attention to the other subject covered by this bill, relating to disabled and indigent soldiers; and I think the bill may be said to agree with the suggestion which the President makes on that subject.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I should like to ask the Chairman of the Committee on Pensions whether he understands that the words "in any war," in the second section of this act, include Indian wars?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Pennsylvania. I do so understand, and I think that was the construction placed upon it in the House of Representatives. I can myself perceive no reason why it ought not to be so applied and construed except that which the Senator from Maine has drawn attention to. This matter received considerable attention in the House of Representatives, and I take it that the expression of that body on the subject, passing the bill as they did under a suspension of the rules by over two-thirds majority, ought to be persuasive here.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. If it be in order, to remove all doubt upon this subject, I shall move to insert after the word "war," in line 3 of section 2, the words "including any Indian war."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is in order. The bill is open to admendment. No amendment being proposed by the Committee on Pensions, the amendment of the Senator from Oregon is in order if he desires to present it at this time.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I should like very much to have the bill relieved of any doubt.

Mr. SEWELL. While a member of the Committee on Pensions I was not present at this meeting when this bill was under consideration. It is, as the chairman of the committee says, a modification of at least two bills that have passed this body, and a reduction of the amount proposed to be paid per month to the pensioners under those bills from $24 to $12. At the same time it proposes to change what has been hitherto closely guarded, and what has been the policy of the Government for years, so that soldiers of the Seminole war, the Mexican war, and other wars who subsequently served in the confederate army may, under this bill, obtain a pension. I am opposed to that part of the bill. I am opposed to opening the door so that any man who served in the confederate army shall ever receive a pension from the United States Government. It is hardly necessary to give the reasons, and I do not propose to do any more than to make the simple statement. I differ with the committee in this policy, and had I been present at the meeting at which the bill was under consideration I should have objected very strongly to its being reported in its present condition.

I offer as an amendment to the bill, to strike out the fourth section, and insert in lieu of it:

That nothing contained in this act shall be construed as repealing or modifying section 4716 of the Revised Statutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey will be read by the Secretary.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out section 4 of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 4. That section 4716 of the Revised Statutes is hereby modified so that the same shall not apply to this act: Provided, That this act shall not apply to those persons under political disabilities. And no person shall be pensioned under this act for any disability incurred while engaged in the military service against the United States,

And in lieu thereof, to insert:

That nothing contained in this act shall be construed as repealing or modifying section 4716 of the Revised Statutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on this amendment.

Mr. BLAIR. I think there is a misapprehension in the minds of Senators in regard to the effect of this bill so far as opening the way to pensions to those who may have served in the rebel army is concerned. It will be observed, in the first place, that whoever is to receive a pension under it must have served in the Mexican war, or an Indian war, or in some war on the side of the Government. Those who have served in the Mexican war have already been provided with pensions without reference to their service in the rebel army. The bill which we have passed gives a service pension and has gone to the House, and it is my impression that in that bill the principle which is here spoken of has been, if you may choose to so express it, given away; but at all events this bill will reach only a very small number of soldiers who served in the rebel army, and they must be totally disabled; and they must not have contracted their disability in the rebel army. It either must have been contracted from some cause outside their military service against the Government, or actually contracted by virtue of their military service in behalf of the Government. The soldiers of the Mexican war are, I think, all provided for already where the disability itself was not received in actual service in the rebel army. It can not extend in any event to any but those who are totally disabled, and that number must be very few.

Those who are absolutely totally disabled, as the House of Representatives certainly have construed this bill in passing it, must be but a very small number of those who served in the Mexican war. As construed there, the bill applies to but a very small proportion of the soldiers of the country who are in actual need, no matter whether their disability or incapacity to labor was contracted in one war or in another, or in time of peace, as the case may be. It is not likely to reach far enough in the direction suggested by the Senator from Maine to do any substantial harm; and it seems to me that it will be no stretch of the magnanimity of the Government to let the provisions of this bill, which only apply to total disability as I understand, reach as far as they may.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to ask the Senator from New Hampshire where he gets his idea that it is total disability.

Mr. BLAIR. The terms of the bill itself say so. The phrase which gives a pension says there shall be paid "for such total inability * * * $12 per month." There is nothing in the bill itself about a grading of the $12 according to the disability as it may actually exist.

Mr. FRYE. I do not find that in the bill.

Mr. BLAIR. If it can be construed the other way, I shall be glad of it.

Mr. FRYE. I find it now "total inability to procure their subsistence." Would partial disability, which prevents a man from working all the time, be a total inability to obtain his subsistence by labor?

Mr. BLAIR. Whether it be mental or physical labor.

Mr. FRYE. I hope the Senator from New Hampshire is right, because I am going to vote for the bill, and if he is right so much the better; but the bill is not worth much, if anything, anyway.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not suppose it was meant to be worth much, if anything, anyway.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Pennsylvania. I want to say one word in reply to the suggestion made by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL]. As I stated before, if this were an original question, perhaps I might express myself differently upon it; but I take it that at this time in our history we must regard it as settled, especially on the part of the present Congress. The Mexican pension bill, so called, provides substantially the same thing that this bill proposes relating to those who are disabled now. So I think it is too late for us to raise that objection here, and I trust that the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey will not be agreed to. I hope that there will be no amendment made to this bill, but that it will be accepted for what it is. It is better to take a part of a loaf than get nothing.

Mr. SEWELL. I wish to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania a question. I ask him to state if the Senate in passing the pension bills which have been referred to ever agreed to pension any one who had served in the rebel army?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Pennsylvania. I understand it in that way.

Mr. SEWELL. I should like to know the fact.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Pennsylvania. That is the provision of the bill passed by the Senate in May last, and that bill will pension a great many soldiers of the Mexican war who reside now in the Southern States and who took part in the rebellion; but in that bill, as in this, there was a provision that if they incurred the disability under which they labor in service against the Government, they should not be pensioned. So we stand precisely consistent to-day on this bill with our action formerly.

Mr. SEWELL. Does that bill practically repeal in so many words, as section 4 of this bill does, section 4716 of the Revised Statutes?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Pennsylvania. That bill, I remember, does, in almost the same words, repeal that section. There is another provision in that bill that no person laboring under political disabilities shall be entitled to a pension, and the same provision is here. We all understand what that means.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The Senator from Pennsylvania in respect of one class of pensions provided for in the Mexican pension bill is undoubtedly correct, inasmuch as that bill provides a pension for all persons within its terms who served during the Mexican war who have become or may become sixty-two years of age. Therefore, it established the limit of age as a disability, and if the physical disability under which the pensioner may be laboring was in fact contracted in the rebel army, still being sixty-two years of age he will be entitled to a pension. But with reference to the other class provided for in that bill it is expressly declared that they shall not receive a pension for any disability contracted in the rebel army or in military service against the authority of the United States.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Pennsylvania. That is my recollection of that bill.

Mr. SEWELL. I object to this bill that it repeals entirely that provision which we have guarded so closely for years, and absolutely allows pensions to be granted to men who served in the confederate service who had previously served in any of our Indian wars or in the Mexican war. If the Senate desire to vote for a bill of that kind, they must do it with their eyes open, but up to this time I had no idea that there was even an approach to an evasion or overthrow of that section. There was last year quite a contest over a provision to repeal the law which prohibits confederate soldiers from having positions in the Army to-day, and that is the law of the land at the present time, and it seems to me if a confederate soldier can not serve the national flag under present circumstances he should not be rewarded by a pension for disability that may have occurred in a war against his own Government.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL].

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, a year ago, when a general pension bill, as it might be called, was before the Senate, I consulted with the Committee on Pensions about so changing the phraseology of that bill as to bring without doubt within its provisions a class of cases which is very small in number but very meritorious, that of those persons whose disability arises from an exsection of the bone of the arm or leg. In most of those cases nature has supplied the bone, but there are a few, where the exsection commenced with the joint either of the arm or the leg, that nature has never been able to do anything towards supplying the defect, and the limb is absolutely useless; in some respects it is an incumbrance. The committee were of opinion that the phraseology of their then pension bill would cover these cases, and at their suggestion, and having confidence in their judgment, I omitted to offer an amendment to meet the point. I understand that since the passage of that bill it has been before the Department, and the Department has ruled, as I feared it would, that these cases are not covered by the phraseology of the existing law. There are less than one hundred of them, all told. They are where the exsection begins at the joint and nature has never supplied a joint or supplied the space of the bone between the joint and where it was taken out. I desire to offer an amendment which will meet that case. These suffering soldiers have a useless limb, and I think from what I have heard from them and from others that in a majority of cases it is much worse than if the limb had been taken off. For the purpose of covering their case, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk, to come in at the end of the second section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will receive it, but an amendment is already pending to strike out the fourth section and insert new matter. The present question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL]. When that is disposed of the Senator from Massachusetts will be recognized.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to inquire of the Committee on Pensions, or some member of it, whether the bill that passed for the pensioning of the Mexican war soldiers did not contain this clause:

That section 4716 of the Revised Statutes is hereby repealed so far as the same relates to this act or to pensioners under this act.

I understand, as that bill became a law, that is a portion of the bill. If that is so, it is quite immaterial what we say about that matter in this bill, because by a measure which has already become a law, as I understand, we have provided for the repeal of that section practically.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. It is a limited repeal only so far as it relates to the pensioners under that particular act.

Mr. TELLER. I understand it is so limited; but if we take the rest of them who are under sixty-two years—for that is all it applies to, and the great majority of them have already passed that age—why should we simply repeal or modify this section in the one case and not in the other? It seems to me that, having entered upon the system of letting down the rule that was provided for in this case, we might as well let it go to the full extent. Therefore, if I am correctly informed as to this—and I find from the RECORD that that bill so passed the House—I shall vote against the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to have the Senate understand just exactly what has already been done in reference to the repeal of this section 4716 by the passage of what is known as the Mexican pension bill. The Mexican pension bill provided in substance that all persons who served in the war with Mexico for sixty days should be entitled to a pension, with certain provisions attached. One proviso was this:

Provided, That every such officer, enlisted man, or widow who is or may become sixty-two years of age, or who is or may become subject to any disability or dependency equivalent to some cause prescribed or recognized by the pension laws of the United States as a sufficient reason for the allowance of a pension, shall be entitled to the benefits of this act; but it shall not be held to include any person not within the rule of age or disability or dependency herein defined, or who incurred such disability while in any manner voluntarily engaged in aiding or abetting the late rebellion against the authority of the United States.

And then a subsequent section of the act provided—

That section 4716 of the Revised Statutes is hereby repealed so far as the same relates to this act or to pensioners under this act.

The effect of that law is this: If a person served in the Mexican war and afterward entered the confederate service and became disabled in that service, he does not get any pension under this act which we have passed, but if he was in the confederate service and has since that time become sixty-two years of age or become so disabled as that his disability would constitute a cause for pension recognized by the Pension Office under present laws, then he does get a pension. That I understand to be the effect of the Mexican pension bill. It only excludes from the operations of the act such persons as claim on account of service in the Mexican war who were disabled in the confederate service.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I have been in hope that some bill, broad and general and comprehensive in its character, which would include all the legislation that is necessary to perfect our general pension laws, would be presented to us.

The objection I have to this bill is that it does not include all the legislation of a general character which, in my judgment, ought to be passed at the present Congress. Perhaps it is all that the two Houses of Congress can agree upon, and therefore it may be best to vote for the bill as it stands; but there are several propositions which have been made in the Senate which, I think, would meet the hearty concurrence of this body, with scarcely any division, making special provisions in regard to particular cases of disability, and among others some provision to allow arrears of pension to persons who have lost an arm or a leg or who have become blind or otherwise disabled. For such cases suitable provision has not been fully made. Bills are now pending before the Committee on Pensions which would provide for them properly. I introduced a bill the other day which I thought was just and right, and would receive the vote of every generous-minded man. It proposed to extend the present rate of pension for the loss of an arm or a leg back to the date of disability in order to cover to some extent the sufferings and disabilities that such Union soldiers have endured. There is no reason why the same principle should not be applied to those who have become blind or deaf or who have suffered disability equivalent to the loss of a leg or an arm. There is no provision of that kind in this bill.

Then there is another demand that, sooner or later, must be acted upon by the Senate. That is, to what extent arrearages should be granted for claims that have been filed since the 1st of July, 1880.

When the Mexican pension bill was before the Senate two years ago an amendment was adopted to grant to Union soldiers a pension after they had arrived at the age of sixty-two years. An amendment was offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] proposing to repeal the restriction limiting arrearages of pensions to applications made prior to July 1, 1880, and allowing all persons to claim pensions from the date of disability, without respect to the time of filing of their applications. I believed at that time that this was not a wise provision. I voted against it, I spoke against it, and no doubt contributed, to some extent, at least by my vote, to prevent that amendment being ingrafted upon the Mexican pension bill. It did not have any effect, because the bill itself failed on account of other differences between the two Houses. But I became thoroughly satisfied afterwards, in conversation with many good soldiers in the Union Army, and especially with those who had had the benefit of arrears of pension, who had filed applications in time to avail themselves of that privilege—I became thoroughly satisfied that the restriction as it stood was an unjust one and excluded some of the most worthy and deserving cases from the relief granted under the pension laws.

As I am never ashamed to change my opinion, and to express that change at any time when I find I am wrong, as we are all fallible, when I was called to an account by my constituents, not in an offensive but a friendly way, I did examine the arguments for and against repealing that restriction. I became satisfied that an arbitrary limitation by date for the filing of an application for pension was an unjust restriction, and that the same relief and rule ought to be applied to all pensioners, whether they were eager and prompt to demand their pensions or whether they put off their application in the hope that they would not have to appeal to the bounty of the Government. I became satisfied that in that vote I was wrong, and before my constituents two years ago I said so. I will ask the Secretary to read a marked passage of a speech I made in the canvass in Ohio upon arrears of pension.

The Secretary read as follows:

No duty now rests upon the Government of the United States more important than the general application and execution of our pension laws for the benefit of the Union soldiers, their widows and orphans. In this connection I wish to say that, while the Mexican pension bill was pending in the last Congress I opposed the amendment offered to have pensions commence from the date of disability, but preferred instead the general disability amendment allowing pensions to all disabled soldiers who have arrived at a certain age, without regard to the cause of disability. I am now prepared to, and will when the subject is again presented, vote to place all pensioners upon the same footing as those who received pensions under the law as it stood prior to July 1, 1880. As a rule I do not believe in giving pensions prior to the date of application, but this general rule was departed from by the act of January 25, 1879. The general sentiment of the surviving soldiers of the war is that no discrimination shall be made in applications filed after July 1, 1880, but that all pensions shall commence from the disability, and, as such is the clearly declared wish of the late Republican convention, I will cheerfully conform to it, and hereafter vote to allow all pensions growing out of the civil war to commence from the date of disability.

Mr. SHERMAN. And now, sir, I am willing and anxious to carry out that pledge. I have been waiting for an opportunity to remove the limitation upon arrears of pensions and to apply the same rule to all applications, whether filed before or after July 1, 1880.

By the legislation of the present Congress we have passed the Mexican pension bill. That bill has become a law, and it gives to everybody who served for sixty days in the Mexican war a pension of $8 a month, whether disabled or not. That is in harmony with the provisions made for the Revolutionary soldiers and the soldiers of the war of 1812. That is agreed upon. I do not see, therefore, why it is that provision is made in this bill for the Mexican war soldiers, because the bill that has become a law gives to every one of them, whether disabled or not, a pension of $8 a month.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator allow me to correct him about the Mexican pension bill? The soldiers must have arrived at sixty-two years of age before they are entitled to a pension under that bill.

Mr. PLATT. If the Senator from Ohio will allow me I think I can state what the Mexican pension bill does provide for, and the Senator will then see the reason for putting Mexican soldiers into this bill.

The Mexican pension bill, as passed by the House, does not, I think, include all persons who served in the Mexican war for sixty days. If it appears that their disability was incurred in the confederate service they are excluded from that. But if they are sixty-two years of age, and did not serve in the confederate service, or if they are in such a state of dependence as is recognized as cause for a pension in the Pension Office, and did not incur their disability in the service of the confederate government, then they are pensioned. The Mexican pension bill, however, does not pension in its terms those who served in the confederate army and obtained their disability there.

Mr. TELLER. They may have served in that army.

Mr. PLATT. Exactly; they may have served in the army, but if they served and obtained the disability there for which they claim the pension, then the Mexican pension bill does not give them a pension. The object of this, as I understand it, is to include all persons who served in the Mexican war, whether they were in the confederate service or not, and whether they got their disability in the confederate service or not.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the Senator from Connecticut has made a mistake—which he very rarely does—but I will state that when the limitation of sixty-two years was applied to the Mexican soldiers it meant all; because practically forty years ago——

Mr. GEORGE. Nearly all.

Mr. SHERMAN. Pretty much all that survived would have reached that age. So I assume that it is what is called a general pension bill, a service pension without respect to age and the limitation of sixty-two years.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator allow me to read the proviso in the Mexican pension bill?

Provided, That every such officer, enlisted man, or widow who is or may become sixty-two years of age, or who is or may become subject to any disability or dependency equivalent to some cause prescribed or recognized by the pension laws of the United States as a sufficient reason for the allowance of a pension, shall be entitled to the benefits of this act; but it shall not be held to include any person not within the rule of age or disability or dependency herein defined, or who incurred such disability while in any manner voluntarily engaged in or aiding or abetting the late rebellion against the authority of the United States.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will correct the misapprehension into which the Senator has fallen. This bill is in effect precisely like the Mexican pension bill, though not in words. The same provision just read in regard to the confederate soldier who served in the Mexican war is in this bill.

The words are:

And no person shall be pensioned under this act for any disability incurred while engaged in military service against the United States.

Mr. PLATT. I was mistaken as to the effect of this bill. I have only had this morning to look at it.

Mr. SHERMAN. So far as the two bills are concerned the Mexican bill already places on the pension list, assuming that it will be signed by the President, all who served in the Mexican war except a few who may not yet have arrived at the age of sixty-two years.

Mr. INGALLS. Does the Senator think this bill will give them cumulative pensions?

Mr. SHERMAN. No, sir.

Mr. INGALLS. So that they would not be entitled to anything under this bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. I think they would if they were totally disabled.

Mr. INGALLS. That was the point to which I directed my inquiry, whether under this bill, the Mexican pension bill having provided for a service pension, those who were within the definition of service would not have a cumulative or additional pension?

Mr. SHERMAN. No; it is provided by the bill itself that only one pension can be drawn. The effect of this bill is to give pensions to Mexican war soldiers who are utterly unable to take care of themselves, unable to earn a livelihood, who are totally disabled, or, to use the language of the law, who are suffering under such mental or physical disability as incapacitates them for the performance of labor to such a degree as to render them unable to earn a support. In all such cases as those this bill would come in and give the Mexican war soldier a pension of $12 a month instead of $8. I presume that is the only difference.

Mr. BLAIR. That is the only difference.

Mr. SHERMAN. So far as the persons who have served in the confederate army are concerned, the Mexican pension law does not exclude them from drawing a pension because they served in the confederate service unless their disability was created by their service in the rebel service. That would be a thing almost impossible to prove. This does the same thing, so that in that respect the two bills are alike. As we have already passed the Mexican pension bill and have now passed these general service pension laws, why is it not better in the Senate to add to the present bill a reasonable provision in regard to the limitation imposed by the act of 1879? Why not attach to this bill—there is no danger of this bill being lost by a conference—such reasonable provision as the Senate may think right and proper to give arrears of pension in cases of disability that were applied for after 1880?

I found that I myself and nearly every Senator here fell under a great misapprehension in regard to the effect of such a provision. An examination of the subject led me to change my opinion in conformity with the general opinion of Union soldiers, many of whom had drawn their arrears. They did not like to see a different rule applied to their fellow-soldiers who had put off for a long time the application for a pension. It is certain that if the application was not made until after the 1st of July, 1880, it could not have been that the disability was for the loss of an arm or a leg, or for any palpable wound, or the loss of sight or hearing. Such application would be for an inchoate injury that a soldier might receive in war, but which did not develop into a disability for many years. Many such cases I have myself known, where it was difficult to trace the disability to the war, and yet where the proof is cogent and conclusive that the disability had existed to a greater or a less extent from the date of the war. Many clear cases of permanent disability, and death, have resulted from exposure, internal injury, rheumatism, and other injuries clearly traceable to the war.

Why should a man be refused these arrears merely because he put off appealing to the bounty and generosity of the Government year after year in the hope that he might recover and not be compelled to appeal to it at all? The probability is that in such cases he would get but very little in the way of arrearages. In nine cases out of ten he would not be able to prove actual disability for many years, and therefore would not be entitled to arrearages. The disability would not be developed perhaps until after 1880 when he made the application. I doubt very much whether under the operation of the provision proposed by the Senator from Kansas the amount of our pension-list will be largely increased. But if cases have occurred they are entitled to relief as well as those promptly presented. I believe that, if that provision is added to this bill and assented to by the other House, we shall then have all the general laws on the subject of pensions that the public sentiment demands or that Congress will probably listen to, except for those exceptionally severe cases mentioned awhile ago of loss of limb or equal disability, when Congress may provide a larger or more liberal relief by special acts.

I shall therefore vote against the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey, because the provision to which he objects has already passed; it is in the pension laws now; it is in the Mexican pension bill, and the same limitation and restraint upon such pensions is in this bill. I shall vote for this bill, but I shall vote, if the Senator from Kansas sees proper to offer it, for an amendment that will remove the restriction in regard to arrears of pension for disability, and then I think we shall have at least shown our willingness to do justice and right to the soldiers of the Union Army as well as to the soldiers of the Mexican war.

Mr. PLATT. I do not know whether this debate is to continue after 2 o'clock. If it is, I should like to point out to the Senate the difference between the bill which the Senate passed for the relief of Union soldiers and the bill which has come to us from the House of Representatives.

I do not like this bill as it has come from the House of Representatives. I do not like it because it is, in my mind, an entirely inadequate and illogical measure for the relief of needy and destitute soldiers. I shall probably vote for it, because I will take anything in that line which comes to the Senate having received the favorable action of the House; but I want to comment on the difference between the bill which the Senate sent to the House and the bill which the House has actually passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be reported.

The SECRETARY. The bill (S. 372) to establish agricultural experiment-stations in connection with the colleges established in the several States under the provisions of an act approved July 2, 1862, and of the acts supplementary thereto.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent to lay aside the unfinished business for the present informally until this bill is disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the pension bill. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. PLATT. On the 19th of last May the Senate passed a bill "for the relief of soldiers of the late war honorably discharged after three months' service who are disabled and dependent upon their own labor for support, and of dependent parents of soldiers who died in the service or from disabilities contracted therein." That bill referred exclusively to soldiers on the Union side in the late rebellion. It was passed, I think I may say, by the Senate in a belief that it was not seemly or proper to pass a Mexican pension bill and not extend to the soldiers of the Union in the war of the rebellion such relief as their circumstances made it proper and desirable that they should receive.

By the provisions of that bill any soldier of the Union who is disabled now from any cause, whether it originated in his army service or not, from any cause not connected with his own vicious habits, should be entitled to a pension at the rate of $24 per month for total incapacity to perform manual labor. The rate of $24 was made to take the place of $30, to which he is now by law entitled under such circumstances, if he can trace his disability to his army service and prove that it originated there.

That rate of $24 per month was made divisible, so that for less than total inability to perform manual labor, if disabled within the terms of the bill, he should receive a less pension, but in no case to be less than $4 per month.

The object of that bill was to relieve the soldier applicant for a pension from what is now almost an impossibility to perform, namely: proving that his disease was contracted in the army; that his broken-down condition of health to-day, twenty-two years after the war, resulted from his army service. In most cases it is true that the soldier applying for a pension—disabled, weak, worn, and broken—finds in his army service the seeds of the disease which has resulted in his present condition. It is equally true that it is almost impossible for the soldier to prove such to be the fact. The bill which was passed by the Senate relieved him of that necessity, and provided that all that it would be necessary for him to do would be to establish that to-day he is disabled; that to-day he is in such a condition that he ought to receive the bounty of his Government; or, if the matter of pensions is a contract, the Government should keep its contract, and that was right.

That would reach a large class of soldiers in this country who deserve the recognition of the Government, who deserve pensions, and it would grade the pension which should be given them by the Government according to their disability. If they were totally disabled in the sense of being totally incapacitated for the performance of manual labor, they would, under the Senate bill, get $24, and for a less disability a less pension, down to the sum of $4, which would be the least that they would receive.

Mr. CULLOM. I agree with the Senator's remarks in reference to the Senate bill, and as I had something special to do with that myself, I desire to know whether the Senator construes the second section of this bill into a privilege by the Commissioner into a privilege to grade pensions at all.

Mr. PLATT. Let me come to that in order; I will not overlook that. I was trying to state to the Senate what the Senate has done and how the House has treated the Senate bill, and what it has done. I want understood the difference between the Senate and the House of Representatives in this matter. I pass over the provision in the case of dependent relatives, confining my remarks simply to those provisions that relate to the pensioning of the disabled soldiers of to-day.

The bill of which I have spoken was passed, as I said, on the 19th of May last. It went to the House. The House Committee on Pensions after a while reported an amendment, but in that amendment they did not go so far as to depart from the Senate idea of making the bill apply exclusively to soldiers on the Union side in the war of the rebellion alone. That amendment, however, reduced the sum to $12 per month, and had in it the same provisions which are now to be found in the bill which has passed the House as to the amount at which the pension should be graded. But for some reason, I know not what, the Senate bill has not been acted upon. It lies there in the House to-day with the amendment of the Committee on Pensions of the House reported. Instead of acting upon that bill we receive now from the House of Representatives an independent bill, introduced, I do not know when, in the House, but passed on the 17th day of January instant.

This bill departs entirely from the theory of the Senate bill in two particulars; one, in that it embraces within its provisions soldiers of all wars, including the Black Hawk, Seminole, and other Indian wars, also such soldiers of the Mexican war as it may reach and relieve in a different way from what they are reached or relieved by the Mexican pension bill; the other, in that it cuts down the pension which the Senate proposed to give of $24 to the man utterly incapacitated from manual labor, to $12, why I do not know. It leaves out entirely the clause of the Senate bill, that the pension so granted shall be divisible and graded according to the disability of the soldier; and I reply to the question of the Senator from Illinois that I do not believe that under it the Commissioner can, if he be disposed to do it, so construe this law as to grade that pension.

Mr. CULLOM. Neither do I.

Mr. PLATT. So that I believe that the House sends to us just this and nothing more, that the soldier, now disabled, who can not trace his disability to his army service, or if he traces it there can not prove to the satisfaction of the Pension Office that it originated there, may, upon proof of total inability to do anything, get the paltry sum of $12 per month, and that nobody else is to be relieved at all by this bill.

I think when the Senate has sent a bill to the House which did provide for a grading of the total sum allowed for pension, and the House sends back to us a bill upon the same subject from which that idea is carefully eliminated, there can be but one construction placed upon it, and I do not believe that any lawyer in the Senate or in the Pension Office will claim that there is any grading of pensions under this act, even of this small sum of $12 for total inability. But I want to go a little further.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Pennsylvania. Will the Senator explain how then under the existing pension laws the total rate of $8 is divisible?

Mr. PLATT. I could go into that, but the explanation of what is known as a total disability pension in the Pension Office would take considerable time. The language used there has a technical significance and application, and I do not think the fact that the eight-dollar pension is graded in the Pension Office applies to this. I want to call the attention of the Senate to the terms of this bill, and see how carefully—if I may be permitted to use the language, and I think I may here—how carefully the House of Representatives has contrived not to do anything for the relief of the soldier in this bill of any consequence. Section 2 at first speaks of the soldier applicants being disabled from the performance of labor in such a degree as to render them unable to earn a support. If that were all the language there were in the bill, it might possibly be held that the House intended at least to leave it open to have this pension graded. That language of itself might possibly form the foundation for an argument that the House really did intend to leave this pension open to being graded according to the degree of disability which the soldier should be under. But when they come to fixing the sum they use another phrase, that the soldier shall be entitled to receive for "such total inability to procure his subsistence by daily labor" $12 per month; not "disability" but "total inability." I apprehend that no soldier will be able at the Pension Office under this law, if it is correctly and properly administered and construed, to receive a dollar until he has proved that he is totally unable to earn a subsistence by daily labor, not that he is partially unable, but totally unable.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion to him?

Mr. PLATT. Certainly.

Mr. BLAIR. Let me remind the Senator of what I know he is himself aware of. The words "total disability" are technical words, which have been in the pension law from time immemorial, and have come to have a technical construction at the Pension Office. It is not a total incapacity to labor or a total incapacity to move, or a total physical inability to do anything; but a total disability, such as entitles a soldier under the general law to his $8 per month, has been measured by the practice and custom of the office for a great many years as a disability, which is equivalent to a stiff elbow, anchylosis of the elbow-joint, so that whatever soldier is disabled to that extent, in the opinion of the examining medical officer, is entitled to a pension for total disability. It is, of course, quite plain that if these words were not technical words, and were not limited by some such construction, scarcely any soldier would be entitled to his $8 per month under the general law. If a total disability means the same as a total inability to labor or to do anything to get a living, then hardly any of the soldiers would get their $8 a month.

So the House of Representatives, knowing that technical construction and definite meaning of the words "total disability," when they came to fix the rating and give the pension under this act, exclude those words carefully and adopt another phrase which never has been construed and which must be considered in accordance with the ordinary rules. Total inability to labor is said to be where a person can not move to the extent of doing physical work; and that person, and that person alone, in the view and the declarations of the friends of this bill, is the only one who can take pension under it. They state that it only reaches those who are in the poor-houses or who may be carried to the poor-houses on application. It is simply designed to empty the alms-houses. It is a good bill to that extent, and it does not purpose to reach anybody else.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator from New Hampshire has said, and said better than I could, perhaps, what I was going to utter. The words "total disability" have been construed in the Pension Office as allowing the grading of a pension, though I think the grading is in that case allowed by provision of the statute. If that phrase had been inserted in this bill, I agree that there would have been a grading of the pension provided for in it; but when they are excluded, when these apt words and the words that would naturally be used in a pension bill are industriously excluded by the House of Representatives, I think it is quite fair to conclude, and beyond discussion almost, that there is to be no grading of this $12 pension under the bill, and that language has been used here with the purpose of preventing any grading of this $12 pension.

As I said, I am going to vote for this bill. I am going to take the least driblet of relief which is filtered across from the other end of the Capitol to this end for the needy and disabled Union soldier of the war of the rebellion; but I wanted to state why I did not like the bill and why I should much prefer to go further in the direction of relief.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, if I believed the bill was capable of the construction that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] thinks it is, I certainly should not vote for it. I should not vote for it because it would be an imposition upon the soldiers of the country to profess to give them some relief when, in fact, we give them none at all, or practically none at all. I myself do not believe, however, that a fair construction of this bill will support the Senator from Connecticut in his view. I do not understand the bill, I am free to say; and I do not understand why the House of Representatives should, ex industria, have left out words which have become so well settled and determined in the pension practice as the term "total disability." As stated by the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Connecticut, "total disability" does not mean in the Pension Office that the soldier is incapable of any manual labor. It means a degree of disability that is either established by a provision of the statute direct or established by the practice in the office. A total disability entitles the soldier to the highest pension; and by the very first section in the chapter on pensions in the Revised Statutes a less disability than total entitles him to a proportionate sum corresponding to the disability.

Mr. PLATT. That is in reference to the $8 pension.

Mr. TELLER. Yes, sir; I call attention to section 4692 of the Revised Statutes:

SEC. 4692. Every person specified in the several classes enumerated in the following section, who has been, since the fourth day of March, 1861, or who is hereafter disabled under the conditions therein stated, shall, upon making due proof of the fact, according to such forms and regulations as are or may be provided in pursuance of law, be placed on the list of invalid pensioners of the United States, and be entitled to receive, for a total disability, or a permanent specific disability, such pension as is hereinafter provided in such cases; and for an inferior disability, except in cases of permanent specific disability, for which the rate of pension is expressly provided, an amount proportionate to that provided for total disability; and such pension shall commence as hereinafter provided, and continue during the existence of the disability.

Mr. PLATT. Then, will the Senator allow me to suggest here that the grading of the total disability pensions of $8 comes in pursuance of specific enactment to that effect, and not by reason of any construction of the statute in the Pension Office.

Mr. TELLER. I fully agree with the Senator from Connecticut that the soldier will either get $12 under this bill or nothing. There will be no grading. I admit that there is no grading; but I do not believe that will be applied by a fair construction to the soldier who is incapable of any manual labor and to him alone. I understand it will be applied, if it is fairly interpreted, to any soldier who has what, under the general law, would be a total disability, for I find in section 2, lines 6, 7, and 8, words which I will read. I will read that part of the section which includes these lines to show the connection:

That all persons who served three months or more in the military or naval service of the United States in any war in which the United States has been engaged, and who have been honorably discharged therefrom, and who are now or who may hereafter be suffering from mental or physical disability, not the result of their own vicious habits or gross carelessness, which incapacitates them for the performance of labor in such a degree as to render them unable to earn a support * * *

The words "in such a degree" must certainly mean something; and so I take it that this bill, if fairly construed, is a bill to render to every soldier who is totally disabled, who has a total disability under the law—for that is what it will amount to—a $12 pension.

Mr. PLATT. Now will it trouble the Senator to allow me to ask a question?

Mr. TELLER. Not a bit.

Mr. PLATT. Then the effect of it is, if it be so construed, that the soldier who cannot trace his disability to his Army service will get $12 a month for total disability, and the soldier who can trace his disability to his Army service will get $8.

Mr. TELLER. That is exactly where the logic of this bill brings it, and that is exactly where I was coming.

I am willing to vote for the bill because I am ready myself to increase the pension of every soldier in the United States who has a total disability to $12 a month, and if I was not I would not vote for the bill, for it is putting, in my judgment, the soldier who can not trace his disability on a plane a little higher than the other. In other words, where he gets $8 a month the soldier under this will get $12. I do not know but that the soldier who can prove his disability as the result of his service may possibly take advantage of this bill. It is certainly evident that the bill has been crudely drawn and illy considered.

The provision in the nineteenth line of section 2 would probably allow the soldier to elect; but I do not believe it will ever be possible for the Pension Office to divide this pension into eight and four dollars for half inability. It must be either twelve dollars or not anything at all in my judgment.

If I thought that it would be confined as suggested by the Senator from Connecticut to people who are totally disabled from manual labor, unable to do anything, then I would not vote for the bill, not because that class of soldiers should not be taken care of, but because there is a very limited number of that class of soldiers, and that is not what the public sentiment has demanded. The public sentiment of this country demands that a soldier who has served his country well—and I do not care whether he served it in the Mexican war or Indian war or in the last war—shall not be an object of charity. The people of the United States with one sentiment on that subject believe that the presence of a soldier in a pauper home save and except the homes established especially for that class of men, is a disgrace to the American people.

I do not care myself even if the man who fought for his flag in the Mexican war may have forgotten his allegiance to that flag; I am prepared myself to forget his misconduct, and when he is in distress, rather than to see him in a pauper's home, I would repeal that section which has heretofore prevented him from receiving a pension. I believe that when we can sit in this body with men who led great armies, and who conducted the civil administration of that great rebellion, and when every place of public profit and honor is open to them, it is too late to say that the man who had bravely followed his flag in the Mexican war and who followed these gentlemen in the late rebellion shall, because of his later conduct, be precluded from having the bounty that the Government proposes to give to the soldier who served in the Mexican or any other war.

Therefore, as I said in the beginning, independent of the suggestion that we had already by the Mexican pension act provided that every man who served in that war who is sixty-two years of age should receive a pension, irrespective of what had been his conduct during the late rebellion, I am quite willing to be oblivious to the fact that the needy and dependent soldier has ever at any time forgot his allegiance to his flag if he is in distress; and that is the class of soldiers that this bill professes at least to serve.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I venture to disagree with the Senator from Colorado in his construction of this bill with some timidity, for I know that as Secretary of the Interior he has had the whole pension matter before him over and over again for construction and administration. But I still must think that when the words "total disability" have been carefully excluded, and other words, "total inability to procure their subsistence by daily labor," have been as carefully inserted, they will not be construed as meaning the same thing. I am certain—if I may be permitted to say it—that this bill, coming from the place where it originated, has not come to us with any such understanding of the people who meet and discuss public affairs in that place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL] to strike out section 4 and insert other language.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Mr. President, I fail to see in this bill that there is any apology needed for its provisions or that there is just cause for criticism upon its terms. It is plain upon its face. The proposition in this bill is not a new feature, because on the 19th day of May last, when the Senator from Connecticut says a bill was passed by the Senate, the effort was then made in this body to incorporate the very provision which forms the House bill. I remember that I desired then, by an amendment which I offered, to have a uniform rate of pension for all these cases, but the Senate, in its judgment, after discussion and voting, thought differently.

Arguing this very proposition which is now in this bill, I took occasion, on that same 19th day of May, to state:

> We start with the theory of benefiting those who actually need it on account of their necessity, because they are unable to procure their daily bread by daily labor. Any disability less than that should not place a person on the pension-roll. Any disability greater than that, because it could be no greater, should entitle him to no greater pension. It must be incapacity, no matter what the cause, to procure his daily bread by his daily labor; and when you find a case of that kind it is total incapacity. Anything less than that, in my judgment, should never be placed on the pension-roll.
> That is the point from which we start on this matter. The main question is, shall it be a uniform pension? So I always supposed; I supposed every service pension should be a uniform pension. I supposed it was to be $10. If the disability is not entitled to that, it is entitled to nothing. No matter whether it proceeds from prostration, or asthma, or consumption, or whether it be both legs off or both arms off, it is incapacity to work. Hence it was that in this class of pensions I suggested that the rate of disability should be to incapacitate for obtaining a livelihood by labor, and by that was meant a complete livelihood. If a man was able to go around and do chores for a few days in the week he was incapacitated to earn his complete livelihood, and therefore was completely incapacitated. I thought that proposition would extend the bounty of this bill to a class of men that the people of the nation were desiring should be benefited, and would reach the greater number of cases. Therefore it was that I desired first to settle the class of cases and then the amount of pension to be allowed; and I thought I had made myself clear on that matter.

That was the proposition enunciated here by myself on the same 19th day of May to which the Senator has alluded. The Senate, in its judgment, thought differently. The House placed this bill upon precisely that basis, and therefore I more readily accede to the House bill, because it is placed upon the basis which I suppose is just in this matter.

An allusion to the Mexican pension law has been made, and the statement has been made——

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator before he proceeds further allow me to ask him a question, so that I may be sure whether I understand exactly what he means?

By the proposition he submitted to the Senate at the time of the debate last spring, $12 was fixed as the only pension that was to be paid, to be a uniform pension. I do not quite understand whether he would give that where there was any incapacity of the soldier to earn a living by his daily labor, or whether he would only give it where that incapacity is total. Would he reach only the very few who cannot labor at all, or did he desire to reach all who were disabled to any degree from earning their living by their daily labor?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Just as I read from my remarks of May 19, 1886, that if a person was unable to earn a complete livelihood it was total disability; it was complete no matter whether, as I said, it was from asthma or from consumption, or one leg off or both legs off. No matter whether he could earn a little day by day or one or two days in a week, if he was disabled, no matter what the cause, from obtaining a complete livelihood, then it was total inability.

Mr. BLAIR. Then it would be a total inability?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Then it would be total inability; no other construction can be put upon it.

Mr. BLAIR. Then the Senator's idea is that wherever there is a partial inability to earn a livelihood, this $12 a month pension would apply under the terms of the bill. Suppose, for instance—to be sure that I understand the Senator, and he desires to be understood—a man is able to earn $1 a week toward his livelihood, would the Senator then give him the pension of $12 a month?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Certainly.

Mr. BLAIR. Suppose he may earn $2 a week, would he give him the $12 a month still?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Yes, sir; I would.

Mr. BLAIR. Suppose that it costs $7 a week to maintain him, to give him a livelihood, and he can earn $6 a week, would the Senator then give him a pension of $12 a month?

Mr. VAN WYCK. That probably is coming a little close.

Mr. BLAIR. But this is a mathematical process; I wish to know whether the Senator adheres to his own proposition?

Mr. VAN WYCK. I will explain that.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator says if the man can earn $1 a week, he would give him a pension of $12; if he can earn $2 a week he would give him $12 and no more. Now, if he can earn $6 a week, and $7 a week are necessary to maintain him, would he still give him the pension of $12 a month?

Mr. VAN WYCK. If a man can earn $6 a week, and it requires $7 to support him, the chances are that he has sufficient ability to earn the $7.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator is changing the terms of the supposition and not answering the question.

Mr. VAN WYCK. If the Senator is through with his question, I will answer him. I thought the matter was plain; I tried to make it so then, and I will try now. If the man is so disabled as not to be able to earn his livelihood, without any mathematical comparison, which everybody would know would be in aid of the Pension Office, if he were practically disabled from earning a complete livelihood, then he is under the terms of this bill entitled to $12 a month.

I think the idea of arguing here or seeking to establish with proof afterwards that a man is sufficiently able to earn $6 a week when it costs him $7 to maintain himself is idle, because if his physical ability is sufficient to earn $6 he can earn the seven. If a man is broken down by disease, has consumption, or if a leg is off and he may hobble around and do a few chores and get a few dollars here and there, it is not to be charged against his incapacity, because his incapacity is complete to do what? To earn a complete livelihood. The soldier who can not earn by daily labor a complete livelihood is included under the terms of the bill and is placed on the pension-roll at $12 a month.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. We have by present law two rates of pensions. One is $30, where the soldier is totally incapacitated from obtaining a livelihood. Then we have an $8 pension for what is called total disability. Now, which of those two disabilities does the Senator think this bill relates to or to mean?

Mr. VAN WYCK. It relates to total disability, of course, as far as it is in connection with the proposition which the Senator makes. Have I answered the Senator's question?

Mr. PLATT. Certainly.

Mr. VAN WYCK. This pension is not graduated upon injury in the service, where the sufferer has a claim given by law in proportion to the amount of injury and damage which he has sustained, as in the case of one leg off or two legs off, one arm off or two arms off. The present law makes the distinction because it seeks to reimburse the man for the injury sustained in the service, but this pension is on an entirely different basis. We propose to pension him not because he has suffered this injury. We propose it as charity, not as a matter of right as under the other pension legislation. Therefore, when we bestow it as charity we must bestow it to those who are dependent. The man who has suffered injury in the service may have an arm or a leg off, and he may be a millionaire but he is still entitled to a pension, because it is his right; but this pension is graduated as a matter of charity, first upon the ground of dependence and then upon the ground of disability.

That is the distinction between the two classes of pensions which our friends for some reason are unwilling to acknowledge and recognize. We propose to pension those who are disabled, no matter what is the cause of the disability, if they are dependent. That is in no other pension legislation.

Now, as to the Mexican pension bill, that gives $8 per month to every soldier of the Mexican war, no matter whether he is dependent or was disabled in that war. The Mexican pension bill, which has passed both Houses, gives a pension, no matter whether the man be a millionaire or dependent upon others for support. I am right in that, am I not? I ask the Senator from New Hampshire. The Mexican pension bill, which has been passed by both Houses, gives a pension to every man alike, whether he be rich or poor?

Mr. BLAIR. Yes; if sixty-two years old, and if he has not incurred his disability in the rebel service.

Mr. VAN WYCK. This includes the Mexican pension legislation, and it requires him first to be disabled. That is not in your Mexican pension bill. It requires him to be dependent, and that is not in your Mexican pension bill. So I do not see the point that this is another Mexican pension bill, when that is entirely different and provides for other and different classes of pensions.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator is evidently getting up a controversy with imaginary beings. Nobody has made claim to such constructions or propositions, as he is evidently shooting in this direction.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Some gentlemen who have been criticising this bill have very much to say about the Mexican pension bill.

Mr. BLAIR. An objection was made to this bill that it opens the way to soldiers receiving a pension under its terms who had been in the rebel service, and who had also been in the service of the nation in former years; but the Mexican pension bill applies in that respect only to those who, although they had been in the rebel service, had not contracted their disability or any disability in that service. It was objected to this bill that it gave a pension to those who might have been in the rebel service provided they had not been injured in that service. To that objection the reply was made by myself that in the Mexican pension bill we had already adopted that principle. It did not seem to me that it was any great extension of national magnanimity to do so, and I approve of it. I approve of the Mexican pension bill; I approve of this relaxation of our former rule. I think we ought to have done it, and as it is now the law, it is no objection to this bill to say, when it provides the same thing, that it is a new principle, for it is an old principle already adopted.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Then this bill is no more objectionable than the Mexican pension bill?

Mr. BLAIR. This bill is all right as far as it goes. The principle adopted in this bill is the one for which I have been contending for at least three Congresses, in this Chamber, that where there is inability to earn a livelihood there should be assistance to the extent of the necessity. That is the principle the Senate has acted upon for at least two Congresses, and it is one for which I made strong battle against both sides of the Chamber three Congresses ago, as those will know who remember anything about it. It has come to be adopted as a principle by both Houses of Congress, and by the Senate two Congresses ago. In the Forty-eighth and Forty-ninth Congresses the Senate sanctioned the principle to the extent of giving aid wherever there was necessity, and according to the degree of the necessity, the rate of pension extending to $24 per month where there was total inability on the part of the soldier to maintain himself.

We sent that bill to the other House. It covers the whole ground, so far as this class of pensioners or necessitous persons is concerned, at all events. The House returns that with this provision, which cuts down its application to some ten or fifteen thousand men in the country. We have got to take this because it is all we can get. If we send this bill back amended we shall get no legislation at all. The committee therefore report the bill back unamended, thus shorn of its real scope, narrowed down to this comparatively small number of those who are already in the poor-houses or who upon application could get there as being utterly unable to work, and who are without means of sustenance. This bill, I say, we report back thus shorn of its real scope and ask for its adoption by the Senate, without amendment, in order that we can get something as an indorsement of the principle which in future Congresses will come to be extended to all classes to whom it should be extended.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Right here I desire to protest against the illiberal construction placed upon the language of this bill by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BLAIR. I will say to the Senator from Nebraska that if it can receive a more liberal construction, all the better. If it covers the whole ground I shall thank God, for it will avoid the necessity of further legislation. I state what I think the bill means. If it means more I shall be all the better satisfied. I want what we can get.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I desire to protest, because the Senator cautions us in advance and gives excuse for the pension department to place such a construction upon the phraseology of the law. I want them to understand that it was accepted by the Senate in its broader and more generous aspect. Therefore, it was that I desired to make these few remarks. I know the nature of the pension department to curb and curtail and deny the privileges of a generous law to those who need it most, and I am anxious that it shall go forth from this body in advance that we sanction a liberal construction, and that we do not sanction an illiberal construction which will take away its benefits from the great body of persons seeking aid under its provisions.

I know the struggle we had to raise the pension from one dollar to twenty-four, and with the utmost effort we succeeded in putting the minimum at four dollars in the Senate bill, so that it reached from four dollars to twenty-four. But in addition to that, the other House have presented a far better bill than that adopted by the Senate. They have presented a bill which will be far more reaching in its application; a bill which will not allow any Department to higgle over the fractions of a dollar which are to be given to a soldier who is unable to earn his daily bread by daily labor. There is no trouble about this matter. In the first place, the bill says:

Which incapacitates them for the performance of labor in such a degree as to render them unable to earn a support.

What language could better convey the idea than that? How could you make it any better or stronger, or more calculated to reach those whom this law in its beneficence seeks to reach?

To render them unable to earn a support.

There is an end to the long discussion on that subject when a soldier is in that attitude, as thousands of them are. My friend knows that, according to the best statements, probably thirty thousand to-day are spending the remnant of their years in alms-houses or poor-houses throughout this great and glorious Republic, while you stand here higgling as to whether you had better allow them to be provided for. There are thousands of others who are grinding organs on the street corners of the great and wealthy cities of this grand and powerful Republic. We ought to remove the shame and disgrace and outrage on those provided for by this bill who are subject to all these calamities, which spring, first, from their service, and their disability afterwards, and which their dependence and poverty impose upon them.

The language which follows is plain:

And who are dependent upon their daily labor for support—

It is true it is mentioned afterwards, to which exception is taken—shall, upon making due proof of the fact according to such rules and regulations—

What "fact?" The fact which has just been stated—upon making due proof of the fact according to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may provide in pursuance to this act, be placed on the list of invalid pensioners of the United States, and be entitled to receive, for such total inability—

Not for "total disability," as the Senator from Connecticut would argue. "Total disability" has received its construction and interpretation and adjudication in the Pension Department already. No; that is not it. Not for total disability as has been graduated and weighed and measured and determined, but "for such total inability"—that which precedes, which has been characterized and mentioned as plainly as human language can mention it. That is the kind and character of the disability—for such total inability to procure their subsistence by daily labor, $12 per month.

Probably this Congress has passed no bill that will make so many hearts glad and so many homes happy as this little bill. I thank the House of Representatives that they have been able to send us such a bill, and that they, among all their disagreements, could finally agree upon one which I believe is far better than the bill the Senate passed. They have sent it here to meet our approbation, and I prefer to return thanks to them instead of indulging in censure and criticism. You take the thirty thousand out of the poor-house; you take the thousands of others grinding out music on street corners, and I tell my friend from New Hampshire we shall take tens of thousands of others who can not possibly get their claims adjudged at the Pension Office because of their inability to comply with the strict rule which that department thinks the law requires.

I trust that this bill will pass just as it came from the other House, with no amendment, because the least amendment would impair its passage there. There are men in the other House to-day, if I may be allowed to say it, who are hoping that the Senate will put on some amendment to give them an excuse, if not a justification, to seek the defeat of this bill. I appeal to every Senator upon this side of the Chamber, I appeal to every man who desires to promote the benefit of the soldier who cannot earn his daily bread by his daily labor, running up to thousands and tens of thousands, that we shall not, at least, do injustice to ourselves by placing the least obstruction, the least straw, in the way of the accomplishment of an object so great.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] thinks we ought to do more. Certainly, but do not let us prevent doing this because we desire to do more. Other bills have been introduced. No pension bill was ever passed that met the whole list of pensions from beginning to end. Hence it is but a small argument against a bill with so much of beneficence and mercy as this has in it, to say that there are so many things that ought to be placed in this pension bill. That will not answer those thirty thousand soldiers lying in our poor-houses and alms-houses to-day; it will not answer the thousands of others who are struggling at the Pension Department to secure recognition of their claims. This we can do, pure and simple, and then we can attend to the other measures, as they come in their course.

Therefore, I have a right to appeal to our brethren on this side of the Chamber, who, I know, desire to carry out the doctrine of pensions and their application to their fullest extent, that they will not seek by word or action to put anything in the way of the passage of this bill as it came from the other House, so that we may be sure of its passage, and there will be no excuse given there to delay or frustrate what we desire to accomplish.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I am very anxious to avoid any of the difficulties in the way of this bill suggested by the Senator from Nebraska. At the same time, I am very anxious to understand from the members of the Committee on Pensions one point in the bill. I understand that the Senator from Nebraska is a member of that committee, and I ask him what construction he places on the words in the third line of the second section, "in any war." That is to say, do those words include wars in which the United States has been engaged with Indian tribes?

Mr. VAN WYCK. I presume those words mean just what they say, "any war in which the United States has been engaged;" and I presume that one soldier is as much entitled to the recognition of this bounty as another, no matter where the flag was in danger, when the soldier fought in its defense.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. The Senator understands, then, that the proper construction of the bill is that it includes persons who fought in Indian wars.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. That is what I wanted to know.

Mr. SEWELL. I have become thoroughly satisfied, since the commencement of the discussion of this bill, that any amendment which might be adopted would endanger its final passage and endanger its becoming a law at this Congress. There is very much good in it, and while there may be more than one point that I should object to, I do not wish to risk the loss of the bill itself. I therefore withdraw my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from New Jersey is withdrawn.

Mr. DAWES. I offer the amendment of which I gave notice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of section 2 it is proposed to add the following additional proviso:

And provided further, That any person suffering under the disability caused by an exsection of any portion of the bone of the arm from the joint at the shoulder, or the leg from the joint at the hip, shall be entitled to the same pension as he would be entitled to for the loss of the entire arm or leg.

Mr. TELLER. I am not disposed to vote for the amendment, for the simple reason that I am under the impression that the amendment would jeopardize the passage of the bill. I had intended to move several slight amendments, so as to make the bill more certain and specific, and, if possible, to prevent its misconstruction when it comes to be construed; but after hearing the statement of members of the committee that at this late hour of the session, so near the close of the Congress, with the great rush of business before the other House, it might not be taken up there if amended here, I shall withhold any amendment. For the reason that I withhold my amendments I must vote against the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts; not that I am opposed to the amendment, for I think it ought to have gone in the bill originally or in some other bill, but I believe, with the Senator from Nebraska, that a little thing is better than nothing. Believing, as I do, that this bill can be and will be so construed in the Pension Department as to relieve a great number of worthy and deserving cases, I propose to vote for the bill without amendment, exactly as it is, and secure its passage in that form if I can.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES].

Mr. SEWELL. I beg leave to call the attention of the Senate to an act passed last year, reported from the Committee on Pensions. I will read it:

An act to amend the pension laws by increasing the pensions of soldiers and sailors who have lost an arm or leg in the service.

Be it enacted, &c., That from and after the passage of this act all persons on the pension-rolls, and all persons hereafter granted a pension, who, while in the military or naval service of the United States and in line of duty, shall have lost one hand or one foot, or been totally disabled in the same, shall receive a pension of $30 a month; that all persons now on the pension-rolls, and all persons hereafter granted a pension, who in like manner shall have lost either an arm at or above the elbow, or a leg at or above the knee, or been totally disabled in the same, shall receive a pension of $36 per month; and that all persons now on the pension-rolls, and all persons hereafter granted a pension who in like manner shall have lost either an arm at the shoulder-joint or a leg at the hip-joint, or so near the joint as to prevent the use of an artificial limb, shall receive a pension at the rate of $45 per month: Provided, That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to repeal section 4699 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, or to change the rate of $18 per month therein mentioned to be proportionately divided for any degree of disability established for which section 4695 makes no provision.

Approved, August 4, 1886.

I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts that the exsection of the arm is a total disability of the arm, and must be covered by this language.

Mr. TELLER. I understood the Senator from Massachusetts to say that the Pension Office held differently.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Pennsylvania. I trust the Senator from Massachusetts will not insist upon having this amendment inserted in the bill, for the reason which has been repeatedly stated here. The case which is presented by the Senator from Massachusetts raises the question of equivalent disability. I think his statement is correct, that the Commissioner of Pensions has ruled that the act of last year does not cover such disabilities. I appreciate the hardship which arises in many cases. My own judgment is that the law ought to have been made to cover such disabilities, but it does not. I think the construction of it is proper. It is a separate question. There are a number of bills pending before the Committee on Pensions which cover that subject. I can not say that the committee will act on the subject, but I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts that I shall endeavor to get the committee to consider the question and report a bill which will cover the case to which he has called attention.

Mr. DAWES. I have not heard all the debate; I have not been able to hear it all. The last thing I desire to do is to imperil the passage of this bill, and I did not offer the amendment with any such idea as that. I am not one of those who are disposed to put my own opinion against that of my peers on this floor. I can not myself see any occasion for the idea that the amendment would jeopardize the bill, but I shall certainly yield to the opinion of those who are more conversant with the chances of getting such a bill through the other branch. The House I have no doubt would pass upon any proper amendment.

I believed last year that the phraseology of the act read by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL] covered the cases which I have laid before the Senate, and I think now that the Pension Office is mistaken. I thought, however, that the matter ought to be made certain, and I think so still; but yielding to the judgment of the chairman of the committee and others, although I have not had the pleasure of hearing the reasons for believing that a fair amendment to a pension bill could possibly encounter obstacles in the people's branch of the National Legislature, still as I may have misjudged the conduct of another branch of Congress than this, I reluctantly yield and withdraw my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. BLAIR. I am very glad that the Senators who have propositions of so great merit, which have so long been under discussion before the country and which have received its approval so generally, are willing for the sake of the safety of this measure to forego what otherwise it would be, I think, their duty to do, to press those amendments to this bill. But it was the unanimous conclusion of the committee that to amend this bill would be to endanger its passage. While it does not reach all the classes who deserve recognition by further and favorable legislation, nevertheless it indorses certain principles which in the end must result in carrying substantial relief to nearly all who are now suffering by reason of their having been engaged in our military service.

There is one class of the most meritorious of all these claimants in behalf of whom I desired very much to offer an amendment. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] has long represented those who should have their arrears provided for by additional legislation. It has been suggested by the Senator from Ohio that that be moved as an amendment here. It has not been done, and I rejoice that it has not been done, although there are no more just claims whatever possible or conceivable against the Government than those which arise under the proposed arrears act.

Another class that we have long been endeavoring to provide for are the widows of soldiers who are now dependent and without assistance, providing for their own families themselves or perhaps passed beyond the period to provide for their families. It is quite a large class. Before the passage of the bill which has been referred to, which was unnoticed by the House of Representatives, I moved an amendment providing for such widows, but finding that it was likely to endanger the passage of the bill in the other House I withheld the amendment at that time. Having been written to by a great many to press that amendment to this bill, I desire to say that I withhold it on this occasion for the same reason. I shall read the proposed amendment, which has been in former bills before, and take this method of informing the numerous claimants of the reason why on this occasion they have not been heard. The proposed section provides:

That the widow of any person who served in the military or naval service and was honorably discharged therefrom, as mentioned in the first section, who shall not have remarried, and who shall be dependent upon her own manual labor or the contributions of others not legally bound thereto for support, shall, upon making due proof of the facts, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the proper authorities, be placed upon the list of pensioners of the United States at the rate of $12 a month, during the continuance of such widowhood and dependence.

There is much more pension legislation that I doubt not will receive the sanction of Congress hereafter It will have to be dispensed with for the present, but the country ought not to settle down in the conviction that the passage of this bill is the end of it. The end of it will not come until justice has come.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HOAR subsequently said: I move to reconsider the vote by which the pension bill was lately passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves to reconsider the vote by which the pension bill was passed.

The motion will be entered.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the House of Representatives be requested to return the pension bill, as I understand it has gone there.

The motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT CHATTANOOGA, TENN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MANDERSON in the chair) laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 7218) to amend an act entitled "An act for the erection of a public building at Chattanooga, Tenn.," approved February 25, 1885, returned from the House of Representatives in compliance with a request of the Senate.

Mr. HARRIS. I asked the Senate to request the House to return that bill because I desired to move that the Senate insist upon its amendment and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee moves that the Senate insist upon its amendment to this bill and ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferrees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. MAHONE, Mr. MORRILL, and Mr. HARRIS were appointed.

FISHING RIGHTS OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask unanimous consent to submit to the Senate a letter from the Secretary of State addressed to me as a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and sending a revised list of all the seizures and warnings-off, &c., of American vessels in the British Dominions. When the committee reported we had the most perfect list that we could obtain; but in order to get the latest report from the State Department I was authorized to address a letter to the Secretary of State to obtain the latest and revised list of these seizures, &c., which I have just now received. I ask unanimous consent to present this letter of the Secretary with the accompanying list, and move that it be printed and bound in connection with the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations under the proper date so as to show that this is the latest list.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unless there be objection the document will be received, and ordered printed, as stated by the Senator from Vermont. The Chair hears no objection; it is so ordered.

Mr. FRYE. Will the present Presiding Officer of the Senate, as chairman of the Committee on Printing, to which committee was referred the resolution providing for the printing of 6,000 copies of the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations touching the fisheries and the testimony, please remember the order just given, that this list shall not only be printed and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, but also that it shall be printed together with the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The occupant of the chair will see to that. It will be bound with that document.

THE MACKEREL FISHERY.

Mr. PALMER. I ask unanimous consent to make a motion at this time to the following effect, that House bill 5538 be made the special order after the three bills which are now special orders shall have been disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Michigan fix a definite time, that being required under the rule?

Mr. FRYE. Put it Monday.

Mr. PALMER. I will put it Monday, then.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. At what hour?

Mr. PALMER. At 2 o'clock.

Mr. SEWELL. What is that bill?

Mr. PALMER. The bill relating to the importing and landing of mackerel caught during the spawning season. I think the bill will not lead to much discussion; but it is essential, if it is going to be acted upon, that it should be acted upon soon, to protect the interests of fishermen on our Northwestern coast. It passed the House last session. Action here has been delayed from the fact that I was unavoidably absent the first part of the session, and afterward those who wished to be heard upon it have been absent up to the present time. I intended to get it in in the morning hour, but I see that in the closing days of the session that is going to be a very difficult thing to accomplish. So I ask that the bill be made a special order for Monday next.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan asks unanimous consent of the Senate that the bill (H. R. 5538) relating to the importing and landing of mackerel caught during the spawning season be made a special order for Monday next at 2 o'clock. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. It is so ordered.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred an amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. WILLIAMS to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported it favorably, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, submitted a report to accompany the bill (S. 3226) to determine the liability of the United States under the law for damages to the property of citizens of the United States sustained in the depredations of Indians, reported from that committee this morning.

Mr. ALLISON. The Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10072) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, have directed me to report it back with sundry amendments, and also to accompany it with a report which I desire to have printed. I give notice now that on Monday or Tuesday next, as may suit the convenience of the Senate best, I will call this bill up for consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 10419) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HARRIS. I introduce a bill at this time that I want to have printed so that it may get before the committee in the morning.

The bill (S. 3229) for the relief of Robert W. Waters was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BUTLER introduced a bill (S. 3230) authorizing the Secretary of War to transfer to the trustees of the Porter Academy certain property in the city of Charleston, S. C.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PLUMB introduced a bill (S. 3231) to grant the right of way through the Indian Territory to the Chicago, Kansas and Nebraska Railway, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. CALL introduced a bill (S. 3232) to change the limit of appropriation for the public buildings at Key West, Fla.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3233) to change the limit of appropriation for the public building at Jacksonville, Fla.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

AGRICULTURAL EXPERIMENT-STATIONS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays——

Mr. TELLER. I ask the consent of the Senate that the unfinished business may be laid aside informally while I call up a bill that will only take a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the duty of the Chair to lay the unfinished business before the Senate, and he will then recognize the Senator from Colorado.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 372) to establish agricultural experiment-stations in connection with the colleges established in the several States under the provisions of an act approved July 2, 1862, and of the acts supplementary thereto.

Mr. TELLER. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2877) to promote the efficiency of the General Land Office.

Mr. HOAR. Let it be read for information.

Mr. TELLER. It will occasion no debate, I think.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read for information, if there be no objection.

The bill was read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. INGALLS. What becomes, meanwhile, of the agricultural experiment-station bill?

Mr. TELLER. I ask that it be laid aside informally.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is asked that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. INGALLS. I think we had better dispose of one thing at a time, and I therefore will take the liberty of objecting to unanimous consent being given, in order that we may proceed to a termination of the agricultural experiment-station bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the pending business will be proceeded with. The Chair understands that the question is upon the adoption of the substitute proposed by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], upon which question the Chair understands that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] has the floor.

Mr. PLATT. May I inquire whether that substitute was printed? There was an order made for printing it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has been printed and laid on the desks of Senators.

Mr. PLATT. I have failed to observe it.

Mr. MORGAN. I had not offered my amendment. I intended to offer it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was informed that the Senator from Alabama had the floor upon the pending question.

Mr. MORGAN. I had, some days ago. I do not take the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question, then, is upon the adoption of the substitute offered by the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask consent to make one or two verbal amendments in the body of the bill in order to perfect the text.

The PRESIDING OFFICER Is there objection to the consideration of the amendments?

Mr. GEORGE. I offer these amendments in order to correct the phraseology of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER The Senator will suggest them.

Mr. GEORGE. In section 5, line 2, I move that the word "they" be stricken out and the words "said stations" inserted in its stead; so as to read:

That said stations shall publish at least once in every three months bulletins, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. In section 6, line 13, I move to strike out the word "aforesaid" before "boards," and to insert after the word "trustees" the words "of said colleges;" so as to read:

To be paid in equal quarterly payments, on the first day of January, April, July, and October in each year, to the treasurer or other officer duly appointed by the boards of trustees of said colleges.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be agreed to if there be no objection.

Mr. INGALLS. That provision ought to be further amended so as to cover the technical point which would arise in colleges where there is no board of trustees. The government of the State agricultural college may be vested in what is called a board of regents. Therefore there should be some general term employed that would cover both trustees and regents.

Mr. GEORGE. Would "managers" do?

Mr. INGALLS. Say "the government of said colleges."

Mr. GEORGE. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi adopt the suggestion of the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes, sir. Strike out the words "boards of trustees" and insert "government;" so as to read:

Or other officer duly appointed by the government of said college to receive the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. Two amendments were yesterday added to section 9 by way of a proviso. They are improper as provisos; they are independent provisions. I ask that all from line 7, section 9, be made an entire and independent section, and that the words "And provided further" be stricken out and the words "Section 10" inserted. That amendment is necessary in order to make the bill read properly.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. In the same section, in lines 12 and 13, the words "Provided further, That" ought to be stricken out. I move that they be stricken out.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to hear that amendment stated.

Mr. GEORGE. It simply puts the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] and the one offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] into independent sections.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator from Mississippi yield to me for a moment, that I may call attention to an amendment which has already been made?

Mr. GEORGE. I shall be through with these verbal changes in a minute. I ask consent also to add a proviso to section 10, now section 11. The section reads as it now stands:

That the grants of moneys authorized by this act are made subject to the legislative assent of the several States and Territories to the purposes of said grants.

I wish to add the following proviso:

Provided, That payment of such installments of the appropriation herein made as shall become due to any State before the adjournment of the regular session of its Legislature meeting next after the passage of this act shall be made upon the assent of the governor thereof, duly certified to the Secretary of the Treasury.

The object of the proviso is simply to provide that in those States where the Legislature shall not meet for one or two years there shall be no lapse in the appropriation if the governor of the State will consent to accept it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], who I see is not in his seat, suggested this morning an amendment which I think is proper. All of section 9 down to and including the word "fifty," in line 7, was inserted at the last session on the motion of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON]. When that language was inserted at the end of the bill there was no provision in the body of the bill in favor of the Territories. Since that time the words "and Territories" have been added in the body of the bill, which renders the insertion made on the motion of the Senator from Indiana unnecessary. At the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], I ask leave to move to strike out all of section 9 from the beginning down to the word "fifty," in line 7.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The words proposed to be stricken out will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That the provisions and benefits of this act shall apply to the agricultural colleges which have been or may hereafter be established in any of the Territories of the United States under the laws thereof: Provided, That the average attendance of pupils upon the instruction of such college for the year preceding its application for the benefits of this act shall not have been less than fifty.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The words "And provided further," in line 7 of section 9, should be stricken out.

Mr. GEORGE. Those words have been already stricken out. That will require a renumbering of the sections.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Was the amendment which constitutes section 9 of the reprint adopted yesterday?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Section 9 was adopted.

Mr. GEORGE. The whole bill as reprinted was agreed to yesterday.

Mr. INGALLS. There should be another amendment in section 5. The words "in order to make the results of the work of said stations immediately useful" having been stricken out, the amended section reads:

SEC. 5. That said stations shall publish at least once in every three months bulletins or reports of progress, one copy of which shall be sent to each newspaper in the States or Territories, &c.

The words are very indefinite. It should be changed so as to read that "bulletins or reports of progress" shall be published at said stations at least once in every three months.

Mr. GEORGE. That amendment will be agreeable.

Mr. INGALLS. I move to strike out the words:

said stations shall publish at least once in every three months—

and insert after the word "progress," in line 3—shall be published at said stations at least once in every three months—

so as to read:

That bulletins or reports of progress shall be published at said stations at least once in every three months, one copy of which shall be sent to each newspaper, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. I do not rise to antagonize or criticise the bill since the amendments have been put on it; and especially since the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] yesterday, adopting the sixth section, I can very heartily support the measure. But yesterday I read some statistics from the Commissioner of Education which gave rise to considerable debate. I have received this morning a letter from the Commissioner, which he desires to have read in the Senate. I ask the Secretary to read it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be read if there be no objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF EDUCATION,
Washington, D. C., January 27, 1887.

DEAR SIR: I have read in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of this morning the debate on Senate bill 372, to establish agricultural experiment-stations, and regret that my letter of transmittal was not more explicit with regard to the design and scope of the table sent you.

Some Senators appear to misunderstand the purport of the statistical table. The title of the table sent you should be as follows: Number of students and number of agricultural students, so far as known, who attend agricultural schools endowed under the provisions of the act of Congress of July 2, 1862, and acts supplementary thereto.

If the statements made in the table are wrong it is not the fault of this office, but the fault of the catalogues and other publications of the schools concerned, because the table was compiled entirely therefrom, and I had no other means for ascertaining the facts.

The table sent you was a copy of a table made for a gentleman in another State. It does not include all land-grant colleges, because some States have two schools endowed by the grant, of which only one is agricultural. For example, the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and the Missouri School of Mines are not included in said table, because they are not schools of agriculture, and do not admit students of that subject.

The friends of agriculture have attempted in some States to restrict the course of instruction given "to such branches of learning as are related to agriculture and the mechanic arts," but have been prevented by that provision of section 4 of the original act above mentioned, which requires that these students shall be taught "without excluding other scientific and classical studies, and including military tactics." I speak more particularly of the effort that has been made in Alabama.

In Mississippi the act establishing the Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College, approved February 28, 1878, provides for the "establishment and maintenance of a first-class institution at which the youth of the State may acquire a common-school education and a scientific and practical knowledge of agriculture, horticulture, and the mechanic arts, and also the proper care and growth of stock, without, however, excluding other scientific and classical studies, and including military tactics."

The funds available not being sufficient to cover all of these subjects, the trustees have preferred to begin by considering the interests of the State, which are mainly agricultural, and have opened the college to students who desire to study agriculture and allied branches, but they also admit a large number of students into the preparatory department of this school, where doubtless they are acquiring a common-school education, as contemplated in the act. Provision for instruction in the mechanic arts will doubtless be made hereafter, when the resources of the college are increased by the State.

Very respectfully,

N. H. R. DAWSON, Commissioner.

Hon. GEORGE G. VEST,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Missouri made this statement yesterday:

I addressed a note to the Commissioner of Education to know how many students in these land-grant colleges were studying agriculture, in order to find out what had been the result of the beneficence of the Government.

The letter of the Commissioner of Education, which is given a little above that point in the Senator's remarks, is as follows:

In accordance with your request, I have the honor to inclose a table showing the number of students attending the land-grant schools of the United States, and the number of students taking courses of agriculture, as far as I am able to report the same from the records of this office.

N. H. R. DAWSON, Commissioner.

The Commissioner of Education states that he did not include the Boston School of Technology, which has several hundred students, because it was not an agricultural college; but it was a land-grant school, in the precise phrase of the Senator and in the precise phrase of the Commissioner's letter read yesterday. Therefore it gave rise to the notion that the land grant to Massachusetts aided in the education of only ninety-odd pupils. I think the error was the error of the Commissioner, and not the error of the Senators who objected to the statement.

Mr. INGALLS. I call the attention of the Senator from Mississippi to the provision of section 6 which reads:

That for the purpose of paying the salaries and wages of the director and other employés of said stations, and the necessary expenses of conducting investigations, &c.

In many of the colleges to which this appropriation would go my impression is that it would not be necessary to appoint a director and other assistants and employés. In case, however, it were necessary, their payment would be included in the words "the necessary expenses." In order to preclude the idea that there must be a director and other employés necessarily employed, I suggest to the Senator from Mississippi to leave out the words "the salaries and wages of the director and other employés of said stations, and," so as to make the appropriation for the purpose of paying the necessary expenses.

Mr. GEORGE. I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. INGALLS. I move then, in section 6, line 1, to strike out the words:

The salaries and wages of the director and other employés of said stations, and—

so as to read:

That for the purpose of paying the necessary expenses of conducting investigations, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. In line 12 of section 6 an amendment was made to include the trustees as well as regents. Will the Chief Clerk read the amendment that was inserted in that line?

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

To be paid in equal quarterly payments, on the 1st day of January, April, July, and October in each year, to the treasurer or other officer duly appointed by the government of said colleges to receive the same.

Mr. INGALLS. It should read "the governing boards of said colleges."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment will be made if there be no objection.

Mr. MORGAN. I move to add as a new section, to come in at the end of the bill, what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add as a new section the following:

SEC. —. That all seeds, plants, shrubs, roots, and other agricultural or horticultural productions that are hereafter purchased by the United States for distribution among the people shall be equitably apportioned by the Department of Agriculture among the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia; and in those States in which agricultural and mechanical colleges exist or shall be established, the president of such college shall receive from the Department of Agriculture such seeds, plants, shrubs, roots, and other agricultural productions as shall be apportioned to such State, Territory, or District, and shall distribute the same among the people of such States, Territories, or District, respectively, who are engaged in agriculture; and for this purpose the several presidents of such colleges shall have the franking privilege to the same extent as members of Congress now have in like cases, and shall distribute any such seeds, plants, shrubs, roots, or other productions as shall be furnished to the States or Territories under his frank free of postage.

Mr. HALE. I do not understand from the reading of this amendment how far it would go in the direction of regulating and controlling the distribution of seeds and plants, and the other things that have heretofore been distributed through the Department of Agriculture. I should be glad if the Senator from Alabama who has offered the amendment would explain to the Senate what his object is in his amendment. How far does he expect it to go?

Mr. MORGAN. In those States and Territories where there are or may hereafter be agricultural colleges, as they come in, the seeds would be apportioned equitably among the different States and Territories according, of course, to population (I suppose that is the basis of the present distribution), and the seeds would be sent to the presidents of the different agricultural colleges, who would have the franking privilege in the same manner that it is now enjoyed by members of both Houses, and they would distribute the seeds within their respective States and Territories to people engaged in agriculture or horticulture, or like pursuits—not to merchants, and bankers, and lawyers, and doctors, and persons of that kind, but to persons who are engaged in some agricultural business.

My object, so far as I am personally concerned, is to get rid of a very great draught upon my time in being compelled to distribute garden seeds, flower seeds, roots, and shrubs to my constituents throughout the State of Alabama. I think the presidents of the agricultural colleges would know those sections of the States and those classes of people in the States who would be most likely to make a provident and proper use of this advantage that the Government of the United States votes to the people, and they would be much better prepared to do it, from their knowledge of the people and their situation, than members of Congress would be.

Mr. HALE. That was precisely the point I had in my mind, whether the Senator proposes to take away from Senators and Representatives in Congress the distribution of the seeds and plants that is now carried on through them, so as to relieve the members of the two Houses of that duty.

Mr. MORGAN. I have the most kindly relations to the Senate of the United States. Indeed I may say that my relations towards the great body of gentlemen who assemble here are even affectionate, and I regret very much indeed to trespass upon any of their privileges in respect of patronage. I hate to cut them down in their opportunities to address themselves to their constituents in the eloquent way that we do in sending out tomato seed, corn, beans, cabbage, and onion seed, and the like of that. I dislike very much to enter upon such a challenge of the ancient privileges of this body, but still I shall do it.

I confess that I am prompted to do it a good deal by personal convenience, but more so by the duty that I owe to the country, I think, at least to my own State, to occupy the time I may have here at my disposal in their service in much more important matters than in the distribution of garden seeds. I have always thought that the Congress of the United States had burdened itself with a very unnecessary trouble and labor in the distribution of seeds and plants and such things, and had assumed to itself a duty which could be very much better discharged by other persons.

We have of course under the law in making appropriations for the purchase of seeds always a reserve left in the hands of the Department of Agriculture upon which we can draw whenever our constituents who are not otherwise supplied may make application to us for these things.

I think that the distribution is generally pretty equitably made, but members of Congress know very little about the right place to put these things in. I had a conversation with a very distinguished——

Mr. HALE. If the Senator will allow me a moment. I was only seeking to get at the purpose of the amendment, which I did not clearly understand.

Mr. MORGAN. I know.

Mr. HALE. I did not mean to say that I am opposed to it. I only want to suggest whether it might not be well, as this is to be left, under the amendment, to the States and to these institutions, that the distribution of the report of the Department of Agriculture should also go in the same direction.

Mr. MORGAN. That matter was not up. Perhaps we might enlarge the provisions to that extent, which would be a very suitable thing to do, I have no doubt, and let the department of agriculture in each State (for that is what the college is, or is getting to be, at least), distribute the reports; but I did not think about going into that; I wanted to get to this particular subject.

I was about to say that I had a conversation recently with a distinguished member of the other House, who lives in a very large city, and who is a member of the House Committee on Appropriations. I ventured to ask him what he did with his garden seeds. Well, he said, he had some country friends whom he knew to whom he distributed some of them, as many as he could well get away with, but that he sent some of them around to his city friends, and he was very much amused and astonished recently, after he had distributed some packages of seed to one of his neighbors who was engaged in the seed business, when he brought a package back to him and told him that that same package had been bought from him, a dealer in seeds, by the Government of the United States. That only illustrates the imperfectness, I think, of the distribution, so far as it has any tendency to the encouragement of agriculture.

When I was a boy my mother used to employ me about the house in gathering up in the fall of the year the garden seeds. It was a favorite business with the matrons of the land at that time in the fall season of the year to look after the garden seeds, and have them well collected and selected and preserved during the winter season, so that the next year they would have a stock of seed to go upon, and improved seed. That fashion, I think, has entirely gone out of date. I think there are very few persons in the country who depend upon anything else but the General Government and the seed stores for the supply of garden seeds. I should like to see very much a different sort of agriculture encouraged in the land.

Let me say to Senators who perhaps have been astonished sometimes at the increase in the growth and the value of the staple of the cotton crop in the last ten or fifteen years, that that has resulted perhaps as largely from the fact that the planters have been engaged in the selection and improvement of cotton seed as from any other fact. Our planters have been diligent about this matter. I have seen a quart of cotton seed sold for as high as $10 on account of the improved quality of the selection. It is a great industry, and it pays a man to select his cotton seed so as to get better blood, or better breeds of cotton seed, as they are called, than the old green seed which we used to employ in our planting. The cotton seed of the South has been improved as much as the blood-horses of Kentucky, and it has been done by private enterprise stimulated by a desire for profit, for gain in that important crop.

I believe that if we would make our distributions of seeds by way of assisting those men who are engaged in agriculture and horticulture, this donation from Congress, which has heretofore been regarded with a good deal of ridicule, would turn out to be something valuable to the country; but I despair of its being done through the agency of members of Congress. Therefore I thought I would prefer to offer this amendment to the bill.

Mr. PLUMB. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Alabama that the proper place for this provision, if it is to be enacted at all, is, I think, in the agricultural appropriation bill. Each year in the appropriations for the purchase of seeds directions are given for their distribution. That bill, I understand, has been prepared in the usual way and reported by the Committee on Agriculture in the other House to the House. It will undoubtedly pass that body in the usual shape and come before the Senate in the ordinary condition. The question can be met there, and I suggest to the Senator that that is the place to meet it, and not to embarrass this bill by endeavoring to put upon it this amendment which would have to be repeated in the agricultural appropriation bill in order to effect the object.

Mr. MORGAN. I had not the least idea of trying to embarrass this bill. I think the amendment would make the bill more popular, and I of course understand that this would be new legislation and that the rules of both Houses forbid the Committee on Appropriations to consider matters of that kind in connection with appropriation bills. So I think it will be the usual and old plan of having these seeds distributed through members of Congress as long as we fail to take some step in the proper direction to refer this subject to the place where it belongs, the agricultural agencies connected with the Government of the United States in the States respectively.

If I believed it would go on the agricultural appropriation bill I should be entirely willing to accept the suggestion, but it looks as if it were forcing the other House or this House rather too much to put a legislative amendment of this kind upon the agricultural appropriation bill, and they might resent it and reject it on account of its interference with the rule of the House or of the Senate. I think it had better go on this bill.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope this amendment will not be put upon the pending bill. It would, undoubtedly, incumber it so that its passage would be likely to be resisted by the other House.

The question suggested by the Senator from Alabama is an important one, and if the amendment should be defeated here, as I hope it will be, I suggest to the Senator from Alabama that he refer the subject to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. It ought to be considered in its broadest sense, and perhaps action which would be satisfactory to the Senator may be reached in that way; but I do not think it ought to be ingrafted upon this bill. It is entirely irrelevant, and I hope it will not be done.

Mr. PLUMB. I did not design to be understood as saying that I objected to the incorporation of the amendment on this bill for the reason that I thought it would defeat the bill. I did not have any such idea. I only thought that the agricultural appropriation bill was the proper place to put it, in case the Senate should desire to adopt some such provision. The appropriation bill carries a certain amount of money for the purchase of seeds, and in connection with that is a direction as to how they shall be distributed—a very usual thing in appropriation bills.

It would be entirely proper, in accordance with the rules, as I think, of both Houses of Congress, for the Senator from Alabama to move as an amendment, when that bill comes before the Senate, that the money to be appropriated for the purchase of seeds shall be expended in a certain way; that is to say, that the seeds shall be distributed through these experiment-stations, or otherwise.

It was not because I felt that the proposition would embarrass this bill, but simply that we might have some bout at it in a place where the decision of the Senate would be in its nature final, that I made the suggestion.

Mr. MORGAN. I have no desire, I repeat, to embarrass this bill, but I am a little surprised at finding an opinion expressed here, especially by the experienced Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], that such an amendment would embarrass the bill. I thought it would add strength to it, and that every member of Congress would at once see the propriety of this sort of legislation.

I will ask the Chair whether it would be in order, under the rules of the Senate, for me to move upon an appropriation bill the amendment that I have now offered?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not like to decide such a question until it arises.

Mr. MORGAN. It would, at least, be a very doubtful question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would have doubt about it, unless it was brought within the terms of the rule on that subject.

Mr. MORGAN. I am entirely willing to withraw the amendment from the Senate at the present moment and refer it to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and let that committee make a report upon it which would make it in order. I am willing to test the committee on that question, so as to see whether they favor this proposition or not; and as the Senator from Vermont, who has been the initiator and the builder up of this important system, conceives that it would be perhaps an embarrassment to the bill, although it is intended to still further assist that system of education, I shall withdraw the amendment, and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That reference will be made if there be no objection. If there be no further amendment made as in Committee of the Whole the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. HAWLEY. I move now as a substitute for the bill the amendment which I laid before the Senate some time ago, which has been reprinted with the rest, and varies somewhat perhaps from the copies Senators may have.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut submits an amendment in the nature of a substitute, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and to insert:

That the sum of $15,000 per annum be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, to be specially provided for by Congress in the appropriations from year to year, to each State and Territory, for the purposes and under the conditions hereinafter described, to be paid quarterly as so appropriated, beginning with the first of ——.

SEC. 2. That said sum shall be inviolably applied, by each State and Territory which may accept and claim the benefit of this act, to the establishment and maintenance, in connection with the colleges established, or that may hereafter be established, in accordance with the provisions of the act approved July 2, 1862, entitled "An act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts," or any of the supplements of said act, a department to be known as an agricultural experiment-station: Provided, That in any State or Territory in which two such colleges may have been or may be so established the appropriation made by this act shall be equally divided between such colleges unless the legislature of such State or Territory shall otherwise direct.

SEC. 3. That it shall be the object and duty of said experiment-stations to conduct original researches or verify experiments relating to the physiology of plants and animals; the diseases to which they are severally subject, with the remedies for the same; the chemical composition of useful plants at their different stages of growth; the comparative advantages of rotative cropping as pursued under a varying series of crops; the capacity of new plants or trees for acclimation within the isothermal limits represented by the climate of the several stations and their vicinity; the analysis of soils and water; the chemical composition of manures, natural or artificial, with experiments designed to test their comparative effects on crops of different kinds; the adaptation and value of grasses and forage plants; the composition and digestibility of the different kinds of food for domestic animals; the scientific and economic questions involved in the production of butter and cheese; and such other researches or experiments bearing directly on the agricultural industry of the United States as may in each case be deemed advisable, having due regard to the varying conditions and needs of the respective States.

SEC. 4. That the grants of moneys herein authorized are made on the following conditions, to which, as well as to the provisions hereinbefore contained, the previous assent of the several States and Territories shall be signified by legislative acts:

First. It shall be the duty of the chief officer of each station to publish at least once every three months, in cheap and popular form, a bulletin or report of progress, which shall be sent to the Department of Agriculture and to each other experiment station established under this act, and furnished at cost, singly or by the year, to subscribers. Said bulletins and reports shall be transmitted through the mails as third-class matter.

Second. A full report of the operations of each station, including a statement of receipts and expenditures for the fiscal year ending June 30, shall be made annually and sent to each other station, and to the Secretary of the Treasury and the Commissioner of Agriculture of the United States.

Third. Out of the first annual appropriation under this act a sum not exceeding one-fifth of the sum received for each station may be expended in the erection, enlargement, or repair of a building or buildings necessary for the work of such station, and thereafter a sum not exceeding 5 per centum of such appropriation may be so expended.

Fourth. No State or Territory shall be entitled to the benefits of this act unless it shall express its acceptance thereof by its Legislature within two years after the date of the approval of the act by the President.

Fifth. Whenever it shall appear to the Secretary of the Treasury, from the annual statement of receipts and expenditures of any of said stations, that a part of the preceding annual appropriation remains unexpended by such station, such sum shall be deducted from the next succeeding annual appropriation to such station.

Mr. HAWLEY. I should like to make an amendment or two in the proposed substitute. In the first place, in section 4, line 12, the word "third" should be "second;" so as to read:

Said bulletins and reports shall be transmitted through the mails as second-class matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That correction will be made.

Mr. HAWLEY. I move to fill the blank in the eighth line of section 1 with "October, 1887," the period at which the appropriation shall begin, if given. In the draught which I had sent to the desk were these words in the fourth and fifth lines in the first section regarding the appropriation:

To be specially provided for in the appropriations from year to year.

I did assent to the suggestion of a distinguished Senator that that clause should be put in, but I wish to recall my consent and ask that those words shall be stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can modify his own amendment. The amendment will be so modified.

Mr. HAWLEY. In line 4 of section 1, beginning with the word "specially," strike out down to the word "year" in the fifth line, in the following words:

To be specially provided for by Congress in the appropriations from year to year.

So as to read:

That the sum of $15,000 per annum be, and the same is hereby, appropriated to each State and Territory, for the purposes and under the conditions hereinafter described, to be paid quarterly as so appropriated, beginning with the 1st of October, 1887.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be so modified.

Mr. HAWLEY. In order to meet the objections of certain Senators, and because I do not know that any one will object to it, I move to insert, after the word "Territory," in section 1, line 6, the words:

Out of any money in the Treasury proceeding from the sales of public lands.

That has been adopted in the original bill already. I ask that those words be inserted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut has a right to modify his amendment. The words will be inserted.

Mr. HAWLEY. In section 2, line 4, after the word "colleges," I will insert the words "or agricultural departments of colleges," because there are some States where it is a technical question as to whether a college has been established as a distinct agricultural department.

Mr. MORGAN. What words does the Senator insert?

Mr. HAWLEY. The words "or agricultural departments of colleges." For example, in North Carolina the agricultural college is really a branch of the State university.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be so modified.

Mr. HAWLEY. Also, in section 4, line 17, after the word "to," where it first occurs, in the distribution of the annual statement of receipts and expenditures, I wish to insert the words:

To the governor and the board of agriculture of the State in which such station is situated.

I will furnish the Secretary with the words.

I would also add to my amendment sections 9, 10, and 11 as they have been added to the existing bill.

The Chair says I may correct the amendment without the trouble of a vote. I modify my amendment to that effect.

As the amendment stands now it is not mine, but rather a simple application of the original act presented by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] in 1862, and bearing his name.

Mr. HOAR. Before the Senator proceeds with his general remarks I wish to ask him a question in regard to one of his amendments. The question will show, I am afraid, my own want of knowledge of what I ought to know. What is the advantage of limiting this payment to the money in the Treasury proceeding from the sales of the public lands?

Mr. HAWLEY. I will answer the question.

Mr. HOAR. Allow me just to make my statement plain. On the 30th day of June does not all the money received from the sales of public lands go into the Treasury? If you do not make the payment until the 1st of July the money arising from this source will have been covered into the Treasury.

Mr. HAWLEY. Take the payment for the first quarter in 1887.

Mr. HOAR. In January, April, July, and October in each year the quarterly payments are to be made from the money in the Treasury from the sales of public lands. It may have been covered into the Treasury the day before the quarterly payment is to be made.

Mr. HAWLEY. This says "out of money in the Treasury."

Mr. HOAR. Then why not provide that the payment shall be made out of any money in the Treasury?

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator has asked the question twice. I will now answer it once. The point is not mine, nor is it one upon which I am specially scrupulous, but the Senator is aware that there are many persons who hold the view that moneys raised by ordinary taxation ought not to be applied to various purposes. Will the Senator please give his attention while I am answering his question? I am waiting for the Senator to listen to my answer to the question that he kindly asked me.

There are many Senators who hold the view that money raised by the ordinary forms of taxation ought not to be applied rightly to appropriations of this description, but they are perfectly willing to vote for bills that shall take money for this purpose out of the proceeds of the sales of public lands, holding that that is in some way different from any other money in the Treasury, as it may be said to be in trust for the general welfare of the States of the Union. Now I conceive that it makes no possible difference to any of us who do not hold that view; but there are some Senators here who will vote for this bill with that provision in it who will not without it. It is their constitutional view.

Mr. DOLPH. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. DOLPH. A bill has passed both branches of Congress and is now in committee of conference with, I think, a fair prospect of some agreement being reached upon it, which repeals the pre-emption law and provides that no further lands shall be offered at private entry. That will cut off virtually these proceeds, virtually make it so that we shall receive no money from the sales of public lands into the Treasury; that is, they will be given away to homestead settlers. I think if this amendment should be adopted as it is now offered, with this provision in it, that within a very few years, as soon as the pre-emption entries which have now been instituted have been perfected and the money paid into the Treasury, there will not be funds enough to supply the money for this appropriation.

Mr. HAWLEY. Upon that point I would ask the attention of the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], who are three of the Senators who desire to take this view of the bill, who prefer to have this amendment incorporated. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] informs us that if certain legislation now pending shall be adopted there will be no longer any account known as "the proceeds of sales of public lands," because the lands are to be distributed under the homestead law only, and whatever comes out of them will go into the general fund of the Treasury. If that be so, I submit whether it would be worth while to put in this amendment, which I did in order to meet every objection to the bill.

Mr. DOLPH. I would qualify my general statement by excepting mineral lands and other lands which are sold only for cash.

Mr. MORGAN. What bill does the Senator from Oregon refer to?

Mr. DOLPH. The bill to repeal the pre-emption and timber-culture acts and modify the homestead law so as to require in all five year's residence, and not permit the commutation of a homestead entry or any purchase of public agricultural land under pre-emption.

Mr. MORGAN. That has not passed either House, as I understand.

Mr. DOLPH. Of course for a few years the payments upon pre-emption claims which have already been instituted would keep up a certain fund derived from the sale of agricultural lands, but as soon as all the claims which have been instituted are disposed of there will be no longer any revenue except from mineral lands, coal lands, and possibly timber lands, if the act of 1878 should remain in force. I do not think they would prove a sufficient fund to meet the annual appropriation made in this bill.

Mr. MORGAN. What are they?

Mr. DOLPH. Of course I am not prepared to say how much revenue would be derived from the sale of coal lands and timber lands. The expenses of administering the law would first have to come out of the fund, but the state of legislation is as follows: The Senate amended the House bill, substituting a bill of its own. That went to a conference committee at the last session. They disagreed. The conference committee reported that they were unable to agree, and a new conference was appointed. They had a meeting yesterday, and, as I say, there is some prospect of an agreement, so that the bill will become a law.

Mr. MORGAN. I have stated that I was not fully informed of the state of legislation on this question, because I was not aware at the time that the bill referred to had been passed by either House. Of course I am unadvised as to what the operations of the bill will be, but that there is enough land money in the Treasury of the United States this year to carry on these establishments for the next eight years, on the basis of this bill, I have no doubt.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to say that I have no doubt that there will be enough money from the land proceeds for many years to come to pay the small sums embraced in this bill.

Mr. MORGAN. I have no doubt of it. I am willing to try it at all events.

Mr. PLUMB. I think the Senator from Oregon overlooks the sales for cash of what is known as offered land, in addition to the mineral lands and the excess of receipts for the sale of homestead lands over and above the expenses of such sale. That, however, is not an argument to my mind in favor of such a provision as has been already inserted in the bill and as the Senator from Connecticut proposes to insert as a part of his amendment. The vice of it is that it, the expenditure, will be set down as costing nothing, because it comes from a special fund not created by taxation, and the additional vice of it will be that there will be constant tinkering with the public lands question upon other basis than the one heretofore and now considered as fundamental—that the lands shall be dedicated inviolably to the uses of settlement, wholly without relation to the question of profit to be derived to the Government therefrom.

I have protested myself on all occasions, as I do now protest, against the question of the disposal of the public domain being linked with any other condition whatever, except the one which has become, as I said, fundamental, that the lands shall only go to those who are desirous of settling upon and making homes upon them, without reference to the money return to be derived to the Government. It would therefore improve the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut if he would leave out that provision in regard to the proceeds of the sales of public lands being applied to the purpose of the maintenance of the agricultural stations to be created.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator allow me to go on?

Mr. PLUMB. Certainly.

Mr. HAWLEY. This discussion arose incidentally before I had stated my case in support of my amendment. I have put this clause in because it was adopted by the Senate once, but it can easily be stricken out if such be the will of the Senate. I hope the Senator will allow me to state my case in favor of my amendment, and then I will yield the floor to him to discuss the general question.

I have incorporated in this amendment every specification of a purpose to which this money is to be devoted. I have incorporated in addition to the conditions which the State shall accept, certain other conditions which are collected from the bill, classified in section 4. The whole work is to be done under my substitute or under the bill. I have added to the substitute which I propose the ninth, tenth, and eleventh sections, which have been adopted by the Senate, going to adapt the appropriation to the varying local necessities.

Mr. DAWES. Will the Senator state to us how his bill now differs from the original bill as amended?

Mr. HAWLEY. I was doing it as fast as I possibly could. I was saying that every purpose to which this money is to be devoted is contained in my amendment; and every condition which is necessary, in my judgment, for a State to accept or to be imposed upon the colleges is also contained in it.

The difference, then, between the two is that I avoid entirely what I may be pardoned for considering the rather awkward attempt of the original bill to go directly from the National Government, and the National Treasury to create a branch of a corporation that exists under the State law. The agricultural colleges are corporations created by State law. If you wish to add, as the friends of the bill do, to the powers, duties, and usefulness of those corporations, do with the money just as you did with the original grant, give it to the State with conditions, with a specification of the uses, and with the condition that the money is to accepted formally by legislative act of the State, which devotes it to that purpose precisely as the original moneys were devoted to the formation of the agricultural colleges. Then there will be formed a branch of each agricultural college, to be known as the experimental station, by the same authority which created the original corporation. The whole business will be symmetrical.

Now, we propose to come in and say that there shall be something more in the charter of those colleges; there shall be a creation by us of a branch of the college, and instead of giving to a State to be disbursed by its own officers, already created and already under its own bonds, a certain sum of money, we will, without communicating with Legislature or governor, go directly to the treasurer of a local and State corporation and pay some money to him.

It seems to me that the logical and direct and easy plan, which would have saved a great deal of this discussion, would have been to do as we did with the original moneys, give them to the States upon specified conditions, requiring the State to accept by legislative act and so devote the money. It makes the bill much more simple, conforms it precisely to the original Morrill grant, and contains as I have it now, I think, every provision that is necessary in the original bill. I am not sure—I shall have to ask—whether the provision requiring the purchase of 25 acres is still in the bill.

Mr. MORRILL. It is.

Mr. HAWLEY. It still remains in the bill. Then I have omitted that, and I should wish to change that, because I would say "not less than 5 acres." I do not wish to compel these stations to buy 25 acres. That, however, is a minor matter.

There is one more good thing in the bill that I have not taken in. It can be easily taken in, however, by inserting half-a-dozen lines providing that, in order to secure as much as possible the uniformity of work, the Commissioner of Agriculture shall make suggestions and submit forms.

I have nothing further to say at present.

Mr. PLUMB. The bill in its present shape is not what I think it ought to be, but I still think it is better than the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut. I am not willing myself at this present moment to simply give money out of the Treasury of the United States, whether it be derived from the proceeds of the sales of public lands or otherwise, to the agricultural colleges of the several States, practically without limit as to the expenditure. While it is true the amendment says they shall expend the money in a certain way, we reserve no control over it, and in addition the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut proposes a permanent annual appropriation, so that there will be no opportunity of supervising the action of the States or of preventing their receiving this money unless Congress shall affirmatively so declare hereafter by statute.

Mr. HAWLEY. The original bill does exactly the same.

Mr. PLUMB. That is very true, but we have in that the supervision, measurably at least, of the Commissioner of Agriculture.

If we enter upon this experiment in the manner provided by the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut, in my judgment we shall presently be confronted with this condition of things: Some of the States will come here and say, "You have not given us money enough to carry on these experiments as we think they ought to be carried on," and there will be a combination to increase the appropriation from the standpoint of the desires and views of States irrespective of the question from a national standpoint.

I have been consenting to this bill and have been desirous of its passage because I wanted to give additional resources to the agricultural colleges, but under the substantial direction as to expenditure of the Department of Agriculture located at the national capital, and one of the great Departments of the National Government, whereby there may be unified and brought together under an intelligent and business supervision and direction all the operations that are to be carried on out of the funds which we shall appropriate. If we are to give this money to the States practically without condition it is a totally different thing to my mind, and I should not be willing to commit myself to it.

I did not oppose the Blair educational bill because I believed it to be unconstitutional, but because I believed it to be unwise. I believed it to be against the interests of true education; believed it to be practically destructive of the system of education in the several States. In other words, I believed it to be a provision against education, and not in favor of education. The amendment of the Senator from Connecticut is in the same direction. It gives the money to the colleges without reserving any right of control over its expenditure on the part of the General Government. It would constitute an inducement to combination on the part of the colleges to increase the appropriation from time to time, on the ground that from the local standpoint the existing appropriation was insufficient, while under the language and theory of the original bill the question would be, and continue to be, one to be settled from the national standpoint, as it should be. If the State of Massachusetts or the State of Kansas is not able to carry on such experiments as the legislatures and people of those States think ought to be carried on for the purpose of enlarging the scope of these agricultural colleges from the local standpoint, let them come here and say so; but they do not say so, and they will not.

The only justification, therefore, for the proposed expenditure is that from the national standpoint something more is required.

The House of Representatives has recently passed by a large majority, as it had done on a previous occasion, a bill to give to the Department of Agriculture the dignity, power, and responsibility of the other great Departments of this Government, to practically require the President to take the head of that Department into his councils as he takes into his councils the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Attorney-General, and so on. That bill has been with some amendments reported favorably from the Committee on Agriculture of this body and is now on our Calendar. I have faith to believe that it will be passed before we adjourn and become a law, as I believe it ought to be. I believe that we shall have under that a Department, to some extent commensurate with the great interest of agriculture, which it will be its duty to represent and promote, as I believe it can do, sensibly and materially.

I believe that it would be desirable to have as one of the agencies of that great department, representing seven-twelfths of the people of the United States who are engaged in tilling the soil and whose occupation is of such vital consequence to the country, some method for the purpose of bringing together in the best possible shape the results of the labors of educated, intelligent men in all the fields that have relation direct or remote to this great industry, in order that on that knowledge thus acquired there may be built a better and a stronger superstructure than now exists. And I have desired, as far as I was concerned, that this bill might be passed substantially as it came from the committee, because I believe it would put in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture a power which he could wield in connection and co-operation with these agencies of the States heretofore endowed by the General Government, the agricultural colleges, to great advantage in the promotion of this important interest.

I do not think the amendments made to the bill have helped to carry out that idea or have added to its value, but, as I said before, I believe it is still better than is the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I respectfully venture to say that the Senator from Kansas is laboring under certain misapprehensions. He speaks of a measurable control on the part of the Commissioner of Agriculture. It is not in the bill at all. There is not a particle of control on his part over these State institutions. The only provision on that point in the bill, that to which I suppose the Senator refers, one that I say I have omitted, but will insert, is that which makes it the duty of the Commissioner of Agriculture—section 4 of the reprinted bill—"to furnish forms, as far as practicable, for the tabulation of results of investigation or experiments; to indicate, from time to time, such lines of inquiry as to him shall seem most important; and, in general, to furnish such advice and assistance," &c.

It is a mere co-operation, which is perfectly proper; entirely wise. I am glad it is there. I will put it in the proper place after section 3 of my substitute. But there is no control on the part of the Department of Agriculture in the bill, and I think the States would be very uneasy if they found themselves liable to be controlled by successive Commissioners of Agriculture in their operations in institutions, which are, many of them, already established by the expenditure of large sums of money. I know they would feel so in my State.

The Senator says we are granting money without power to control it. I do not hold it to be so at all. This is not a perpetual grant, that we are under obligation to forever pay, to renew from year to year. As the committee bill stands and as my substitute stands, it is what is called a permanent appropriation. I withdrew my assent to the proposition to make it an annual appropriation, because I thought I foresaw that the States would dread to undertake the putting up of new buildings, the expenditure of considerable sums of money with a view to this grant, if they could not be assurred of its continuance after one year. So it stands in the form of a permanent appropriation, but it can easily be withdrawn. It is not given to any State unless it has gone to a very considerable expense in preparing to receive and use it. It is not presented to the State as the original grant of land was. That was given to the States which, in some cases, never went through the form, I believe, of laying a corner-stone of an agricultural college, but expended the proceeds of the lands in some way. They were wasted and disappeared either through carelessness or the supposed exigencies or civil war. In this case this money is given from year to year only where States are prepared to receive it, and only where they have schools existing; and, moreover, it may be withdrawn any year, may be stopped any year from any one State or from the whole.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is there any express clause, either in the bill or in the proposed substitute, which says in terms that Congress may terminate this appropriation, either the whole of it or any part of it it thinks fit, in its discretion?

Mr. HAWLEY. There is not, in either the bill or the substitute, but it may very easily be placed there.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it ought to be, if we are not to have the control all the time of the money, as I rather think we should.

Mr. MORRILL. The original bill provided for an annual appropriation.

Mr. HAWLEY. What is called a permanent appropriation.

Mr. MORRILL. No, an appropriation made annually.

Mr. HAWLEY. The bill now does not read so—so much per annum.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think that the States might be misled by the phraseology of what we call "a permanent indefinite appropriation" that requires no annual action of Congress into the supposition that this was to be a perpetual contribution, and that they might be led (without being advised that we could take it back, as in point of law we probably could any time) into expenditures and experiments that they otherwise would not undertake. Therefore, it seems to me that this bill ought to provide—which I prefer—that the control of this expenditure should be under some governmental authority, or else, if it does not do that, that it should state to these States, every one of them, in express terms that whenever Congress chooses to stop it as to any one or all of them, it may do so without any complaint being made.

Mr. HAWLEY. If the Senator will give me the words I will accept that suggestion so far as my amendment goes.

I ask to amend my proposition by inserting after section 3 of my amendment these words from the original bill:

That in order to secure, as far as practicable, uniformity of methods and results in the work of said stations, it shall be the duty of the United States Commissioner of Agriculture to furnish forms, as far as practicable, for the tabulation of results of investigation or experiments; to indicate, from time to time, such lines of inquiry as to him shall seem most important; and, in general, to furnish such advice and assistance as will best promote the purposes of this act.

This to be section 4 of my amendment and the subsequent sections to be changed accordingly in the numbering. With that provision in I think all the original bill is substantially embodied in mine.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to call attention to the question now before the Senate. I have no pride of authorship in this bill, because I am not the author of it. It was originally framed by Mr. Cullen, of Illinois. It was then adopted and recommended to Congress by a convention held in this city of the presidents of the various agricultural colleges of the Union. It was then referred to the Committee on Agriculture of this body. We gave it such attention and consideration as we were able to give it. Since it was reported to this body we have spent two or three days in perfecting the measure, and I believe on all hands it is conceded, even by the Senator from Connecticut, to be now a very proper measure, because in his substitute he has incorporated, I believe, all the essential parts of the original bill. So then we have this rather extraordinary, I think, and unusual parliamentary spectacle, that, in order to accomplish one single purpose, which could be accomplished in one line or two of amendment, we have a long bill perfected by the Senate, attempted to be amended by a substitute in all respects substantially similar to the bill which has been perfected by the Senate with the one single exception to which I will call attention.

The bill as recommended by the various parties to whom I have alluded, and as recommended by the Committee on Agriculture, leaves these agricultural stations nominally national stations; that is, they are made national agencies for the performance of national work, the theory of the whole bill being a mere extension of the agricultural colleges which have prevailed for several years, and as a branch of the Agricultural Department, an appropriation is made in pursuance of that idea. The proposition of the Senator from Connecticut is to dispense with these national agencies, to make this simply and purely a grant to the States upon condition. The proposition of the committee and of the various bodies to which I have alluded was to leave it a national institution; that is, as the national money was appropriated out of the national Treasury to perform this service to the people of the United States it should be performed under the slight control and management provided for in the bill of the Agricultural Department. I see the Senator from Connecticut has just incorporated that in his substitute.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator permit me to observe that there is no shadow of control in that?

Mr. GEORGE. I understand.

Mr. HAWLEY. It only allows communications by letter.

Mr. GEORGE. I have alluded to certain indorsements of the principle of the bill made by very influential bodies. I have some more that I want to bring before the Senate. The bill is indorsed by the congress of farmers recently held in this city. The bill is also indorsed by the farmers of Massachusetts in some resolutions which I will now read to the Senate.

Whereas there is a bill now pending in Congress called the "Hatch bill," which provides for the establishing of experiment-stations in connection with all agricultural colleges, now or to be established, by land grants from the United States; and

Whereas all experiment-stations that are now in operation by State legislation have proved of great value to the agricultural interest of such States as have made appropriations for their maintenance: Therefore,

Resolved, That we, farmers of Massachusetts here assembled, approve the passage of said "Hatch bill," provided that it be so amended as to invest the board of control or trustees of experiment-stations, provided for by State legislation, with the appropriations made by Congress.

That has been done.

Also, by providing that 15 per cent. of the appropriations made by the Congress of the United States for the support of such experiment-stations shall be expended, if needed, in conducting such experiments as the United States Commissioner of Agriculture may direct—

That has not been done—

and by striking out so much of section 4 of said bill as relates to fixing a uniform valuation of ingredients of commercial fertilizers for all parts of the country as being impracticable.

That has been done.

And that we recommend that the sixth section be amended so as to allow 15 per cent. instead of 5 per cent. of the annual appropriation to be expended, if needed, in enlarging or improving the building or apparatus of the station.

That has not been done either in the bill or in the substitute offered by the Senator from Connecticut.

I have others here which I will not detain the Senate to read. I only want the Senate to understand that the congress of farmers of the United States indorse the features of the bill as it now stands, that the presidents of the agricultural colleges of the Union indorse it, that the farmers of Massachusetts indorse it, that the farmers of Mississippi indorse it in their State Grange, and also another very respectable farming association in that State.

So, after all, we are brought to this, whether for the declaration of the mere nominal control of these stations by the Federal Government we are to change the bill by substituting another bill for it, which is exactly like it, except what can be corrected in about three lines. I hope therefore that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut will not be adopted.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In order to guard against any misapprehension, and to do what I believe everybody will agree to, I move to amend the bill for which the substitute is proposed, and if the substitute be adopted, then to amend the bill as thus amended by adding as a last section:

Nothing in this act shall be held or construed as binding the United States to continue any payments from the Treasury to any or all the States or institutions mentioned in this act. But Congress may at any time amend, suspend, or repeal any or all the provisions of this act.

Mr. GEORGE. I see no objection to that amendment, as I think that is the legal effect of the bill now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it is myself, but it will point out clearly to all the States, where there might be a doubt or an implication, morally or otherwise, that we do not commit ourselves to going on with this everlastingly if it turns out to be a failure.

Mr. INGALLS. Under the terms of this bill would not this be an annual definite appropriation?

Mr. EDMUNDS. A permanent, indefinite appropriation.

Mr. INGALLS. It requires no act of Congress to provide the money?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I offer it as an amendment to perfect the text of the original bill, and then if the substitute be adopted it can be added to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair so understands. The amendment will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment proposed by Mr. EDMUNDS.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to amend, on page 5 of the original bill, by inserting, after the word "State," in line 6, section 6, these words:

To be especially provided for by Congress in the appropriations from year to year.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 6, section 6, after the word "State," it is proposed to insert:

To be especially provided for by Congress in the appropriations from year to year.

So as to read:

SEC. 6. That for the purpose of paying the necessary expenses of conducting investigations and experiments and printing and distributing the results as hereinbefore prescribed, the sum of $15,000 per annum is hereby appropriated to each State, to be especially provided for by Congress in the appropriations from year to year.

Mr. PLUMB. I offer that because it has been part of the policy of Congress, in recent years, to cut off as many as possible of the permanent annual appropriations, to leave every subject of expenditure to be put under the scrutiny of Congress from year to year, taking into account the condition of the public Treasury, taking into account the results to be derived, taking into account all the questions that ought to inhere in the appropriation of public money. No danger can result in any way. If this should be a wise use of the public money Congress will be quick to perceive it, and just as quick to appropriate the money each year; but it will make the recipients of the grant, I think, a little more anxious to keep in the line of the statute and to exhibit and to make profert of the result of the expenditure which has been committed to them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] as a substitute for the bill. [Putting the question.] The "noes" appear to have it.

Mr. HAWLEY. I should like to see whether some of those gentlemen who encouraged me still think as they did during the debate. I call for a division.

The ayes, on the call for a division, were 7, less than a majority of a quorum; and no further count being demanded, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to say that if I believed the expenditure of this money would advance the agricultural interests I should be glad to vote for the bill. I should be glad to even increase the appropriations that are made if thereby we could promote the interests of the agriculturists of the country, but I have no idea that the appropriation of this $750,000 will be of any practical benefit to the agriculturists of the country. The bill proposes to establish experiment-stations at the agricultural colleges to collect information on certain subjects now accessible at the Agricultural Department, and it will amount to very little practically to the farmers of the country.

I am not aware that I have ever known a single farmer made out of the boys educated in these colleges. I am sure that the most of them would learn more on the farms of their fathers as practical agriculturists than they ever will learn in the colleges. So far as my observation has extended the appropriation that was made of agricultural scrip money has done no good, nor do I believe that this appropriation will do a particle of good to the agricultural interests of the country.

I do not oppose the bill by my vote, because there seems to be a general concurrence of opinion that it should pass, and if there is a possibility of any advantage arising to the agricultural interests by this bill I am perfectly willing that they shall have it. In my opinion agriculture is the most important industry in the country. It is upon that not only that our material interests depend, but upon the agriculture of the country depends to a very large extent the maintenance of our republican institutions. It is in the rural sections of the country that liberty has her most permanent abode.

I do not antagonize by my vote the passage of the bill, but, at the same time, I can not let it pass without saying here and now that in my judgment this appropriation of money will do no good to the agricultural interest.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 10419) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

WASTE OF WATER.

Mr. COCKRELL. I offer a resolution calling for information.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the commissioners of the District of Columbia report to the Senate at the earliest practicable time the principal sources of waste of the water supply in this city, and what measures, if any, have been taken to stop or lessen such waste, and the result of their action, and whether there is a 48-inch main now in the ground intended hereafter to connect the new reservoir with Capitol Hill, now lying idle and unconnected with the city system, and whether if such main were connected with the distribution system it would give freer circulation and an ampler supply of water to smaller mains now failing to furnish a sufficient supply in many residences in the northwestern part of the city; and if so, why such connection has not been made and what steps are necessary to be taken to secure such connection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I suggest to my friend—it is a mere accidental clerical omission—to insert that they "be, and they are hereby, directed" to report.

Mr. INGALLS. Let that resolution lie on the table until to-morrow under the rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution goes over under objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, January 28, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 27, 1887.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate requested the return of the bill (H. R. 7218) for the erection of a public building at Chattanooga, Tenn.

EXPENDITURES FOR 1884.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a detailed statement of expenditures of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

BUREAU OF ENGRAVING AND PRINTING.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a plat and recommending the acquisition of an additional lot for the use of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

MONONGAHELA NAVIGATION COMPANY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Acting Secretary of War, transmitting a report of the commercial value and importance of the work of the Monongahela Navigation Company; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

GREEN AND BARREN RIVER NAVIGATION COMPANY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Acting Secretary of War, transmitting a report upon the commercial value and importance of the work of the Green and Barren River Navigation Company; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIM, NEW MEXICO.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting reports of the surveyor-general of New Mexico and his predecessor, upon the private land claim "Cañada de Santa Clara," 138; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House Senate bills and a joint resolution of the following titles; which were read twice, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds:

A bill (S. 1920) to increase the appropriation for the erection of a public building at Minneapolis, Minn.;

A bill (S. 1974) providing for the erection of a public building at the city of Hastings, Nebr., and for other purposes;

A bill (S. 2303) for the erection of a public building at Chester, Pa.;

A bill (S. 3001) for the erection of a public building at Milwaukee, Wis.;

A bill (S. 3055) for the extension and repair of a public building at Newark, N. J.;

A bill (S. 3121) for the erection of a public building at Hanover, N. H.;

A bill (S. 1322) to provide for the erection of a public building at the city of Morgan City (port of Brashear), State of Louisiana; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 51) authorizing and directing the Department of Justice to transfer certain rooms which have been occupied by the United States courts to the city of Jackson, Miss.

PROPERTY AT ABINGDON, VA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 2539) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to exchange property purchased at Abingdon, Va., as a site for a public building for more suitable property, with amendments by the Senate.

Mr. WILKINS. I ask unanimous consent that the House non-concur in the Senate amendments and request a conference.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint the managers of the conference on the part of the House during the day.

RETURN OF BILL TO THE SENATE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill H. R. 7218, with amendments by the Senate, and directed the reading of a message requesting the return of the bill, as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, January 26, 1887.

Ordered, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. 7218) to amed an act entitled "An act for the erection of a public building at Chattanooga, Tenn.," approved February 25, 1885.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the Chair will direct the Clerk to return the bill to the Senate.

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, indefinite leave of absence was granted to Mr. COMPTON, on account of sickness in his family.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 191) providing for the erection of a public building at Los Angeles, Cal.;

A bill (H. R. 8923) to amend an act in relation to the immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes, approved June 10, 1880;

A bill (H. R. 9371) for the completion of a public building at Santa Fé, N. Mex.;

A bill (H. R. 9644) for the erection of a public building at Jefferson, Tex.; and

A bill (H. R. 10051) for the erection of a public building at Charleston, S. C.

DIGEST OF DIPLOMATIC RULINGS, ETC.

Mr. KELLEY, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Be it resolved, &c., That there be printed the usual number of copies of "A Digest of the Diplomatic Rulings of the United States prior to the organization of the Federal Government," to be edited by Francis Wharton; and also the usual number of copies of "A Digest of the Decisions of International Commissions in which the United States was a Party," to be edited by John B. Moore; and that there be printed of each of said digests, in addition to the said usual number of copies, 1,000 copies for the use of the Department of State, 1,000 copies for the use of the Senate, and 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives; said digests to be supplementary to the Digest of International Law, edited by Francis Wharton, and printed under the resolution of Congress approved July 28, 1886; and for the editing of the digests to be printed under this resolution there shall be paid, upon the approval of the same by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate and the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives, the sum of $2,500 per volume, said sum being the price paid per volume for the editing of the Digest of International Law, printed under the joint resolution which was approved July 28, 1886.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. KETCHAM. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 1533) to open and set aside an order of the Court of Claims canceling a portion of a judgment against the United States, remitted, through mistake as to the facts in regard to the same, by claimant to the United States, and to refer the matter to the Court of Claims for such further action as said court shall find to be just and equitable, and that the same be considered at this time.

The bill was read.

Mr. BRAGG. A bill like that requires to be carefully considered. I object.

Mr. SCRANTON. I call for the regular order.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the question on the passage of the bill (H. R. 10419) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, which comes over from the adjournment yesterday with the previous question ordered on its passage. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] demanded the reading of the engrossed bill. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk commenced to read the engrossed bill.

Mr. HEPBURN. I withdraw the demand for the reading of the engrossed bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is, shall the bill pass?

Mr. HEPBURN. Upon that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 154, nays 95, not voting 68; as follows:

YEAS—154.

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. WILLIS, the reading of the names of members voting was dispensed with.

Mr. WILLIS. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

The SPEAKER. The result has not been announced yet.

The following-named members were announced as paired until further notice:

Mr. DOCKERY with Mr. WADE.

Mr. BENNETT with Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia, with Mr. STEWART, of Vermont.

Mr. BLAND with Mr. GOFF.

Mr. CANDLER with Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska.

Mr. PINDAR with Mr. DAVENPORT.

Mr. GREEN with Mr. SWINBURNE.

Mr. BACON with Mr. LINDSLEY.

Mr. COX, of New York, with Mr. BURLEIGH.

Mr. REAGAN with Mr. HISCOCK.

Mr. THROCKMORTON with Mr. ATKINSON.

Mr. MORGAN with Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR.

Mr. MITCHELL with Mr. WHITING.

Mr. SPRIGGS with Mr. HOUCK.

The following-named members were announced as paired for this day:

Mr. STAHLNECKER with Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois.

Mr. DUNN with Mr. JOHNSON, of New York.

The following-named members were announced as paired on this vote:

Mr. ELLSBERRY with Mr. HOPKINS.

Mr. COMPTON with Mr. ROCKWELL.

Mr. BALLENTINE and Mr. WEST were announced as paired until Saturday next.

Mr. COBB. I wish to announce that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HUTTON] is detained from the House by sickness.

The result of the vote was then announced, as above recorded.

Mr. WILLIS. I demand the previous question on the adoption of the title of the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the title will stand as reported.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. WILLIS moved to reconsider the vote by which the title was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. VAN SCHAICK. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably absent this morning when the vote was taken on the river and harbor bill. Had I been present, I would have voted "aye."

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports. The call rests with the Committee on the Judiciary.

WILLIAM C. WHITTLE.

Mr. TUCKER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a bill (H. R. 10913) to remove the disabilities of William C. Whittle, of Virginia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

UNITED STATES COURTS IN SOUTH CAROLINA.

Mr. CULBERSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. 10201) to regulate the terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States for the district of South Carolina; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back adversely sundry petitions regarding the location of certain United States courts in Texas; which were laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

SECTION 51, REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. HAMMOND, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 10046) to amend and alter section 51 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ELECTION OF SENATORS BY THE PEOPLE.

Mr. HAMMOND, from the Committee on the Judiciary, also reported back adversely the joint resolution (H. Res. 239) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing for the election of Senators by the votes of the people of the States.

Mr. MILLS. Let that go on the Calendar.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I desire that this resolution be not laid on the table, but go on the Calendar.

The SPEAKER. It will be referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ACCOUNTS OF MARSHALS, ETC.

Mr. OATES, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 10076) to amend section 856 of the Revised Statutes of the United States in reference to the payment of accounts of marshals and other officers; which was referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The call of committees for reports being concluded, the hour for the consideration of bills called up by committees begins at 1 o'clock and 7 minutes. The call rests with the Committee on Claims.

FLORIDA INDIAN WAR CLAIM.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. I rise for the purpose of calling up for consideration a bill (H. R. 3877) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to settle and pay the claim of the State of Florida on account of expenditures made in suppressing Indian hostilities, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. That bill is in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and has been partially considered heretofore, upon which occasion the gentleman from Florida [Mr. DOUGHERTY] occupied twenty-seven minutes of his hour, and amendments were agreed to, or at least offered.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Amendments were adopted by the committee. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the question to the House.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Mr. Speaker, before that question is taken, I wish to move that all general debate be limited to five minutes.

Mr. HOLMAN. General debate?

The SPEAKER. That is the motion—that all general debate be limited to five minutes.

Mr. HOLMAN. Upon such a bill as this that means the whole debate unless the bill is being considered by paragraph.

The SPEAKER. It was under discussion during the last session of Congress.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest, then, that general debate be limited to fifteen minutes.

The SPEAKER. The bill is being considered under the five-minute rule, and certain amendments were agreed to. General debate had been closed, and the committee was proceeding to consider it by sections.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. I withdraw the motion to close debate, and ask that the question be taken on the motion, that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union (Mr. HAMMOND in the chair).

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Mr. Chairman, this bill is the outcome of a joint resolution which passed both Houses, I believe, in the Forty-seventh Congress. The report of the Committee on Claims is based on a statement of facts which do not change, as they are facts of official record. And that report of the committee, so based upon these facts of official record, is a unanimous report.

Now, what are those facts? In the statement of the case I will make them as short as possible. After the outbreak of hostilities in the State of Florida, which resulted in the massacre of the then principal garrison in the southeastern portion of the State, the President called upon the governor of Florida to furnish troops to keep the Indians in check until a number of United States troops could be carried there.

The governor of the State of Florida, acting on the request of the President of the United States, conveyed to him through the Secretary of War, called out those troops. They served until such time as in the judgment of the commanding officer, who belonged to the United States Army, their services were no longer required, and they were discharged after the attention of the executive department of the Government had been called to the fact that no provision had been made for their payment. The governor of Florida was informed that an enrolling officer would be sent there to enroll these troops as United States troops in order that they might be paid as other United States troops were paid. That officer could not get to that State of Florida at that time as a gentleman can from the city of Washington to any portion of that State at the present time. The United States officer in command of those troops, not having been informed of the order to enroll them as United States troops, discharged them before the enrolling officer reached the State of Florida. Then the question came up how should these troops, having been discharged from the service of the United States, in no sense in the service of the United States, but acting under the command of United States officers, called out at the request of the President conveyed to the governor of the State of Florida through the Secretary of War, how were they to be paid? The governor called the Legislature of the State of Florida into extraordinary session, and authorized the issue of 7 per cent. bonds to pay these troops. They owed these troops $97,000 for their services and for subsistence bills which had accrued. Two hundred and twenty-four thousand dollars of bonds were hypothecated with the banks of South Carolina and Georgia, and $132,000 were deposited with the Indian trust fund in Washington city, in the Treasury of the United States; and there those bonds remain to-day, the Government of the United States never having paid one dollar of this money which has been paid out by the State of Florida under the orders, it may be said, if such term could be used, by the highest authority in this country.

The State of Florida, as I have before said, is not asking for any gratuity at the hands of this Government. All she asks is that the Government shall deal with her as it has, by virtue of the possession of this money and having received its benefits, forced her to ask to be dealt with.

Mr. STEELE. Let me ask the gentleman upon what ground has the United States refused to pay this claim up to this time?

Mr. DOUGHERTY. On the ground that they claim the State of Florida owed $132,000 of these very bonds which are now upon deposit as security, to which I have referred.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. Are these defaulted bonds of your State?

Mr. DOUGHERTY. No, sir; we have never defaulted upon any of our bonds.

Mr. PERKINS. Has the State paid the interest on these bonds?

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Yes, sir; and moneys that should have come to the State under the indemnity for swamp and overflowed lands and for school purposes, instead of being paid to the State, have been held in the Treasury to pay the interest on these bonds.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. In a letter addressed to the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Lamar, and published in the Commercial Advertiser of New York some two weeks ago, I find the following:

> It appears from the official records that the Treasury of the United States holds, as custodian for the above beneficiaries (alluding to the Indian tribes), about $1,710,000 of bonds issued by the States of Arkansas, Florida, Louisiana, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, and Virginia. Either the principal or interest, or both, of these obligations are now in default and have been in that condition for many years past.

I would like to know whether or not the gentleman denies that his State has defaulted upon its portion of these bonds.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. That refers to the $132,000 we have there in the Treasury.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. Yes, and upon which the interest has not been paid by the State. I intend to introduce a joint resolution directing the Attorney-General to bring suits on behalf of the United States to collect the bonds alluded to in this letter.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. The State has paid the interest.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. The interest has been paid, and the State asks now that the Government pay her the $224,000 they admit they owe, in order to enable her to make payment of these bonds.

Mr. LONG. Are you willing to deduct the amount due to the Government?

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Yes, sir; the bill so provides.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. This deducts the amount due to the United States.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee to section——

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope that amendment will be read.

The Clerk read the committee amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, there are two or three matters in connection with this bill to which I wish to call the attention of the House for a few moments. This bill proposes first to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to settle and adjust the claim of the State of Florida, as reported to Congress by the Secretary of War on March 22, 1882, and to pay to said State such sum of money as he may find to be due the State of Florida by said report, and also "any other sum that may be found due to said State on any other account," &c. That presents the two items to be considered.

In 1881 a joint resolution was passed by Congress directing the Secretary of War to investigate this claim. The Secretary of War on the 22d day of May, 1882, made the following report:

I have the honor to transmit herewith a report prepared in this Department, in accordance with the provisions of a joint resolution approved March 3, 1881, (21st Statutes, 520), for the investigation of the claim of the State of Florida against the United States for the suppression of Indian hostilities between the years 1855 and 1860. A duplicate of this report has this day been transmitted to the President pro tempore of the Senate.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ROBERT T. LINCOLN,
Secretary of War.

The paper to which he there refers as having been transmitted to Congress is a report to him by the Judge-Advocate of the United States Army, Thomas F. Barr, setting forth in detail the various items constituting this claim, and makes the aggregate sum $224,648.09.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Showing that amount to be due the State.

Mr. HOLMAN. In that report he uses the following language:

The amounts to be reported to Congress in the view taken by me of the provisions of the joint resolution of March 3, 1881, are as follows:

Abstract A	$154,623 66
Abstract B	7,890 92
Abstract C	34,669 74
Abstract D	17,247 39
Abstract E	98 59
Abstract F	395 16
Abstract G	187 90
Abstract H	9,015 81
Abstract I	10 10
Abstract K	501 32
Account of J. M. Cooper	7 50
Total	$224,648 09

an amount less by $54,985.58 than that of the claim as submitted by the State; $11,316.91 of this is for payment of troops for service in 1849, and $6,270.37 for the payment of two companies in cases where both muster and pay rolls are missing and referred to specifically in this report in consideration of Abstract A. The reasons for the failure to include the remainder have been hereinbefore set forth.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

THOMAS F. BARR,
Judge-Advocate, United States Army.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

Now that is the basis of this claim so far as it is reported to Congress. But my friend will see—a fact I have mentioned, although I had not noticed it till this morning—that it goes further:

And also any further sums that may be found to be due the said State on any other account.

This bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to make this settlement. It was the Secretary of War that was called on by the joint resolution mentioned to make the report. Now the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to predicate this settlement upon the report made by the Secretary of War, and also go beyond that and adjust any further accounts due the State of Florida by the United States.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. That is the object of the bill, to bring about the final settlement between the Government of the United States and the State of Florida.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. STEELE was recognized and yielded his time to Mr. HOLMAN.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is one other matter to which I wish to advert, having called attention to the data now before the House being the report of the Secretary of War. Gentlemen will see that it is a misfortune the Secretary of War did not fully perform the duty which seems to have been devolved upon him. He simply submits to Congress the report of the Judge-Advocate as to the amount of the claim without any expression of opinion. He submits that report without any explanation or any opinion on his own part.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Does he not admit that the Government owes the State $224,000?

Mr. HOLMAN. The Secretary of War states what I have read. He, of course, submits to the two Houses of Congress the report made to him, and raises no question in regard to it. He expresses no affirmation of the facts set forth.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. Does it not appear from that report that the General Government does owe the State of Florida at least $224,648.09 for expenses incurred in the suppression of Indian hostilities between the 1st day of December, 1855, and the 1st day of January, 1860?

Mr. BRADY. The Secretary of War makes the Judge-Advocate's report his report.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am simply calling attention to the facts, as my friend must see, that Thomas F. Barr, the Judge-Advocate of the Army, makes this report as the amount of the claim, and he makes the sum of the aggregate of the claim, the amount to be reported to Congress, $224,648.09. The Secretary of War expresses no opinion.

Then there is one other point.

It is stated in the preamble to this bill that the State of Florida had become indebted to the United States by the Government holding a certain portion of its bonds, I suppose for the benefit of some Indian tribe.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. Let me correct the gentleman from Indiana again. These bonds were for the purpose of suppressing Indian hostilities, for raising money to carry on this war, and the State deposited its bonds in the United States Treasury.

Mr. HOLMAN. Were not the bonds held for some one Indian tribe?

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. No, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. These were the bonds of the State of Florida——

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. On which money was raised to suppress the Indian hostilities.

Mr. HOLMAN. The United States advanced money to Florida on its bonds to the amount of $130,000?

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. And they represent the very money advanced to the State for the purpose of suppressing these hostilities?

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. That is what the report states.

Mr. HOLMAN. And it is proposed on the whole indebtedness that may be found due of the United States to the State of Florida the same rate of interest, 7 per cent., should be paid? Is that correct?

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, if that is correct the question is whether if it is proper that on the amount found due the State of Florida beyond the amount of those bonds this rate of interest, 7 per cent., should be allowed. Is it according to the practice of the Government to allow interest on claims at 7 per cent., or at any other per cent.? As to the interest paid to the United States by Florida on the bonds, of course if the United States was indebted to Florida to the amount of the bonds or a greater amount the United States to the amount of the interest on the bonds should pay the same interest.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. That would make no difference. The gentleman from Indiana starts out with the proposition that this House should not pay this money because the Secretary of War does not recommend it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will my friend allow me? He states it too strongly. I say it is subject for regret that the Secretary of War did not recommend the specific sum that ought to be paid.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. If the Secretary of War had made such a recommendation he would have gone outside the resolution by which he was called upon to act. In support of that statement I will read the resolution:

That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized to investigate, ascertain, and report to Congress as soon as practicable the amount of the claims of the State of Florida for expenditures made in suppressing Indian hostilities in that State between the 1st day of December, 1855, and the 1st day of January, 1860.

He was not required to make any recommendation. He was only required by that resolution to do just the identical thing he did do, to ascertain the amount of money that was the subject of controversy between the State of Florida and the Government of the United States, and report that to Congress.

Representing here the interests of the people of the State of Florida, I do not propose that the time which the rules of the House allow for the discussion of this bill shall be frittered away. Take the remarks of the gentleman from Indiana, those remarks which stopped the passage of this bill at the last session of Congress, and apply them to the facts of this case, and they are just as pertinent as the composition of a school-boy to the discussion of a constitutional or legal question. I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from Florida can not take me off the floor by that motion. My friend does not even put the case as strongly as his case ought to be put. I think the report might be construed as indicating the amount due, but the Secretary of War was only called on to "investigate, ascertain, and report to Congress" "the amount of the claim of the State of Florida."

Mr. DOUGHERTY. There has been a report.

Mr. HOLMAN. But my friend places stress upon the fact that the Secretary of War is called upon to report the amount of the claims.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. That is what he has done.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am putting a better construction upon that language for the gentleman's case than he puts upon it himself. Taking the language literally, it means simply that the Secretary is to report the amount of the claim of the State of Florida. Now, I am assuming——

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. The gentleman from Indiana has consumed his time; I had the floor, and I made a motion that the committee rise and report the bill to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion was not in order, because there are amendments pending.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman misapprehends me. I see he thinks that I wish to consume the time that could be readily done. I do not wish to do anything of the kind; I simply want to have this matter distinctly understood by the House. I see that the chairman of the Committee on Claims, from which this report comes, is not in his seat——

Mr. DOUGHERTY. I made the report.

Mr. HOLMAN. But the chairman of the committee is not in his seat; and if such a large sum of money is to be appropriated I wish that the facts shall be distinctly understood.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. Will the gentleman from Indiana permit me a question?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. Has the gentleman from Indiana read this report of the Secretary of War?

Mr. DOUGHERTY. No; he has not.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have it before me, and have read it. The gentleman [Mr. DOUGHERTY] has got to treat me a little more courteously, or there may be some delay in this matter.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. I disclaim all intention to treat the gentleman with discourtesy. I have the highest respect for him.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, certainly—pending this bill. [Laughter.] Now, Mr. Chairman, if a further amendment is in order, I shall move to strike out certain words.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the second section.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. What is the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN]?

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to strike out these words:

And also any further sum that may be found to be due said State on any other account.

I think Congress ought to determine the sum to be paid.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Was the vote last taken upon the committee's amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the first amendment pending to be one offered by the committee.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. That is correct. There were two amendments. Now I ask for a vote upon the second. I will state that these amendments are merely verbal.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair misstated the amendment last voted upon in stating that it was to the second section. The first of the pending amendments is to the first section. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in lines 18 and 19 the words "upon said claim or claims."

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to offer an amendment to that so as to make it read—

Upon said claim or claims to the extent of said bonds.

The CHAIRMAN. The rule requires that amendments shall be in writing, and shall be sent to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Then the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] means that they shall only pay us $132,000?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, as to the interest at 7 per cent., that it shall only be equal to the interest the State has paid.

Mr. REED. I think we ought to get a percentage away from the State of Florida in some way, if we can. It seems a shame to let a bill be paid simply because it is due. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, my amendment applies to the interest on the money. I am willing that the interest on any sum due to Florida shall be at the rate of 7 per cent. up to the amount of the interest paid by the State at 7 per cent. on bonds, because the State of Florida, I suppose, paid that interest, and at that rate, but I am not willing the Government shall pay interest upon the balance at 7 per cent. I do not think that, according to our practice, interest ought to be allowed. It is not allowed to private parties and ought not to be allowed to States if not to private parties, but up to the amount of the interest on the bonds the United States should pay the same rate the State of Florida has paid.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first amendment to the first section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in section 1, lines 9, 10, and 11, the words "and also any further sums that may be found to be due the said State on any other account."

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Mr. Chairman, I hope that amendment will not prevail.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. I would like to explain what accounts the report alludes to when it says that the General Government is indebted to the State of Florida on other accounts besides the Indian accounts. By an act of Congress passed March 3, 1845, entitled "An act supplementary to the act for the admission of Florida and Iowa into the Union, and for other purposes," provision was made that 5 per cent. of the cash proceeds of the public lands sold in the State of Florida should be paid to that State. On that account the Government now owes the State, as will appear from the records here in Washington, more than $40,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. But the general law provides for the settlement of all that.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. No, sir.

Mr. PLUMB. I would like to ask the gentleman from Florida one question: whether any part of the money proposed to be paid under this bill is for the expenses of the Seminole war?

Mr. DOUGHERTY. All of it.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. Well, it is not for the expenses of the Seminole war proper—the war of 1836–'40–'42—but it is to pay the expenses of suppressing Indian hostilities; and the Indians engaged in those hostilities were the Seminoles, which is what my colleague [Mr. DOUGHERTY] means to say.

Mr. PLUMB. I refer to that Seminole war in which the troops of the United States were sent down into Florida for the purpose of recapturing and bringing back fugitive slaves. Is this that war?

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Oh, no.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. Nothing of that kind.

Mr. STORM. There never was such a war. [Laughter.]

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. I do not remember any such war.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. HOLMAN, it was not agreed to; there being—ayes 36, noes 92.

The question then recurred on the following amendment of Mr. HOLMAN; which was read:

At the end of section 1 insert the words "to the extent of said bonds."

Mr. HOLMAN. The effect of this amendment is that this remuneration to the State for interest shall only be made to the extent to which the State may have paid interest on these bonds.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. "May have paid!" It has been and is paying it. I hope the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The gentleman from Indiana will allow me to suggest that his amendment does not mean what he means it to mean. The amendment provides that interest shall be allowed "to the extent of said bonds;" that is, to the extent of the whole principal of the bonds, which is what the gentleman does not mean.

Mr. HOLMAN. No; it is not intended to convey, and does not convey, that meaning. It means to the extent that interest may have been paid on those bonds. But if the gentleman wishes it clearer it can be made to read "to the extent of the interest paid on said bonds."

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment as modified, there were—ayes 34, noes 78.

Mr. STEELE. No quorum.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. STEELE and Mr. DOUGHERTY were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 11, noes 101.

Mr. STEELE. I see there is a quorum present, though not voting. I will not compel the House to wait for the vote of a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. On this question the ayes are 11, the noes 101. The amendment is rejected.

The Clerk will now read an amendment reported by the Committee on Claims.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 8 of section 2 strike out the words "and to pay such sums so ascertained due the said State," and insert "and shall adjust and settle the claim of the State therefor, and shall pay such sum as may be ascertained to be due the State thereon."

Mr. DOUGHERTY. This is an amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. All the amendments have now been acted on.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. I move that the committee rise and report the bill back to the House as amended.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HAMMOND reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 3877) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to settle and pay the claim of the State of Florida on account of expenditures made in suppressing Indian hostilities, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments.

The SPEAKER. The question is, first, on agreeing to the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. DOUGHERTY. I ask that the amendments may be voted on as a whole.

The SPEAKER. If no separate vote be demanded, the question will be put on agreeing to the amendments in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. PERKINS. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] offered in Committee of the Whole an amendment which was voted down. I think the gentleman from Florida would now permit that amendment to be again offered; and with that amendment, I believe there will be no objection to the bill.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. I demand the previous question upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The previous question was ordered.

The question being taken on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time, there were—ayes 91, noes 30.

Mr. PERKINS and Mr. BRUMM. No quorum.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. PERKINS and Mr. DOUGHERTY were appointed.

The House proceeded to divide. Before the count was concluded—

Mr. DOUGHERTY said: Mr. Speaker, it is suggested to me by several gentlemen that the bill at one point is somewhat indefinite in its phraseology; and if it be in order, I am willing to accept an amendment offered, I believe, by the gentleman from Indiana. The amendment, as I understand, was to strike out——

Mr. PERKINS. What we desire is to strike out the words "and also any further sums that may be found to be due the said State on any other account." If these words be stricken from the bill, I think there will be no objection to its passage.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would suggest that the other amendment restricting the interest to be paid is still more important and ought to be adopted.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. I desire to suggest to the gentleman from Indiana that the State has been obliged to pay interest, not only upon the amount of the bonds, but upon the balance of the debt over and above the bonds.

Mr. PERKINS. If I am permitted to offer the amendments I have suggested I will withdraw my demand for a quorum.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. I ask by unanimous consent that the amendment striking out those words be agreed to.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. PERKINS. I now withdraw my demand for a quorum.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and, being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DOUGHERTY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

ADVANCES TO THE UNITED STATES.

The SPEAKER. The Committee on Claims is still under call.

Mr. TRIGG. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of taking up and considering a bill (H. R. 2498) directing the Secretary of the Treasury to examine and settle the accounts of certain States and the city of Baltimore growing out of moneys expended by said States and the city of Baltimore for military purposes during the war of 1812.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. MCCREARY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2498) directing the Secretary of the Treasury to examine and settle the accounts of certain States and the city of Baltimore growing out of moneys expended by said States and the city of Baltimore for military purposes during the war of 1812. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be authorized and instructed to examine the accounts between the United States and the States of New York, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Virginia, and South Carolina, and between the United States and the city of Baltimore, growing out of moneys expended by such States and by the city of Baltimore for military purposes in the war of 1812 with Great Britain, and apply in each examination, computation of interest, and settlement the provisions and principles of the twelfth section of the act of March 3, 1857, entitled "An act making appropriations for certain civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1858," and that there be paid to such States and to the city of Baltimore any sums that shall so be found to be due them at the time of payment, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, required in such settlements to observe the act entitled "An act prescribing the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury in certain cases therein named," approved March 25, 1870, and make the deductions as therein required.

The Clerk read the amendment of the committee, as follows:

Insert after the end of the bill:

"Also making a deduction as of the 8th day of July, 1870, of the amount of principal and interest due at that date upon any bonds of the said States, matured or unmatured, held by the United States, surrendering said bonds so far as as they are included in said settlement: And provided also, That the balance remaining due of the direct tax apportioned to the State of Virginia by the direct tax act of August 5, 1861, be held and treated as a proper set-off against the claims of the State of Virginia in the adjustment herein required, unless Congress shall otherwise provide by general law, releasing all claims for said direct tax or refunding all payments of such tax heretofore paid."

Mr. TRIGG. Mr. Chairman, I only desire to state that this bill has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Claims. There has been no division in committee on it, as it simply provides for settlement at the Treasury of balances of money advanced by these States to the Government. It provides for all proper offsets. I do not think it necessary to make any statement to the House about it unless some gentleman wishes to ask a question. I move the House agree to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. BRAGG. I desire to move that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union report the bill back with the recommendation it be referred to the Committee on War Claims. I refer the Chairman to Rule XI, which provides that claims arising out of any war in which the United States has been engaged shall be referred to the Committee on War Claims.

These claims seem to have been referred to the Committee on Claims instead of to the Committee on War Claims, which is the proper committee to have considered them.

Mr. TRIGG. I will state for the information of the gentleman from Wisconsin that this is in no sense a war claim. It was referred to the Committee on Claims, and if it had been a war claim in any sense it would not have been considered by that committee. It is for money advanced by certain States and the city of Baltimore to the Government.

Mr. BRAGG. In the war of 1812.

Mr. TRIGG. In the war of 1812 and 1814, and the House has acted upon the matter by reference of the bill to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BRAGG. It seems to me under the rules of the House it properly belongs to another committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. TUCKER. I think the gentleman from Wisconsin intends to move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that it be referred to the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. BRAGG. That is my motion.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 15, noes 92.

So the motion was disagreed to.

The question recurred on the amendment of the committee; which was agreed to.

Mr. TRIGG. I move that the bill be reported to the House with the recommendation it do pass as amended.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope some amendment will be made as to the amount involved—as to what amount will be due to these States if this should become a law; and, further, I should like to know whether the claims of all these States were not adjusted some years ago?

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Chairman, substantially this same bill was reported by the Judiciary Committee of the House at the last Congress. Now, as to how much is due these States it is impossible to say; but, so far as Virginia is concerned, the whole question turns right here:

The Government borrowed of these different States and the city of Baltimore, during the war of 1812, large sums of money to conduct the war. When it paid certain amounts upon the debt from time to time, upon the books of the Government of the United States the amounts so paid were credited upon the principal of the debt, and not upon the accrued interest.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The hour for the consideration of bills has expired.

The Committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MCCREARY reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 2498) had come to no resolution thereon.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HEARD. I call up the special order fixed for to-day.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill called up by the gentleman from Missouri.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8976) to incorporate the Washington Cable Railway Company of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BELMONT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to raise the question of consideration for the purpose of moving that the House go into Committee of the Whole to take up and consider the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York raises the question of consideration.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The question is not debatable except by unanimous consent.

Mr. HEARD. I only desire to say that on the second Monday of this month the House, by an almost unanimous vote, fixed this day for the consideration of the bill I have called up, and I hope it will not be taken up by any other business, especially by an appropriation bill upon which there is no danger of an adjournment without consideration.

Mr. BELMONT. I would like to state that for some time past the diplomatic and consular bill has been ready for consideration and it is later than usual for such a bill to be brought before the House. It seems to me that this is not a special order fixed for to-day, but the order simply provided that there should be a postponement of the consideration of the bill the gentleman desires to bring up. Not being a special order, and regarding it as important that the appropriation bill should be taken up and sent to the Senate without delay, I therefore raise the question of consideration.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I hope I may be permitted to say a word, possibly in the way of debate on the motion. While it is true the House did fix a day, and this day, for the consideration of the cable bill, it did so knowing that if appropriation bills came up the question of consideration could be raised.

Mr. HEARD. There is no doubt of it.

Mr. BLOUNT. And it seems to me that with three appropriation bills pressing, and the District of Columbia having a day in each month fixed for the consideration of its bills, it would not be a wise thing for the House to do to set aside the consideration of an appropriation bill to take up and consider the bill referred to by the gentleman from Missouri, which can be taken up on any District day that the committee chooses.

Mr. BURROWS. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURROWS. Is this a continuing order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that this bill was under consideration in Committee of the Whole House on the second Monday of the present month, the 10th of January, and was reported from the Committee to the House with the recommendation that its further consideration be postponed until to-day. It is not a continuing order.

But the Chair will state in further response to the gentleman from Michigan that it is always in the power of the Committee on the District of Columbia to call up, on the day assigned to it under the rules of the House, any measure of which it has charge.

Mr. BURROWS. Therefore if this bill is dispossessed to-day, by taking up the appropriation bill, it will lose its place?

The SPEAKER. It will stand with the other business of the Committee on the District of Columbia to be called up on its day.

Mr. BURROWS. It is a little remarkable, it seems to me, that the appropriation bills should be found pressing to-day when they have been reported for a long time and have been resting quietly on the Calendar.

Mr. BLOUNT. It is not any more remarkable than that there should be so much urgency in taking up this bill and considering it to-day when the Committee on the District of Columbia have it in their power to call it up at any time when they have the floor.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House proceed to consider the bill the title of which has just been read?

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 109, noes 54.

Mr. BLOUNT and Mr. BELMONT demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLOUNT. There appears to be some misunderstanding as to the title of the bill which the gentleman from New York wishes to reach.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the gentleman from Missouri calls up the bill known as the traction railway bill, and against it the gentleman from New York raises the question of consideration. The question is, will the House proceed to consider that bill.

Mr. BELMONT. Mr. Speaker, I think it would be proper to state the title of the bill which I shall call up if this motion is not adopted. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The title of the bill has been stated.

Mr. McCREARY. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. DUNHAM and others demanded the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been demanded, and the Clerk will proceed with the roll-call.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 160, nays 74, not voting 83; as follows:

So the House agreed to consider the bill.

Mr. LORE. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the names.

Objection was made.

The following additional pair was announced:

Mr. LITTLE with Mr. STONE, of Missouri, on this bill.

The result of the vote was then announced, as above stated.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. KELLEY, for two days, on account of important business.

To Mr. GLOVER, for this day, on account of sickness.

WASHINGTON CABLE RAILWAY OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The House proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8976) to incorporate the Washington Cable Railway Company of the District of Columbia.

Mr. HEARD. I desire, if in order, to offer a substitute for the bill, and when the substitute shall have been read, if it be permitted to be read, I shall then desire to explain the differences from the original draught proposed to be made by the substitute. I move to strike out all after the enacting clause in the bill and insert as a substitute therefor what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read the proposed substitute, as follows:

SUBSTITUTE FOR H. R. 8976.

A bill to incorporate the Washington Cable Railway Company of the District of Columbia.

Be it enacted, &c., That William M. Galt, Albert W. Fletcher, Charles Payson, Lawrence Gardner, James E. Fitch, William Dickson, Charles J. Bell, William W. Dudley, A. T. Britton, O. G. Staples, E. K. Johnson, and B. H. Warner, all of Washington, D. C.; William Hanway, of Maryland; John R. Read, of Philadelphia; William Gladding, Charles E. Henry, and George M. Roads, of Pennsylvania; and John W. Hall, of Baltimore; and their associates, successors, and assigns be, and they are hereby, created a body corporate under the name of the Washington Cable Railway Company of the District of Columbia, with authority to construct and lay down a single or double track railway, with the necessary switches, turnouts, and other mechanical devices, and sewer connections necessary to operate the same by cable or electric power, in the District of Columbia, through and along the following avenues and streets, with the privilege of entering the Capitol grounds under such restrictions as the Architect of the Capitol and the engineer commissioner of the District may prescribe: Commencing at the corner of Georgia avenue and Eleventh street southeast; thence along Eleventh street to M street; thence along M street to Tenth street; thence along Tenth street to Georgia avenue; thence along Georgia avenue to Eleventh street, with single track; thence north along Eleventh street to B street; thence west along B street to North Capitol street; thence along North Capitol street to C street; thence along C street to First street northwest; thence from First street along Indiana avenue to D street; thence west along D street to Fourteenth street northwest; thence north on Fourteenth street to New York avenue; thence along New York avenue to Fifteenth street and Pennsylvania avenue; thence west on Pennsylvania avenue to Seventeenth street; thence south on Seventeenth street to G street; thence west on G street to Twenty-fourth street, double track; thence north on Twenty-fourth street to K street; thence west on K street to Twenty-sixth street; also west on G street from Twenty-fourth to Twenty-sixth streets, and north on Twenty-sixth street to K street, single tracks; west on K street from Twenty-sixth street across Rock Creek on K street bridge, and along Water street to Thirtieth street, double tracks; thence north on Thirtieth street to Stoddard street; thence west on Stoddard street to High street; thence north on High street to T street; thence west on T street to Thirty-fifth street; thence south on Thirty-fifth street to N street; thence east on N street to Thirty-first street; thence south on Thirty-first street to Water street, and east on Water street to Thirtieth-street, single tracks; with privilege of extending with double track along the prolongation of T street, West Washington, called The New Cut Road to Drovers' Rest; also, with privilege of extending a double-track line from Eleventh street southeast, along Pennsylvania avenue to the Eastern Branch, and across the same to the District line. Also, commencing at P and Water streets southwest, along Water to Twelfth street; along Twelfth to B street northwest, with double tracks. Also along Twelfth from B street northwest to Boundary, thence along Boundary to Thirteenth street, thence along Thirteenth to B street northwest, thence along B to Twelfth street, with single track; with privilege of extending with double track along Thirteenth street beyond Boundary to Whitney avenue, and thence to Soldiers' Home. Also, commencing at Twelfth and B street northwest, along B to Sixth street, along Sixth to Louisiana avenue northwest, with double track, also along Sixth to S northwest, along S to Eighteenth street, along Eighteenth to T street, along T to Sixth street and Boundary, along Sixth street to S street; also, along Boundary to Fifth street northwest, along Fifth to Louisiana avenue, and along Louisiana avenue to Sixth street, with single track, making all proper connections so as to make said lines continuous; provided that when said lines coincide with the duly authorized lines of any other duly incorporated street railway of the District of Columbia, said Washington Cable Railway shall lay separate and independent tracks in the original construction of the said lines whenever in the judgment of the engineer commissioner of the District it shall be deemed by him possible and practicable so to do. Whenever the foregoing route or routes may coincide with the duly authorized route or routes of any other duly incorporated street railway company in the District of Columbia, either or both companies may use the same tracks, when on account of the width of the streets, or for other sufficient reason, it shall be deemed by the engineer commissioner of the District to be necessary, and in such case they may use such tracks in common, upon such fair and equitable terms as may be agreed upon by said companies; and in the event said companies fail to agree upon equitable terms, either of said companies may apply, by petition, to the supreme court of the District of Columbia, which shall hear and determine the matter in due form of law, and adjudge to the proper party the amount of compensation to be paid therefor. Said corporation is authorized and empowered to propel its cars on such other lines as it shall coincide with by cable power, or such other motive power as it shall use to propel its own cars with on the routes prescribed in this act, and may repair and construct such portions of its road as may be upon the line or route or routes of any other road thus used; and in case of any disagreement regarding such construction or repairs with any company whose line is thus used, such disagreement may be heard and determined summarily upon the application of either road to any court in said District having common-law jurisdiction. Said company shall receive a rate of fare not exceeding 5 cents for each passenger for each continuous ride between all points of its main and branch lines, but may sell tickets in packages of six each for 25 cents per package, and Congress may at any time change and regulate the rate of fare to be charged. Said road shall be deemed real estate and its franchise and property be liable to taxation, as other real estate and personal property in the District of Columbia, and its property and franchise shall be liable to sale for non-payment of the same. Said railway shall be constructed of good materials and in a substantial manner, with the rails of the most approved patterns, laid upon an even surface with the pavement of the street, imbedded in concrete, with the gauge to correspond with that of other city railroads, all to be approved by the engineer commissioner of the District. The tracks of said railway, the space between the tracks, and 2 feet beyond the outer rails thereof, which this franchise is intended to cover, shall be at all times kept by said corporation well paved and in good order, at its own expense, and subject to the approval of the engineer commissioner aforesaid. It shall be lawful for said corporation, its successors or assigns, to operate its said road by cable or electric power, and to make all needful and convenient trenches and excavations and sewer connections in any of said streets or places where said corporation may have the right to construct and operate its road, and to place in such trenches and excavations all the needful and convenient devices and machinery for operating said railroad in the manner and by the means aforesaid. It shall also be lawful for said corporation, its successors or assigns, to erect and maintain at such convenient and suitable points along its lines as may seem most desirable to the board of directors of said corporation, and subject to the approval of the engineer commisioner of the District, an engine-house or houses, boiler-house, and all other buildings necessary for the successful operation of a cable-motor railroad. The rate of speed on said road shall not exceed nine miles an hour, under a penalty of $50 for each offense, recoverable by the commissioners of the District by suit in any court of competent jurisdiction; and the main line of said road shall be completed within two and its branches within three years from the passage of this act. And in case the incorporators as named in this bill, or their assigns, associates, and successors shall, at the expiration of two years from the passage of this act, have failed or neglected to have completed said main line, then the President of the United States may name eighteen other citizens of the United States, who shall, as to the uncompleted portions of said lines, be entitled to complete the said road under the said restrictions as are provided in the bill, to the exclusion of the said incorporators named in this section. The main line being that portion of said lines lying between Georgetown or West Washington and the Navy Yard, at corner of Eleventh and M streets southeast, and running in the general direction of east and west.

SEC. 2. The capital stock of said company shall not exceed $3,000,000 and be not less than $2,000,000, in shares of $50 each; said company shall require the subscribers to the capital stock to pay in cash, to the treasurer appointed by the corporators, the amounts severally subscribed by them, as follows, namely: Ten per cent. at the time of subscribing and 5 per cent. each thirty days thereafter, until 50 per cent. thereof shall have been paid; the balance of such subscription to be paid at such times and such amounts as the board of directors may require, and no subscription shall be deemed valid unless the 10 per centum thereof shall be paid at the time of subscribing, as hereinbefore provided. And if any stockholder shall refuse or neglect to pay any instalment as aforesaid, or as required by a resolution of the board of directors, after reasonable notice of the same, the said board of directors may sell at public auction, to the highest bidder, so many shares of his stock as shall pay said instalment (and the highest bidder shall be taken to be the person who offers to purchase the least number of shares for the assessment due), under such general regulations as may be adopted in the by-laws of said company; but no stock shall be sold for less than the total assessments due and payable, or said body may sue and collect the same from any delinquent subscriber in any court of competent jurisdiction. The said company shall place first-class cars on said railways, with all modern improvements for the convenience and comfort of passengers, and shall run cars thereon as often as the public convenience may require: Provided, That no cars shall be run without a conductor for the collection of fares. The said company shall buy, lease, or construct passenger-rooms, ticket offices, workshops, depots, lands, and buildings as they deem necessary, at such points along its line as may be approved by the engineer commissioner of the District, and as the business of the railway and the convenience of the public may require. And the said corporation shall have the right to issue bonds, secured by mortgage of its franchise and property, real and personal; and the said bonds to be issued shall not exceed $40,000 for each mile of construction of single track. Within thirty days after the passage of this act, the corporators named in the first section, their associates, successors or assigns, or a majority of them, or if any refuse or neglect to act, then a majority of the remainder shall cause books of subscription to the capital stock of said company to be opened, and kept open, in some convenient and accessible place in the District of Columbia, from 9 o'clock in the forenoon till 5 o'clock in the afternoon, for a period to be fixed by said corporators, not less than two days (unless the whole stock shall be sooner subscribed for); and said corporators shall give public notice, by advertisement in the daily papers published in the city of Washington, of the time when and the place where said books shall be opened; and subscribers upon said books to the capital stock of the company shall be held to be stockholders: Provided, That every subscriber shall pay, at the time of subscribing, 10 per cent. of the amount by him subscribed, to the treasurer appointed by the corporators, or his subscription shall be null and void: Provided further, That nothing shall be received in payment of the 10 per cent. at the time of subscribing, except lawful money or certified checks from any established national banking-house. And when the books of subscription to the capital stock of said company shall be closed, the corporators named in the first section, their associates, successors or assigns, or a majority of them, and in case any of them refuse or neglect to act, then a majority of the remainder shall, within twenty days thereafter, call the first meeting of the stockholders of said company, to meet within ten days thereafter, for the choice of directors, of which public notice shall be given for five days in two public newspapers published in the city of Washington, and by written personal notice to be mailed to the address of each stockholder by the clerk of the corporation; and in all meetings of the stockholders each share shall entitle the holder to one vote, to be given in person or by proxy.

SEC. 3. That the government and direction of the affairs of the company shall be vested in the board of directors, nine in number, who shall be stockholders of record, and who shall hold their office for one year, and till others are duly elected and qualified to take their places as directors; and the said directors (a majority of whom shall be a quorum) shall elect one of their number to be president of the board, who shall be president of the company; and they shall also choose a vice-president, a secretary, and a treasurer, who shall give a bond, with surety, to said company, in such sum as the said directors may require for the faithful discharge of his trust. In the case of a vacancy in the board of directors by the death, resignation, or otherwise, of any director, the vacancy occasioned thereby shall be filled by the remaining directors. The directors shall have power to make and prescribe such by-laws, rules, and regulations as they shall deem needful and proper, touching the disposition and management of the stock, property, estate, and effects of the company, not contrary to the charter or to the laws of the United States and the ordinances of the District of Columbia. There shall be an annual meeting of the stockholders for choice of directors, to be held at such time and place, under such conditions, and upon such notice as the said company in their by-laws may prescribe; and said directors shall annually make a report in writing of their doings to the stockholders. Said company shall have at all times the free and uninterrupted use of the roadway; and if any person or persons shall willfully, mischievously, and unnecessarily obstruct or impede the passage of the cars of said railway with a vehicle or vehicles, or otherwise, or in any manner molest or interfere with passengers or operatives while in transit, or destroy or injure the cars of said railway, or depots, stations, or other property belonging to said railway, the person or persons so offending shall forfeit and pay for each offense not less than $25 nor more than $100 to said company, to be recovered as other fines and penalties of said District, and shall remain liable, in addition to said penalty, for any loss or damage occasioned by his or her or their acts as aforesaid. No person shall be prohibited the right to travel on the cars of said road, or ejected therefrom by the company's employés, for any other cause than that of being drunk, disorderly, unclean, or contagiously diseased, for the use of obscene or profane language, or refusing to pay the legal fare, or to comply with the lawful regulations of the company. The said Washington Cable Railway Company of the District of Columbia shall have the right of way across such other railways as are now in operation within the limits of the lines granted by this act, and is hereby authorized to construct its said road across such other railways: Provided, That it shall not interrupt the travel of such other railways in such construction. The principal offices of said company shall always be situated in the city of Washington, and all books and papers relating to the business of said company shall be kept thereat and open at all times to the inspection of the stockholders. The meeting of stockholders and directors shall be held at said office. The book in which transfers of stock shall be recorded shall be closed for the purpose of such transfer thirty days before the annual election.

SEC. 4. This act may at any time be altered, amended, or repealed by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. McCREARY. I desire to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. To what does the gentleman propose the amendment—to the original bill or to the substitute?

Mr. McCREARY. To the substitute.

The Clerk read the proposed amendment, as follows:

After the word "act" in section 1, line 125, insert:

And if work is not commenced and prosecuted in good faith on the main line in six months after the passage of this act, then the privileges and powers granted herein to said corporation shall be void.

Mr. HEARD. I claim the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HEARD] is entitled to the floor. But the gentleman did not rise after the reading of the substitute, and the gentleman from Kentucky has offered his amendment.

Mr. HEARD. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] has an amendment which he wishes to offer as well as the gentleman from Kentucky. I promise those gentlemen that before calling the previous question I shall yield to them that they may offer their amendments. I will try to yield to the gentlemen within the hour.

Mr. HOPKINS. I desire to ask the Chair a question. Does not the substitute cover provisions which were not considered in Committee of the Whole? And if so, is the consideration of the substitute now in order in the House?

The SPEAKER. The committee after partially considering the bill reported it back to the House with the recommendation that its further consideration be postponed until to-day, and that report was agreed to. The bill, therefore, has come up for consideration under that order of the House.

Mr. NELSON. I ask consent of the gentleman from Missouri to offer two amendments.

Mr. HEARD. Not now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri has the floor and declines to yield.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. I understand that the last time this bill was under consideration it was being considered in Committee of the Whole House by sections. The gentleman from Missouri has now offered a substitute containing several sections. I wish to know whether that substitute should not be considered in Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. When the bill was last under consideration it was in Committee of the Whole House, and was being considered, as the Chair recollects, by sections. But the Committee of the Whole reported it back to the House with the recommendation that the further consideration of the bill be postponed till to-day. That was agreed to, and the bill is now in the House and is not being considered as in Committee of the Whole; but it is being considered in the House, and debate may be closed and amendments prevented by ordering the previous question at any time. It will not be considered by sections except by consent.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent that amendments may be submitted and that all may be considered pending.

Mr. ROWELL. I object. I understand only one amendment can be submitted to the substitute, and that has been offered.

Mr. HEARD. Let me make this statement for the benefit of the gentleman from Indiana, who is no doubt a much older and better parliamentarian than I am, and of other members here. The substitute is now before the House for consideration, and if it prove acceptable they will, when an opportunity is offered, as I shall try to give an opportunity before I leave the floor, vote approvingly for the substitute. If, however, the House should decline to accept the substitute, that would open the bill to amendment. I hope the friends of the bill and those who desire legislation in this direction during this session will determine to take the substitute as presented.

Mr. NELSON. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. HEARD. Yes, sir.

Mr. NELSON. Will you not allow any amendments to the substitute?

Mr. FARQUHAR. Only one amendment to the substitute is in order.

Mr. NELSON. I deny that. One amendment can be offered to one part of the substitute and another to another. I am friendly to this bill, but if you do not propose to let us amend it we will have to oppose the whole measure.

Mr. HEARD. With the indulgence of the House I shall be glad to ask attention to the changes proposed by the substitute offered to-day from the original draught, which was being acted upon or considered when this bill was last before this body for consideration. I have no hesitation in saying, Mr. Speaker, that the substitute as presented to-day embodies amendments which were suggested by those who were opposed to the bill in its then form, but who were friendly to the bill if it should be amended. I think those gentlemen will agree with me that it is now, in many respects, a better bill than the House was then considering.

I ask permission to call attention to some of the changes which were then regarded as vital, and which the friends of the bill now propose. In the first place, in the original draught of the bill permission was not asked for the company to make the necessary sewer connection in making their excavation. Gentlemen will observe in the substitute, printed in italics, other changes made. The changes from the original draught are shown by the italics in the printed substitute.

The second amendment proposes to put in after the word "cable" the words "or electric," so that in case electricity becomes at any time hereafter the favorite motor for the purpose of propelling street cars it may be availed of by this company. I will state for the information of the House that this permission is asked also by every company which has an application now pending before Congress for leave to cable its road.

The third alteration is this: In the original draught permission was asked to enter the Capitol Grounds on the north side, for the convenience of members of Congress and of the public, under such restrictions as should be prescribed by the Architect of the Capitol. That is changed so as to make the entry subject also to the control of the engineer commissioner of the District.

I come now to the proposed changes in the route, in regard to which I will speak briefly. Since this bill was first before the House for consideration the officers of some of the horse railroad companies, who then held that this system was impracticable, have changed their minds and are now before the House asking permission to cable their roads, and in that connection they insist that the former provision in the bill authorizing this cable road to use portions of their tracks jointly with them would interfere with their rights in case they should ultimately determine to change to cable roads. While we are not prepared to concede that, yet, with the view of saving all their rights and if possible avoiding opposition from them, the friends of this bill now propose to keep clear of their tracks altogether, and instead of seeking to use two miles of the track of these existing railroads (as some enemies of this bill claim), it is not now proposed to take a single foot of existing track, and the changes in the route are made principally to avoid the necessity of using any track in common with existing roads.

The maps presented here to-day show the outlines of the route as proposed in the substitute now offered for consideration, and the committee—I should not say the committee, because the bill not being before the committee but before the House it was not competent for the committee to prepare the substitute—but the friends of the bill, both in the committee and outside of it, bring the measure before the House in this form, and, by condensation, by improvement, and by meeting the more important objections heretofore made to the bill in its original form, they hope they have presented a measure which will be acceptable to the good sense and the judgment of this body, and in such shape as will guarantee action to-day.

I pass now from the matter of route to call attention to an amendment in line 59 of the first section, which reads as follows:

Provided, That when said lines coincide with the duly authorized lines of any other duly incorporated street railway of the District of Columbia said Washington Cable Railway shall lay separate and independent tracks in the original construction of the said lines whenever in the judgment of the engineer commissioner of the District it shall be deemed by him possible and practicable so to do.

The next amendment to which I call attention is in line 90, and relates to the fare which the company may charge. It will be remembered—I desire to be perfectly candid with the House upon this point—it will be remembered that when this bill was before the House for consideration an amendment was proposed by the gentleman from New York, Mr. PARKER, fixing the rate of fare at 4 cents. That is not incorporated in the substitute, but there is a provision that the fare shall not exceed 5 cents, and the substitute also provides in express terms, in that immediate connection, that Congress shall have the right to regulate and reduce the fare at its option.

The language of the provision is, "and Congress may at any time change and regulate the rate of fare to be charged."

Mr. MILLS. Why not regulate it now?

Mr. HEARD. We do propose to regulate this in common with the fare of all the other railroads whenever the time comes to do that, but it was not believed that this House desired to make this company do superior work for an inferior price. Therefore we did not undertake directly to regulate the fare, but we inserted this provision, which puts it in the power of Congress at any time to regulate or reduce the fare whenever, in its judgment, that should be done. It was not supposed by anybody that there was any desire on the part of Congress to discriminate against this company or in favor of other railroad companies in this District. I again ask attention to the express language, which will be found in line 90, "and Congress may at any time change and regulate the rate of fare to be charged."

Mr. MILLS. But in fact Congress never does reduce the rate in such cases.

Mr. HEARD. Well, we did not believe that Congress desired to discriminate against this particular company by requiring it to do better work than the other roads for a less rate of fare, but we inserted this provision, so that whenever Congress sees fit to regulate or reduce the fares charged upon the other roads, it can include this one also, or can deal with this separately if it so desires.

Mr. BURROWS. Then it is provided that six tickets shall be sold for a quarter.

Mr. HEARD. That is provided for.

Mr. CRISP. The gentleman from Missouri will allow me to ask what is the object of putting in this language: "But may sell tickets in packages of six each for 25 cents per package."

Mr. HEARD. I will say to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] with all candor that I regard the language he has just read as surplusage, for the reason that the company might sell tickets at that rate if they wanted to without any language of this kind.

Mr. CRISP. I supposed so.

Mr. HEARD. I do not intend to take the position that the language the gentleman has just read imposes any obligation upon the company; so far as that is concerned it might as well be stricken out. But the whole matter as to the regulation and reduction of fares is left in the hands of Congress.

A MEMBER. The word "may" should read "shall."

Mr. HEARD. I presume the word should be "shall."

Mr. CRISP. Will the gentleman object to inserting the word "shall" instead of "may?"

Mr. HEARD. I will not object at the proper time to an amendment of that kind. It can be made, I apprehend, by unanimous consent.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Why not ask unanimous consent now?

Mr. HEARD. At the proper time I will yield to have the amendment made by unanimous consent.

Mr. ROWELL. I suggest that it be done right now.

Mr. HEARD. I have no objection to that. I will ask unanimous consent that the amendment just suggested be made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a right to modify his substitute in any way he sees proper before the House acts on it.

Mr. HEARD. Then, Mr. Speaker, in order to satisfy the wish of a number of gentlemen, which appears to me a just one, I will modify my substitute by striking out the word "may" and inserting "shall."

Mr. CRISP. It will require a little more than that.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. The word "but" preceding "may," in line 90, should be changed to "and."

Mr. HEARD. I will proceed with my remarks, with the permission of the House, and I pledge the gentleman from Georgia that before moving the previous question I will see that the proper amendment to the effect he has indicated is made.

Mr. CRISP. It will require something more than the change of the word "may."

Mr. HEARD. Very well; I will take the judgment of the gentleman from Georgia on that point.

Mr. CRISP. We do not wish to convey the idea that they must charge that much, but that they shall not charge more.

Mr. HEARD. I will consult the gentleman from Georgia on that point.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in line 26 of the second section, it is provided——

Mr. BAYNE. Before the gentleman leaves the first section, I would like to interrupt him to inquire whether he will not modify that section by inserting after the word "aforesaid," in line 113, the words, "and such sewer connections shall have such traps or other devices as may be required by the engineer commissioner."

Mr. HEARD. I hope the gentleman will not insist on that, for the reason that the entire construction of this road is to be subject to the direction and control of the engineer commissioner of the District, who, we have the right to assume, will see that all these things are done in the best possible way.

Mr. BAYNE. I would like to have pointed out to me the provision of the substitute which gives the engineer commissioner that supervisory control.

Mr. HEARD. Well, I hope the gentleman will not consume my time further just now.

Mr. BAYNE. I find nothing of that sort in the proposition.

Mr. LONG. I think it is there.

Mr. HEARD. I desire to get through with my statement, and then, so far as time permits, I will yield in a fair way to other gentlemen.

Mr. Speaker, I will call attention now to a matter which was regarded of much importance by some members on this floor when this bill was first considered. It was then insisted that at least 50 per cent. of the capital stock of this company should be paid in within a reasonable time from the beginning of operations under the charter. This substitute provides in lines 6, 7, and 8, of section 2, that 10 per cent. of the capital stock shall be paid in "at the time of subscribing, and 5 per cent. each thirty days thereafter until 50 per cent. thereof shall have been paid." I desire to say that the most valuable property in this city to-day, the Georgetown and Washington Railroad—which, I may say by way of parenthesis, is the most potent factor in opposition to this cable enterprise, and naturally so, perhaps—that company, which has been in existence fifteen or sixteen years has, up to this date, as I am informed, paid in but 30 per cent. of its capital stock. This substitute proposes that this new company shall pay in within four months from its organization as large a proportion of its capital stock as this old company, the best property in the city, has paid in during the course of fifteen years, and that in eight months—perhaps before one car has moved upon its tracks—50 per cent. of the capital stock shall be paid in. I hope this will meet the views of those members who have insisted upon security in this direction.

Another important amendment was suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] when the bill was being considered before, to the effect that the franchise as well as the other property of the company should be made subject to taxation, which gentlemen will find is provided for in this substitute.

Mr. PAYSON. Page 4, line 93.

Mr. HEARD. Yes, sir; page 4, line 93:

> Said road shall be deemed real estate and its franchise and property be liable to taxation, as other real estate and personal property in the District of Columbia, and its property and franchise shall be liable to sale for non-payment of the same.

Mr. BARBOUR. Why should this be fixed as real estate? Usually it is the other way.

Mr. HEARD. What difference does it make?

Mr. BARBOUR. Why should this differ from the general rule? These people do not own the land traveled over by this company.

Mr. HEARD. But they own their plant.

Mr. BARBOUR. But why should it be treated as real estate when it is not real estate?

Mr. HEARD. That makes no difference.

Mr. BARBOUR. But it is a matter of difference against the public. I have yet to learn it has anywhere been considered as real estate. The usual course is the other way, and I see no reason why it should be changed.

Mr. HEARD. What portion have I consumed of my hour?

The SPEAKER. Twenty minutes.

Mr. SOWDEN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HEARD With pleasure.

Mr. SOWDEN. My question is this: Why is the capital stock of this company fixed at $3,000,000, or not less than $2,000,000. Is it contended that anything like this sum will be required for the construction of this road; or is it fixed at $3,000,000 merely for speculative purposes?

Mr. HEARD. It is estimated that some amount between those two sums will be required for the completion of this road.

Mr. SWOPE. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. HEARD. I will yield with pleasure to my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. SWOPE].

Mr. SWOPE. I observe that the bill provides that 50 per cent. of the subscription shall be paid; the remaining 50 per cent. is left at the option of the directors, apparently. Does not this allow the directorship to dispense with payment of the remaining 50 per cent. of the subscription if they see fit?

Mr. HEARD. I will say, in response to the courteous question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SWOPE] this much: He calls attention to the fact that this substitute provides—

> That the subscribers to stock in this company shall pay 10 per cent. at the time of subscribing and 5 per cent. each thirty days thereafter, until 50 per cent. thereof shall have been paid.

I will say it is the usual rule prevailing not only here but in every State of the Union. It is the rule which prevails in the State of West Virginia as will be seen by reference to the statutes of that State, although when stated in this debate it was contradicted by a member from West Virginia. It is usual to require a subscription of 10 per cent. should be paid, and that no subscription shall be valid without it. There is not to-day a single railway incorporated here which requires the payment of more than 10 per cent. The variance in this substitute is in the direction of greater security to people.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced disagreement to the amendments to the bill (H. R. 7218) to amend an act entitled "An act for the erection of a public building at Chattanooga, Tenn.," approved February 25, 1885, and requested a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses; and had appointed as managers on its part Mr. MAHONE, Mr. MORRILL, and Mr. HARRIS.

CABLE RAILROAD.

Mr. HEARD. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB] desires to ask me a question, and I will yield to him for that purpose.

Mr. COBB. The question I was about to propound to the gentleman from Wisconsin is this: He stated there was not a railroad corporation in this District where the law required subscribers to pay more than 10 per cent.

Mr. HEARD. That is my information.

Mr. COBB. Does not the gentleman from Missouri regard that as bad legislation? And does he not think the rule—if it be a rule—ought to be changed?

Mr. HEARD. I will say to the gentleman from Indiana it is the same rule which prevails, as I am advised, in his own State, and not only in his own State, but in almost every other State in the Union.

Mr. COBB. That may be true; but I ask the gentleman from Missouri whether it is not a bad rule, and whether it ought not to be changed.

Mr. HEARD. I ask the gentleman in all fairness if it is bad legislation whether it is only vicious as applied to this bill, and whether the provision he suggests should not be included in the general incorporation act of this District, so as to apply it to all alike.

Mr. HOPKINS. On page 5, line 125, it is provided:

> And in case the incorporators as named in this bill, or their assigns, associates, and successors shall, at the expiration of two years from the passage of this act, have failed or neglected to have completed such main line, then the President of the United States may name eighteen other citizens of the United States, who shall, as to the uncompleted portions of said lines, be entitled to complete the said road under the said restrictions as are provided in the bill, to the exclusion of the said incorporators named in this section.

Now suppose that the present incorporators, with their capital stock fixed at $3,000,000, instead of building the 32 miles of road provided in the bill find it convenient or profitable to build only 10 miles with their capital of $3,000,000; what penalty is there for not building the other 22 miles?

Mr. HEARD. I remit the gentleman to the text of the bill, which provides clearly and absolutely in its last section that it is in the power of Congress to modify, amend, or repeal; and I would say further that unless the company herein authorized proposes to act in utmost good faith towards the public they would not invest a dollar in this enterprise, because they know they are in the grip of Congress, and at the very first manifestation of disregard for their charter obligations then it is within the power of Congress to take their charter from them entirely. Hence, the acceptance of the charter is of itself an evidence of their good faith, and I do not see it possible that there could be any greater evidence of the intention to proceed in good faith on the part of the promoters of this enterprise than by the fact that they are willing to invest their money in building this road notwithstanding the fact that this last section of the bill places them completely in the power of Congress.

Mr. HOPKINS. Let me ask the gentleman this question: Is not this last clause of the bill substantially embodied in each and every one of the present street railway charters?

Mr. HEARD. I do not know. I am informed that some contain it and some do not.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Not in that language.

Mr. SCOTT. I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri a question.

Mr. HEARD. I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. SCOTT. Beginning with line 65 of the bill, I find the following language:

Whenever the foregoing route or routes may coincide with the duly authorized route or routes of any other duly incorporated street railway company in the District of Columbia, either or both companies may use the same tracks when, on account of the width of the streets, or for other sufficient reason, it shall be deemed by the Engineer Commissioner of the District to be necessary.

Now, allow me one moment.

Mr. HEARD. Well, please be brief, as my time is quite limited.

Mr. SCOTT. I want to ask this question: Here is a vested right in these present street railways. This bill proposes to open up the entire line of a road or roads already incorporated to a new corporation to come in and perchance destroy the entire traffic of the line where these men have now gone and invested money, depending on the good faith of Congress under their charter to protect them in their rights.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Not unless the old line assents to it.

Mr. HEARD. The gentleman from Pennsylvania misapprehends the case. Let me call attention to this fact, that in the construction of the existing roads they have had those rights, and necessarily so, in their charters that where there is a coincidence of tracks, if the companies do not agree as to the damages that the old company suffers by the use of its tracks in this manner, then the supreme court of the District may settle the difference between them; and in this bill it is with the court to fix the damages. That, as the gentleman will see, is expressly provided in the bill. ["Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. McADOO. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HEARD. I can not yield further time. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know what time I have occupied?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has occupied twenty-six minutes.

Mr. HEARD. I now desire to yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS], who has an amendment to offer; and not being advised as to the point of order of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL] with reference to the number of amendments that may be offered, I will simply yield to the gentleman for the purpose of having his amendment read. I yield to him three minutes for that purpose, in which he may offer his amendment to have it read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the parliamentary situation. The House is now considering the substitute, and under the rules of the House an amendment may be pending to the substitute, and an amendment to that amendment; but two separate, independent amendments can not be pending upon the substitute at the same time. If the gentleman from Texas desires to move an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, it is in order; otherwise it could not be considered except by unanimous consent.

Mr. PAYSON. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PAYSON. At any stage of the consideration of this bill will it be read by sections for amendment?

The SPEAKER. It will not. This bill is not being considered in Committee of the Whole, but in the House.

Mr. PAYSON. Then, before the gentleman from Missouri yields to the gentleman from Texas, I ask him to yield to me for an amendment I have suggested to him, and which I now desire to offer.

Mr. HEARD. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. PAYSON. Then I offer this amendment to section 1 of the bill:

Nor shall the corporators herein named, or the corporation hereby created, sell or assign any of the rights hereby conferred until after the whole road hereby authorized shall have been constructed as herein provided.

Mr. HEARD. I desire to ask unanimous consent that that may be incorporated in the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right to modify his substitute in such manner as he chooses.

Mr. HEARD. I shall not object to the incorporation of that amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON].

The amendment was again read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HEARD] to say that he modifies his substitute by accepting this amendment.

Mr. HEARD. I do. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY] wishes to offer an amendment, which I also desire to accept as a modification of the substitute.

Mr. LONG. Let it be sent up and read at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. McCREARY. The Clerk will please read the amendment offered by me.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "act" in section 1, line 125, insert:
"And if any work is not commenced and prosecuted in good faith on the main line in six months after the passage of this act, then the privileges and powers granted herein to said corporation shall be void."

Mr. McCREARY. I understand the gentleman from Missouri accepts that amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has so stated.

Mr. CRAIN. I believe I have a right to offer an amendment to the substitute.

Mr. HEARD. Not in my time. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] has an amendment he wants to have read for information. I yield to him for that purpose.

Mr. SAYERS. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SAYERS. Is the substitute open to amendment?

The SPEAKER. It is whenever the gentleman secures the floor for that purpose. There is one amendment pending unless the one offered just now by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY] and accepted by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HEARD] is the same as the gentleman from Kentucky offered some time ago.

Mr. McCREARY. It is the same.

The SPEAKER. Then there is no amendment now pending. When the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] gets the floor for that purpose he can offer an amendment.

Mr. HEARD. I yield to have the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] read.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to have the amendment offered or to have it read for information?

Mr. HEARD. I yield to have it read for information.

The Clerk read the proposed amendment, as follows:

Add as an additional section the following:
"SEC. 5. Each stockholder in the said company shall be individually liable for all the debts and liabilities of said company to an amount equal to the par value of the stock held by such stockholder."

Mr. HEARD. I take it every stockholder is liable now to the full amount of his stock subscribed; and that is the basis of limitation fixed in all corporations, so far as I know, except where you incorporate the double-liability clause. That I am opposed to. I hope the gentleman from Texas will be content to impose the ordinary limitation of liability on stockholders.

Mr. SAYERS. Will you not allow the amendment to go before the House.?

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. Will the gentleman from Missouri yield to me to have an amendment read?

Mr. HEARD. I desire now to yield a sufficient time to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] to have his amendment read. It is the one I agreed to accept.

Mr. CRISP. I send the amendment to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 4, line 90, strike out the word "may" and insert the word "shall," and in the same line, after the word "for," insert "not exceeding;" so that it shall read:
But shall sell tickets in packages of six each for not exceeding 25 cents per package.

Mr. HEARD. I accept that as a modification of the substitute.

Mr. COBB. I will state to the gentleman from Missouri that I have two amendments which I desire to offer.

Mr. HEARD. I claim the floor. I have agreed to yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BARBOUR] ten minutes, which I now do for the purpose of debate, reserving the right to resume the floor.

Mr. COBB. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COBB. It is whether the gentleman from Missouri can yield to another gentleman without losing his right to the floor.

The SPEAKER. The universal practice is when a gentleman obtains the floor he has it for one hour, and he can occupy his time himself or yield it to others.

Mr. BARBOUR. I desire to know whether the opponents of this bill have not the right to be heard?

Mr. HEARD. How much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. Twenty-five minutes.

Mr. HEARD. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BARBOUR] ten minutes.

Mr. BARBOUR. The point of the inquiry I have just submitted is to ascertain whether the opponents of this measure have any right as to time without obtaining it by the leave of the gentleman from Missouri, who has occupied so much time? I am opposed to the substitute upon its merits, and I desire to discuss it from that standpoint.

The SPEAKER. The opponents of the bill have precisely the same rights in regard to this as in regard to every other bill. When any gentleman gets the floor in his own right he is entitled to discuss the bill. And the gentleman from Missouri is now occupying the floor for the hour to which he is entitled under the rules.

Mr. BARBOUR. Has he the right to assign time to the other side?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right to use the time himself or to yield it to others.

Mr. BARBOUR. Can I occupy more time than that conceded by the gentleman?

The SPEAKER. Not now.

Mr. BARBOUR. I accept the concession of time, not on his side of the question, however.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia will proceed.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to occupy very much of the time of this House. My purpose in rising is to place myself right upon the merits of this bill. It has so happened that as chairman of the District Committee I did not favor the passage of the bill, and I do not wish the occasion to pass and the record to be made up without entering my protest against the adoption of this extraordinary measure. I was disposed at first to favor this scheme as something new. I thought it was something that might expedite the transportation of people from one part of the city to another. But upon looking on the measure with all the lights that I have been able to gather from some observation abroad in the cities of Europe where this question of transportation is an important one, I have come to the conclusion that nothing can be gained by the adoption of this measure so far as expedition of transportation is concerned, and that immense harm may result. In the more crowded cities of Paris and London there is no such mode of transportation provided. The people go along there over their streets in the ordinary omnibus or in cheap vehicles propelled by horses. The only case where there can be competition with horse lines anywhere is where rapid transit is required.

Wherever that is necessary those older civilizations have adopted underground railroads or elevated railroads. The idea of chartering a company to run cars slap-dash over your streets at the rate of 9 or 10 miles an hour strikes me as fraught with very great danger. The steam railroads that come into Washington are not allowed to exceed a speed of 6 miles an hour, but here comes this cable line with its cars propelled by machinery, so that they are not under the control of the conductor, but subject to the remote hand of the concealed machinist a mile or two in the rear, asking to be allowed to run at a much higher rate of speed. The trouble with this plan is that the rate of speed can not be controlled. The system interferes not only with the use of the streets by the people, but also with the passage of other vehicles along them. Confessedly the pace of these cable cars can not be regulated with any certainty, nor can they be stopped with certainty except at certain points; and in the mean time, if anything comes in their way, of course trouble and danger must arise. Mr. Speaker, if this plan is adopted now when your city is in its comparative infancy, I venture to say that when it builds up into a great metropolis, the Capital city of two hundred millions of people, which will happen in a comparatively short time, according to the statists, serious embarrassment will result from the existence of this plan of transit. I understand that in the city of Chicago, where this plan is in use, there is more loss of life and injury to property from these cable cars than from any other source, and if the plan be adopted here I have no doubt that in the near future there will be more old and infirm people run over and killed or injured in life or limb in this city than ever before.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Is it not a fact that the friends of the present railroad companies in this city opposed this bill at the first session of this Congress on the grounds which the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BARBOUR] is stating here to-day, and that now those same companies are petitioning Congress for leave to make their roads cable roads, upon the ground that they can not by the use of horses do such service as the public demands?

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I should like to know whether the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BARBOUR] thinks that these cars will run too fast or too slow. It is impossible for us over here to hear a word that he says.

Mr. BARBOUR. I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, that I can not make myself heard over the way. In reply to the gentleman who has propounded the inquiry about horse railroads, I wish to say that I know nothing of their purposes or their wishes. If I had my way, looking to the embellishment and the beauty of this city, the capital of the country, I would remove those railways from your avenues; I would not permit them to remain there to mar the beauty of this great city.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Does not my friend know that the beauty of the streets is very much more marred by horse railroads than by cable roads?

Mr. BARBOUR. I do not know. I think the cable-cars would scare everybody's horses.

Mr. MILLIKEN. They do not in San Francisco or in Chicago, where the system is working very successfully.

Mr. STEELE. We do not want them to take away the old hill horses. We want those retained. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARBOUR. Now, Mr. Speaker, I understand that the principal objection to the existing system of transit is the want of rapidity, but my point is that you can not run your cable-cars with safety at any higher rate of speed than the horse-cars are run now. The horse-railroads, whatever may be the objection to them, are here; even if they are an evil they are now in existence; but this other is not, and I am not in favor of increasing such evils upon our streets and avenues.

Mr. DUNHAM. The experience of Chicago is contrary to the gentleman's idea of it. He has been misinformed.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BARBOUR] has expired.

Mr. HEARD. I yield the gentleman what additional time he requires.

Mr. BARBOUR. In short, Mr. Speaker, my objections to this proposed road are that it will not accomplish rapid transit, and that it is far more likely to produce damage to life, limb, and property than the existing system, by which the cars are more under control. I am not talking here in the interest of any corporation. My great object is to preserve the streets of this city, the capital of the country, intact. This is not a great business place where it would be important for people to be hurried from the wharves or the railroad depots to their offices or their hotels. It is supposed to be a city of residences and governmental offices, a city where people of leisure come from different parts of the country to pass their time, and I do not think there is any real necessity for subjecting the city to the evils which will then most inevitably result from the adoption of this proposed system.

We ought to feel an obligation as representatives of the people to preserve this city for future generations. We ought to take care that fifty years hence there shall not be experienced in this city the evils we are now in danger of introducing by legislation of this character. It will be impossible to move these cars upon your streets without injury to great interests which it is our duty to guard.

I think the whole measure is wrong. A great corporation with $3,000,000 of capital stock and $2,000,000 of bonds is a very formidable power to be created here. And the haste with which this measure has been introduced and pressed seems to me to present a stronger reason for entering my protest against its passage and making the opposition I have made.

Mr. HEARD. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER].

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I have the greatest regard for the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BARBOUR], who has just addressed the House; and on all questions relating to the District of Columbia it has been my custom to follow as nearly as possible his suggestions. I have therefore listened with attention to what he had to say in opposition to this bill; and I am very glad to find that he bases his opposition solely on the ground that the cable system is not a safe one, and therefore ought not to be put in operation as against the present system of transportation through this city by means of horses. The gentleman has cited the example of London and Paris; he has referred us to the great cities of Europe where they have no such means of communication as we have in this country. Mr. Speaker, the time has passed for us to look to Europe for examples in matters of this kind. The people of the United States in this age are not looking to London and Paris for instruction as to the best means of city transit. They are looking to Chicago, San Francisco, Kansas City, Philadelphia, New York, Saint Louis, and other great cities of this continent where this system has been adopted and has proved a grand success.

The gentleman says that the adoption of this mode of transit will endanger life. We might bring the same argument against every steam railroad on the continent. I concede that the locomotive speeding over the country at the rate of 40 miles an hour is more dangerous to human life than the ox-cart going at the rate of 3 miles an hour; but that is not a sufficient argument in favor of doing away with the railroad and going back to the ox-wagon.

We are advancing in this country. We are now setting examples to the cities of Europe; and I wish to see the city of Washington, of all cities on this continent, adopt a system of transit which will be worthy of the capital of the greatest nation in the world. [Applause.]

Mr. HEARD. I now call for the previous question on the substitute, and on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. BAYNE rose.

Mr. HEARD. I agreed that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] might have an amendment read; and I yield to him.

The SPEAKER. For how long a time?

Mr. HEARD. For one minute, and then I will resume the floor.

Mr. SOWDEN. I hope the gentleman will yield to me a similar privilege.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to allow the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] to be offered or merely read?

Mr. HEARD. Let it be read for information. I think, however, I shall accept it as a modification of my substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 113 of section 1, after the word "aforesaid," insert "and such sewer connections shall have such traps or other devices as may be required by the engineer commissioner."

Mr. HEARD. I accept that as a modification of my substitute.

Several members rose.

Mr. HEARD. Now, Mr. Speaker, I hope my friends will not consider me discourteous, but I feel impelled by a sense of duty to ask for the previous question.

Many MEMBERS. That is right.

Mr. HEARD. I do not want to hazard the passage of the bill. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri demands the previous question upon the proposed substitute and upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. COBB. I move that the House adjourn. If the gentleman is not willing to allow amendments to be offered, I trust we shall adjourn.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. COBB, there were—ayes 36, noes 108.

Mr. SOWDEN. I call for tellers.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no quorum.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is not required upon a motion to adjourn. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN] calls for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered, only 29 voting in favor thereof.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I call for a count of the other side on ordering tellers.

The SPEAKER. There is no "other side" on that question. The rules require a specific number to order tellers—one-fifth of a quorum. Tellers are refused.

Mr. SOWDEN. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, there being ayes 29, noes 124—less than one-fifth voting in the affirmative. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. Tellers are refused, the yeas and nays are refused; and the motion to adjourn is not agreed to.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I now move that the House take a recess until 5 o'clock this afternoon.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 18, noes 128.

Mr. SOWDEN and Mr. RICHARDSON. No quorum.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. RICHARDSON and Mr. HEARD were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ay 1, nocs 163.

So the House refused to take a recess.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call for the regular order.

Mr. COBB. I move the House do now adjourn.

The House divided, and there were—ayes 24, noes 93.

Mr. COBB demanded tellers.

Tellers were not ordered, 18 only voting in favor thereof.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. SOWDEN. I move the House take a recess until 6 o'clock.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 16, noes 115.

Mr. SOWDEN. No quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER appointed as tellers Mr. SPRINGER and Mr. COBB.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced the passage of a bill (H. R. 10457) for the relief of dependent parents and honorably discharged soldiers and sailors who are now disabled and dependent upon their own labor for support.

CABLE RAILROAD.

The pending question was on taking a recess until 6 o'clock p. m., and the tellers reported—ayes 21, noes 162.

So the motion was disagreed to.

Mr. MCADOO. I move the House do now adjourn.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 27, noes 81.

Mr. EDEN demanded the yeas and nays.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 23.

The SPEAKER. More than one-fifth of the vote last taken.

Mr. MCCREARY. Count the other side.

The other side was counted; and there were 131 in the negative.

The SPEAKER. Not one-fifth.

Mr. MCADOO. I demand tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were refused.

So the yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move the House take a recess until to-morrow at 11 o'clock. [Cries of "Say 10 o'clock."] No; eleven will be the best time; and on that motion I demand the previous question.

Mr. EDEN. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 119, noes 2.

Mr. EDEN. No quorum has voted.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will withdraw the demand for the previous question if we can have the yeas and nays on the motion to take a recess.

Mr. HAMMOND. I rise for the purpose of making a parliamentary inquiry. If we take a recess until to-morrow, and the House shall refuse to adjourn to-mosrow at 12 o'clock, would we not in that case lose to-morrow, and would not the next day be this?

The SPEAKER. This legislative day continues until the House adjourns. Does the gentleman withdraw his demand for the previous question?

Mr. SPRINGER. I do; but I insist upon my motion for a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow, and on that motion demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 161, nays 44, not voting 112; as follows:

The following pairs were announced:

Mr. ROBERTSON with Mr. MILLARD, for this day.

Mr. DANIEL with Mr. GIBSON, of Maryland, on this bill.

Mr. COWLES with Mr. WAIT.

Mr. RUSK with Mr. SYMES.

Mr. COMPTON with Mr. ROCKWELL.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida, with Mr. VAN SCHAICK.

Mr. LOWRY with Mr. LINDSLEY.

Mr. NEECE with Mr. KELLEY.

GOVERNMENT PROPERTY, ABINGDON, VA.

The SPEAKER. Before announcing the result of the vote the Chair desires to appoint as managers upon the part of the House at the conference to be held on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 2539) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to exchange property purchased at Abingdon, Va., as a site for a public building for more suitable property Mr. SNYDER, Mr. WILKINS, and Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted for one day to Mr. BENNETT.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded, and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow.

AFTER RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at 11 a. m. (Friday, January 28, 1887).

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to correct an erroneous reference of a bill. House bill 10815 was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs; it should have been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and if there be no objection the change will be made.

There was no objection.

WASHINGTON CABLE RAILWAY.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the amendment, and upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, after having examined the amendments which different members proposed yesterday to offer to the pending bill, it is my desire to accept several of them, which I believe will go toward perfecting the bill, and with that end in view, and with that understanding, I ask permission to withdraw the demand for the previous question, with the privilege of renewing the same after the amendments shall have been offered, and I will ask that they be considered as pending.

Those amendments which the friends of the measure are willing to accept I will offer in the name of the members who propose them, and state that I accept them and ask that they be incorporated into the substitute. The other amendments, which we do not feel that we can accept, I am willing to have offered and read, and if gentlemen will consent (as I believe they will from expressions which have been made) to a vote upon each amendment, without resorting to the yeas and nays or tellers, we are perfectly content to yield far enough to have an expression of the House upon each and every one of those amendments.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. Will the gentlemen please explain the nature of the amendments.

Mr. HEARD. I will let them all be read. Now, Mr. Speaker, if there be no objection to the course I have proposed, I will ask unanimous consent that it be pursued.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HEARD] proposes to withdraw the demand for the previous question, upon the condition that certain amendments which he proposes to send up shall be incorporated into the substitute, and that certain other amendments which gentlemen upon the floor desire to offer shall be offered and voted upon without a call of the yeas and nays or a count by tellers, and with the additional understanding that there shall be no further obstruction offered to a vote upon the bill. Is that agreed to?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Is it intended to pass the bill without a yea-and-nay vote?

Mr. HEARD. No.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HEARD]?

Mr. SOWDEN. I object, Mr. Speaker, on this ground: If a yea-and-nay vote be necessary in order to ascertain the true sense of the House upon any proposition, why should we not have it? My objection has reference to that point, and is not made with any view to filibustering.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, I have made my proposition in perfect good faith. The amendment which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN] desires to offer is one that the friends of the bill are willing to have incorporated in it, and I hope that he will not be the person to interfere with the programme I have proposed, which will give to the public the benefit of the improvements which these acceptable amendments will make in the bill, and at the same time give the House an opportunity of voting upon the others.

Mr. SOWDEN. I withdraw my objection, Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman says he will accept my amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there further objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HEARD]?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. HEARD. I now send up an amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN], which the friends of the bill accept.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the substitute by adding the following as an additional section:

"SEC. 5. Each stockholder in the said company shall be individually liable for all the debts and liabilities of said company to an amount equal to the par value of the stock held by such stockholder until the stock held by him is fully paid up."

Mr. HEARD. I accept that amendment, and desire to incorporate it into the body of the substitute. I now send up an amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. FELTON].

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the word "Columbia," on page 9, line 18, the following:

"Provided, That said board of directors shall not have the power to sell or lease the said road, or any part thereof, or to purchase or lease any other railroad, or any part thereof, without first obtaining the written consent of two-thirds of said stockholders."

Mr. HEARD. I hold that, under the law, the directors would have no right to do that anyhow; but I am willing to accept the amendment and to have it incorporated in the substitute.

I desire now to send up the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON].

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to section 2 the following:

"Resolved, That it shall be unlawful for the company hereby incorporated to consolidate with any other railroad company now in existence or which may be hereafter chartered, and any such consolidation shall by itself operate as a forfeiture of all chartered rights and privileges granted to said company."

Mr. HEARD. That I accept. I will state that was adopted by the Committee of the Whole in our previous discussion and was unintentionally omitted from the body of the substitute as drawn. I now incorporate it in the substitute.

I next send up the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN].

The Clerk read as follows:

In section 2, line 26, after the word "require," insert as follows:

"And shall not take on any of its cars more passengers than can be accommodated with seats, and shall cause its cars to be heated during the winter season."

Mr. HEARD. I accept that amendment and incorporate it in the substitute.

I now send up an amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], to which I have taken the liberty of adding some words which I think not only he but the whole House will approve.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add as section 6 the following:

"The president and secretary of said company shall report to Congress at the commencement of each session the names of all the stockholders therein and the amount of stock held by each, together with a detailed statement of the receipts and expenditures of the company, and such reports shall be verified by the affidavits of said officers."

Mr. HEARD. I accept that as a part of the substitute. I will state that the words which I have added, in addition to a report of the names of the stockholders and the amount of stock held by them, require the president and secretary also to certify the expenditures and receipts of the company. This will guide Congress in the matter of reducing the rate of fare when the state of receipts and expenditures will justify it.

I desire now to send up the amendments offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB] and ask to have them read. I am not willing to accept them, but I am willing that the gentleman should have the benefit of a fair expression of the sense of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first of the amendments now sent up.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after "personal" in line 34, section 2, to and including the word "track," in line 36, and insert the following:

"But it shall not be lawful to issue any of such bonds until the entire capital stock has been paid to said company in actual money, and until the entire amount so paid shall have been actually expended in the construction and equipment of said road. The company shall report to the commissioners of the District of Columbia the amount that has been paid in on account of capital stock, and the amount expended on account of construction and equipment; and, if the commissioners shall be satisfied that the amount of the capital stock has not been sufficient to properly construct and equip said road, then, and not otherwise, it shall be lawful for said company to issue said bonds, but not for a greater amount than shall be necessary to complete said construction and equipment."

Mr. HEARD. As I have said, the friends of the bill are not willing to accept this amendment. There is another offered by the same gentleman, which I desire to have read and voted on. Shall both amendments be now read, or will the vote be taken on each as it is offered?

The SPEAKER. Just as the gentleman chooses. Only one can be pending at a time.

Mr. HEARD. Very well; let the amendment which has been read be voted on now.

The question being taken on the amendment, it was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding after the word "charged," in line 92 of section 1, the following:

"And said company shall report to the commissioners of the District of Columbia annually the entire receipts and expenditures of said company for the preceding fiscal year, and shall pay into the Treasury of the United States for the use of the District of Columbia 10 per cent. of the gross earnings of said company."

Mr. HEARD. I will state the first part of that amendment is provided for in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN]. The other part of it was rejected by the committee and also by a vote of the House in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COBB. The gentleman from Missouri is mistaken in that proposition. The amendment he refers to was not such as the one which is presented this morning. That required 25 per cent., as I remember it, and this requires 10 per cent. to be paid into the Treasury.

Mr. HEARD. I submit to the correction. I ask for a vote on the amendment.

The question being taken, the Speaker stated that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. COBB. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 24, noes 53.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HEARD. I dow desire to send up an amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO], which the friends of the bill cannot accept.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 1 by striking out all of lines 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, after the word "assembled," in line 2, and all of line 9, after preceding the word "and," and insert in lieu thereof these words: "The commissioners of the District of Columbia shall advertise in at least five daily newspapers, two at least in said District, for thirty days for bids for the right and franchise to assume the name of the corporation herein named, and to acquire the rights, privileges, and franchises herein set forth, and the persons who shall make the highest bid and pay at least 50 per cent. cash on said bid before beginning work on said road, and the balance when said road is completed, are such persons."

Mr. MCADOO. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 19, noes 54.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HEARD. There was another amendment proposed by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO], which I ask to have read.

The amendment was read, as follows:

The question being taken on the amendment, the Speaker stated that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Amend line 19, section 1, after the word "prescribe," by adding the following: "All moneys received from the sale of said franchise shall be paid into the United States Treasury to the credit of said District: Provided, That the sale of said franchise shall not affect the right of Congress to alter, repeal, or amend this act."

Mr. HEARD. That belongs with the other amendment just voted upon.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New Jersey desire a separate vote upon it?

Mr. MCADOO. No, sir.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HEARD. I desire now, Mr. Speaker, to submit a second amendment proposed by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], which the friends of the bill can not accept.

Insert the following:
"And in addition to said tax the said company shall, on the 1st day of January, 1888, and on the 1st day of January annually thereafter, pay into the Treasury of the United States for the use of the District of Columbia, a sum equal to 5 per cent. of the gross earnings of said company during the preceding year, the payment of which shall be enforced in the manner as above provided for in the collection of the tax aforesaid."

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HEARD] indicate where this amendment comes in?

Mr. HEARD. It comes in in connection with the provision relating to the taxation of the road.

The amendment was rejected—ayes 20, noes 52.

Mr. HEARD. I now send up an amendment proposed by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS].

The amendment was read, as follows:

Insert after "charged," in line 92, section 1, the following:
"Provided, That from and after the 1st day of January, A. D. 1889, said company shall receive a rate of fare not exceeding 3 cents for each passenger for each continuous ride between all points of its main and branch lines."

The amendment was rejected—ayes 32, noes 55.

Mr. HEARD. I submit now, Mr. Speaker, an amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ANDERSON].

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend by inserting after the word "each," in line 3, section 2, the following: "But such company is not authorized by this act to issue bonds and stock the aggregate of which shall exceed the actual cost of construction and equipment of said road by more than 20 per cent."

The amendment was rejected—ayes 46, noes 48.

Mr. HEARD. Now, Mr. Speaker, I send up an amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SENEY].

The amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out the sentence beginning on line 87 and ending on line 92, and in lieu insert the following:
"Said company shall receive 2 cents and no more for one continuous ride between all points of its main and branch lines."

The amendment was rejected—ayes 10, noes 58.

Mr. HEARD. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON] desires to offer an amendment, which I ask to have read.

The amendment was read, as follows:

After the word "track," in line 36 of section 2, insert:
"Provided, That no bonds as herein provided for shall be issued until the full amount of each share of the said capital stock of $2,000,000 shall be paid in and faithfully applied to the proper construction and equipment of the said railways."

Mr. ROWELL. I make the point of order on that amendment that it has already been voted down.

The SPEAKER. These amendments are being offered under an agreement made this morning.

The amendment was rejected—yeas 21, noes 46.

Mr. MILLS. Is it in order now, Mr. Speaker, to move to substitute 3 instead of 5 cents as the rate of fare to be charged?

Mr. HEARD. That has been voted down. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON] desires to offer another amendment which the friends of the bill can not accept.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Add, after the words "the same," in line 96 of section 1, the words:
"Provided, That the value of said road for the purposes of taxation shall not be assessed at less than $30,000 per mile of single track."

The amendment was rejected—ayes 10, noes 48.

Mr. HEARD. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. SHAW] desires to propose an amendment which the friends of the bill decline to accept.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend section 2 by inserting after the word "track," in line 36, the following:
"Provided, That no bonds shall be issued as aforesaid until the whole amount of the capital stock herein provided for shall have been paid in current funds into the hands of the treasurer of said company, and three-fourths of such amount be expended in the construction and equipment of said railway."

The amendment was agreed to—ayes 55, noes 49.

Mr. HEARD. I desire to offer the following amendment for the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER], and which the friends of the bill accept and make a part of the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add the following as section 7:
"That said company shall keep watchmen at such street crossings in the city of Washington as the commissioners of the District of Columbia shall deem necessary for the public safety."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEARD. I desire to offer this amendment for the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL], which the friends of the bill also agree to accept as a part of the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 44, section 2, strike out the word "two" and insert the word "ten."

Mr. HEARD. This keeps the stock books open for ten days instead of two days, as the bill provided originally.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEARD. I now offer for the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER] the following amendment for a vote of the House, the friends of the bill not desiring to accept it.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "Columbia," in line 94, section 1, insert the following:
"And in addition thereto shall pay into the Treasury of the United States 10 per cent. of the net earnings of said road remaining after the reasonable and necessary expenses of operating and maintaining said road, and 5 per cent. upon the actual cost of constructing said road shall have been taken from its gross earnings."

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 24, noes 69.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HEARD. For the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BROWN] I offer the amendment which I now send to the desk in order that a vote of the House may be taken upon it.

Mr. MCADOO. I wish to ask the gentleman from Missouri a question. I understood that in offering these amendments we might go so far as to have a vote by tellers on them.

Mr. HEARD. It was agreed this morning upon the floor that the vote on these questions would be decided by a division.

The Clerk read the amendment of Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania, as follows:

Strike out section 4 and insert the following:
"That this act may at any time be altered, amended, or the plan of said road may be changed from a surface to an elevated or underground road, or the power and plan of applying the same may be changed at any time and in any manner so as to conform the same to any invention or improvement that may by the Congress be deemed more to the public advantage than that provided in this act."

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 11, noes 60.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HEARD. I have also this amendment to offer for the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON], which the friends of the bill do not desire to accept. It is substantially covered by the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN], which was accepted by the friends of the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I insist that it is not the same.

The SPEAKER. Discussion is not in order.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman has discussed the amendment.

Mr. HEARD. I do not propose to discuss it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman says it is substantially the same amendment; I say it is not.

The Clerk read as follows:

That said company shall divide or separate the seats in the cars by a rail or partition so as to designate a seat for each passenger, and when all the seats in the car are taken and occupied by passengers the car shall not be stopped to receive any other passenger; and any passenger not provided with a seat shall not be required to pay fare.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 49, noes 77.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HEARD. I desire now to offer, on behalf of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], an amendment in regard to the sale of tickets, providing that eight instead of six shall be sold for 25 cents. The committee do not feet inclined to accept the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out, in line 90, the word "six" and inserting "eight."

The amendment was not agreed to, there being ayes 22, noes 54.

Mr. HEARD. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ANDERSON] asks me to submit the amendment which I send to the desk, which he states I agreed yesterday evening should be offered. I decline to accept it, but submit it for a vote by the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of the second section:

"The iron used in the construction of said road shall be of American manufacture."

[Applause and laughter.]

The amendment was agreed to. [Applause.]

Mr. SPRINGER. Now, Mr. Speaker, I think it is time we should have the previous question. These gentlemen who oppose the bill have gotten into it all their good propositions.

Mr. HEARD. I now renew the call for the previous question upon agreeing to the substitute, and on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. MCADOO. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is it now in order to move to recommit the bill?

The SPEAKER. Not at this stage. The previous question has just been ordered on agreeing to the amendment and ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. MCADOO. After the third reading of the bill will the motion I have indicated be in order?

The SPEAKER. The rules provide that when the question is on the passage of the bill the motion to recommit is in order.

The question being taken, the substitute was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. HEARD. I move the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. MCADOO. I now move to recommit the bill to the Committee on the District of Columbia with instructions to report it back forthwith with the amendment offered by me and voted on.

A MEMBER. What was that amendment?

Mr. MCADOO. I ask to have it read.

Mr. SPRINGER. I make the point of order that the provision directing the committee to report forthwith is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois makes a point of order against so much of the motion as requires the committee to report forthwith, which involves a change of the rules or practice of the House.

Mr. MCADOO. I will modify my motion so as to provide that the committee report at any time.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is liable to the same objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois makes the same point against the modification. A committee which has not, under the rules, power to report at any time, can not be authorized to do so except by a suspension of the rules, or by unanimous consent.

Mr. MCADOO. Then I withdraw that portion of my motion.

Mr. SPRINGER. I make the point of order that the agreement made this morning——

Mr. HEARD. By unanimous consent.

Mr. SPRINGER. By unanimous consent, was to the effect that these amendments should be voted on as they have been, and that then no further opposition should be made to the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The agreement was that no further "obstruction" be offered. The Chair supposed that provision was intended to exclude what are known as dilatory proceedings. But this is a legitimate parliamentary motion. The gentleman moves to recommit the bill.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Can we have the instructions read?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman to withdraw the instructions, and to move simply that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. MCADOO. I beg pardon; I think the Chair did not understand me. My motion is to recommit the bill with instructions that the committee report it back with the amendment offered by me this morning.

The SPEAKER. That amendment has been voted on by the House and rejected. The Chair thinks it is no more in order to move to recommit the bill with instructions to report it back with that amendment, than it would be to offer the same amendment again in the House.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I move to recommit, with instructions to incorporate in the bill the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey has a motion to recommit pending.

Mr. MCADOO. I withdraw my motion for the purpose of allowing the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] to submit his.

Mr. SPRINGER. All these are amendments which, according to the understanding, should have been brought in as such at a previous stage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment which the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] proposes the Committee on the District of Columbia shall be instructed to incorporate in the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. That before the rights and privileges herein specified shall vest in the corporators named, the commissioners of the District of Columbia shall advertise in three daily papers of the city of Washington for the period of thirty days the said franchises, rights, and privileges for sale to the highest bidder or bidders, and the said franchises, rights, and privileges shall be sold and transferred to the highest bidder or bidders, who shall enter into a bond of $100,000 to construct said road in compliance with the provisions of this charter. The amount bid by the person or persons to whom said franchises, rights, and privileges are transferred, shall be turned over to the Treasurer of the United States to be expended as is the money raised by taxation in the District.

In case no bids be made for the privileges herein ordered to be offered for sale, then the rights, franchises, and privileges shall invest in the persons herein named as corporators and their associates who may subscribe to the capital stock of said company.

Mr. HEARD. I make the point of order that this amendment has been already voted upon and rejected.

Mr. MCADOO. It is not the same amendment. This is to recommit.

Mr. HEARD. It is substantially the same, and has been already rejected.

The SPEAKER. When?

Mr. HEARD. This morning.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that it is essentially different, and overrules the point of order.

Mr. MILLS. On that I ask the yeas and nays.

Mr. SPRINGER. It was understood that there was to be no demand for the yeas and nays upon amendments; but that there might be on a motion to recommit. The substance of this is simply an amendment to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 94, nays 130, not voting 93; as follows:

The Clerk recapitulated the names of those voting.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. HILL with Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio, on this bill.

Mr. STAHLNECKER with Mr. REED, on this vote.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri, with Mr. LITTLE, on the pending bill.

Mr. COMPTON with Mr. ROCKWELL, on this vote.

Mr. BELMONT with Mr. BRUMM, for this day

Mr. LAFFOON with Mr. KELLEY.

Mr. DUNN with Mr. THOMPSON.

Mr. TOWNSHEND with Mr. CANNON, on this vote.

Mr. COBB. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HUTTON] is absent from the House on account of sickness.

Mr. MCRAE. My colleague [Mr. ROGERS] is absent on account of sickness.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. BAYNE. I ask consent to submit some remarks upon this bill.

There was no objection.

Mr. HEARD. I now demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. SOWDEN and others demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 166, nays 72, not voting 79; as follows:

So the bill was passed.

During the roll-call, on motion of Mr. LORE, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. DOCKERY with Mr. WADE; if Mr. DOCKERY were present, he would vote "no" on the pending bill.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL with Mr. REED.

Mr. HILL with Mr. LIBBEY, for the rest of this day.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. HEARD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay that motion on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill (H. R. 10242) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes; when the Speaker signed the same.

INDIAN TRUST BONDS.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 247) directing the Attorney-General to take all proper and legal proceedings to collect the principal and interest on certain bonds of the States of Arkansas, Florida, Virginia, Tennessee, Louisiana, North Carolina, and South Carolina, now held by the United States as trustee for certain Indian tribes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. LAFFOON, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, requested the return of a bill (H. R. 10457) for the relief of dependent parents and honorably discharged soldiers and sailors who are now disabled and dependent upon their own labor for support.

It further announced the passage of a bill of the following title, in which concurrence was requested:

A bill (S. 372) to establish agricultural experiment-stations in connection with the colleges established in the several States under the provisions of an act approved July 2, 1862, and of the acts supplementary thereto.

RETURN OF A BILL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following request of the Senate:

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, January 27, 1887.

Ordered, The Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate a bill (H. R. 10457) for the relief of dependent parents and honorably discharged soldiers and sailors who are now disabled and dependent on their own labor for support.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the request of the Senate will be granted, and the Clerk will be directed to return the bill to the Senate.

ARMS AND EQUIPMENTS FOR THE MILITIA.

Mr. FORNEY. I rise to submit a privileged report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committtee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses to the bill (S. 222) to amend section 1661 of the Revised Statutes making an annual appropriation to provide arms and equipments for the militia, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House of Representatives, as follows:

Insert "four" instead of "six" in the first line of first section, so as to read "$400,000"—and agree to the same.

WM. McADOO,
A. J. HOPKINS,
Managers on the part of the House.
W. J. SEWELL,
F. M. COCKRELL,
JOSEPH R. HAWLEY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. HEPBURN. What is the effect of the adoption of the report?

The SPEAKER. It is to fix the amount in the bill at $400,000.

Mr. FORNEY. I demand the previous question on the adoption of the report.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the report was adopted.

Mr. FORNEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PORT OF DELIVERY AT LEWES, DEL.

Mr. LORE. I call up for consideration at this time a motion to reconsider the vote by which was passed the bill (S. 2256) to create a port of delivery at Lewes, Del., on the 23d day of December last. This bill was passed by the House, but a motion to reconsider was made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], and has been pending ever since. In order to remove the objection heretofore interposed against this bill I now move to strike out the words "enter and;" so the bill will then read:

That Lewes, in the State of Delaware, shall be, and is hereby, constituted a port of delivery within the collection district of Delaware; and the deputy collector of customs stationed there shall have power to clear all vessels, whether foreign or domestic, coming to that port.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. LORE'S amendment was then agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly rea t the third time and passed.

Mr. LORE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PLEURO-PNEUMONIA.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7208) to amend an act entitled "An act for the establishment of a Bureau of Animal Industry, and for other purposes," approved May 29, 1884; and pending that motion I move that all general debate be limited to two hours.

Mr. McMILLIN demanded a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 102, noes 12.

So the motion was agreed to.

The question recurred on the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and it was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. BLOUNT in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of further considering the bill (H. R. 7208) to amend an act entitled "An act for the establishment of a Bureau of Animal Industry, and for other purposes," approved May 29, 1884. By order of the House general debate is limited to two hours.

Mr. HATCH. I yield twenty-five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. FUNSTON].

Mr. FUNSTON. Mr. Chairman, I do not feel like letting this bill go to a vote without saying a word in its favor. While it may not be perfect in everyrespect, it certainly is the result of much thought and deep interest in a matter which so vitally concerns the material prosperity of our land, and which affects not only the owners of live stock but a much larger class who consume the meat and dairy products of this country. It is not legislation in favor of any special class of persons, but it is legislation in which every man, woman, and child are interested, and none more than the poor man who does not own a hoof in all the broad land.

It is a question of food for the millions. Shall it continue to be within the reach of all, the poor as well as the rich, or shall we permit a disease most fatal in its character, and which has for centuries baffled the efforts of the most skillful veterinary surgeons, to plant itself firmly in our land, destroying our magnificent herds of cattle, breaking up the animal industry of the farm, and in consequence of which advancing the prices of the products of the herd and the dairy beyond the reach of those who can not indulge in luxuries.

It is a mere business question which presents itself. Shall we meet it in a business-like manner, or shall we dally with it until it has spread beyond our reach or where it will require millions of money to eradicate it, whereas to-day it requires but thousands? The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MORGAN], my colleague on the committee, objects to the bill because the amount, $250,000, is insufficient, in his judgment, to carry out its purposes. My only answer to him is: then let us increase it sufficiently at least to destroy all affected animals, which would materially check the spread of the contagion, if not eradicate it altogether; at least it would hold it in check until the meeting of another Congress, when further legislation can be had under additional light on the subject. What we want now is thorough organization, with power from the Government to do something. As matters have been, the Government agents have been in many cases refused access to the infected herds, and are told that "whatever is done must be under the laws of the State, and as the State has no law on the subject, nothing can be done."

But my colleague on the committee [Mr. MORGAN], in his able remarks shown in the RECORD of the 12th instant, seems to be dissatisfied about the power which he believes is conferred upon the Commissioner of Agriculture in enabling him to place a State in quarantine in case the State fails to co-operate with the plans of the Department for the extirpation of the disease, and he calls it placing the power of this great Government behind him to enable him to trample upon the sovereign power of the State; while the facts are, the bill places the Commissioner behind the Government, and upon his recommendation "the President shall be authorized to declare in quarantine the said State or Territory," which keeps it entirely out of the hands of the commismisioner, except as to recommendation, and leaves it altogether discretionary with the President. And, at the worst, there is nothing arbitrary nor anything that savors of trampling upon the sovereign power of the State.

It is in fact but the exercise of a power conferred by the Constitution upon Congress to regulate commerce between the States, and in this case to prevent the exit from the State of animals having infectious or contagious diseases which may cost the Government millions to extirpate. And then, as a matter between right and wrong, is it not right? The State that will stubbornly resist the terms which the Government offers in this bill and will persist in poisoning the stock of other States by sending abroad their diseased animals ought to be forced into respecting the rights of others by such means as may be practical and lawful.

Now, my esteemed friend and colleague on the committee, in the speech referred to, criticised the provision of the bill which declares that in no case shall compensation be allowed for any animal slaughtered under the provisions of this act that may have contracted or have been exposed to such disease in a foreign country.

He says, "you prohibit payment for that animal, and it cannot be destroyed except by consent of the owner." In this the gentleman certainly is mistaken.

Mr. MORGAN. I said "except by consent of the owner."

Mr. FUNSTON. I know that; but if Congress has the power, which no one disputes, to declare that three-fourths of the value when sound is just compensation, it has the power also to declare that no compensation shall be allowed for diseased animals when brought into this country. But, in any event, that objection can not be a serious one, as that clause can be very easily amended by making it applicable only to those brought in after the approval of this act.

Now, my colleague on the committee from New York, Dr. SWINBURNE, made an elaborate and able minority report, and submitted with his speech in the RECORD of the 12th instant, in which report he severely criticised the chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry, and I think unjustly, for after a careful examination of his annual report for 1885 I pronounce it, in my humble opinion, most complete and able in all respects, showing an amount of hard labor and diligent research seldom equaled by the head of any bureau.

My colleague on the committee, in his report, charges the head of the bureau with incompetency, and cries aloud for more light on the subject of pleuro-pneumonia, and in his speech in the RECORD of the 12th instant he says: "To-day the committee have no information whatever upon the subject." Had he turned to the bureau report he would have found all the information that any one could desire. He would have found over a hundred cases of pleuro-pneumonia reported right here in the District of Columbia, with the names of the owners, their localities, and even the names of the streets and numbers of the residences of the owners in this city. He there would have found a full and detailed account of pleuro-pneumonia in many of the States (Maryland, Delaware, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois, Kentucky, Tennessee, Missouri, and New Jersey), and an account of about three hundred cases in his own State of New York, giving names of owners and their post-office addresses and counties, and the streets and residences in cities. Also he would have found reports of inspection by veterinary surgeons in high standing from all parts of the country, many of which are most complete and interestimg, and confirming the existence of pleuro-pneumonia in an alarming degree.

Our eminent friend, however, who so worthily wears laurels won in the field of science, seems to be so wedded to science that of the great number of cattle actually infected with an incurable and most dangerously contagious diseases he would not slaughter one, except a few for scientific purposes. Scattered as they may be, over every State of the Union, he would put a guard over each herd or single animal that may be infected and keep him there until the herd or single animal has recovered or died, compelling the owner of the infected stock to bear the expense. If all this were even practical it certainly would be a devotion to science which is truly heroic.

I imagine now I see one of the Government agents, which he provides for at a per diem of $5 to $10, in the second section of his substitute, standing over a $15 sick cow, day in and day out for thirty, forty, or sixty days, and then compelling the owner of the cow to pay the expense of such a performance. Mr. Chairman, I hardly think I need follow this part of the subject further. What we need in this matter is a good supply of common sense and practical knowledge. Science has long ago spent its force on pleuro-pneumonia without the least perceptible benefit. The only thing left for us to do now is to eradicate it in the quickest way possible, which is by the death of the animal infected. The three-fourths compensation at their sound value may seem to be too much when considered strictly in the light of obligation, but when we reflect that many infected animals have recovered; also that a less compensation than three-fourths would be an inducement to the owner to conceal the existence of the disease in his herd, it is thought to be wise to do that which would most likely revert to the public good, which is to pay a sufficient amount to secure its exposure by the owners of the infected animals.

In this we have the example of European governments that have struggled with the disease for many years. France allows one-half value before the disease, if they are found to be affected, and three-fourths if only contaminated. England one-half of value before disease. Germany three-fourths. Austria the mean value of the animal before the disease. Belgium the same. Holland one-half value for those diseased and full value for those suspected; and Sweden two-thirds of value before the disease. Now, I desire right here to read an extract from Fleming's Manual of Veterinary Sanitary Science and Police, found on page 153, Report of Animal Industry for 1885.

Dr. Fleming is president of the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons and principal veterinary surgeon of the English army. This extract sets forth most clearly the justice and wisdom of the compensation plan.

The Clerk read as follows:

Compensation is the counterpoise of compulsory slaughter. Occision is, as we have just seen, the most certain and prompt means of extinguishing a contagious disease, and generally the most economical. But unless compensation is given to the owners it is a hardship and an injustice to resort to this measure, and leads to every kind of deception and evasion. Indeed, it can not be otherwise. A contagious disease invades the stable or cow shed of a poor man; if its existence becomes known, the animals therein, which may constitute his entire fortune, will be slaughtered to prevent the extension of the malady, and he will be ruined. As a matter of self-preservation, therefore, for himself and family, he conceals the outbreak, to the imminent danger of his neighbor's animals, and perhaps to those of a whole county; and dreading loss from his stock dying of the disease, he clandestinely disposes of it as best he may, sending the sick or contaminated beasts to market, whence they may introduce the contagion hundreds of miles away. In acting thus he can not be greatly blamed. The compulsory slaughter of the whole of a farmer's stock in some districts would be utter ruin to him, and he is certainly excusable in endeavoring to avert such a catastrophe, especially if the disease has just manifested itself. If he can not quietly dispose of the animals in the market or elsewhere, even at a sacrifice, he has every reason to believe that they will not all die if left to nature; and whatever number may remain will keep him from beggary. He will not so much consider his neighbor's loss from the spread of the contagion as his own under such circumstances; for there are but few men who would destroy their own fortune to preserve that belonging to others.

Mr. FUNSTON. Nothing can more clearly set forth the motives for the compensation system than the article just read; and I may add that the reasons given for concealing the presence of pleuro-pneumonia in England doubtless would apply to-day to a thousand cases in this country. Individuals conceal it for the reasons just given, cities having large interests in slaughter-houses and the cattle trade conceal it for fear of a loss to their business.

Mr. Chairman, it is the duty of the Government to set trusty and competent men at work to hunt it out and destroy it wherever it may be found. If for no other purpose than to suppress the diseased products of the dairy and the slaughter-houses, the ends would justify the means.

The interest at stake is too great to permit dallying with this matter. It would be trifling with the wealth and prosperity of the country. Already the existence of pleuro-pneumonia has caused us the loss of millions of dollars by shutting us out of foreign markets. England has, in consequence of it, forced us to slaughter our fat cattle in their ports of entry immediately upon landing, thus giving no opportunity to recover from the bruises and shrinkage of a sea-voyage, and also forcing us into market wherever we may land and for whatever we can get at the time. The trade with England in stock or store cattle for the purpose of fattening, which was fast becoming one of the most profitable exports of this country has been destroyed, and millions of dollars annually flowing into this country through that channel has been turned in other directions.

Our exports of cattle have dropped from $17,000,000 in 1884 to $10,000,000 in 1886, and during the same period our exports of fresh beef have dropped from $11,000,000 to $9,000,000, and cheese from $11,000,000 to $7,000,000, and butter from $3,000,000 to $2,000,000, making a falling off in the two years mentioned of $14,000,000; and yet we hesitate about giving $250,000 to change that condition of things, to say nothing of the preservation of the cattle interests of this country, valued at over $1,200,000,000.

Mr. Chairman, we can hardly form an adequate idea by the expression of figures of the magnitude of the interest which we are endeavoring to protect. To enable us to form even an approximate idea we are forced to resort to something as an illustration, which is more easily grasped by the mind than mere figures. On page 173 of the Report of Animal Industry for 1885, I find an illustration from the pen of the Commissioner of Agriculture, Mr. Colman, which gives some idea of this great interest. He gives the number of cattle in the United States at 45,000,000, and of which he says:

If a solid column should be formed twelve animals deep, one end resting at New York city, its center encircling Sacramento and its other arm reaching back to Boston, such a column would contain about the number which now forms the basis of the capital stock, so to speak, of the cattle industry of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, shutting this great interest out of foreign markets is not the only disadvantage to which we are subjected by reason of the presence of pleuro-pneumonia. The trade between the States also is becoming confused by the multiplicity of quarantine laws, each one differing from the others and in each case forming an obstruction to free commerce between the States. There are doubtless States needlessly quarantined against others, but that will continue to be the case until the General Government takes the matter in hand and establishes a uniform system and gives assurance that an impartial and thorough examination will be made in all directions, and every case of dangerously infectious or communicable disease brought to light and destroyed.

Until this shall have been done trade in fine stock will remain as it is to-day, almost paralyzed, and nothing will be moved except fat cattle to market, which will also be in a great measure discontinued should the disease of pleuro-pneumonia become general. A few figures may serve to give an approximate idea of the immense trade which is constantly going on between the States and show the importance of maintaining this great medium through which the money of our country is kept in circulation. I take the following statement from the report of the Bureau of Animal Industry for 1885:

The cattle trade at the principal markets of the United States for the year 1883 is shown by the following table: Kansas City received 460,780; Saint Louis, 405,000; Chicago, 1,878,944; Cincinnati, 218,425; Buffalo, 603,755; New York, 872,472; Philadelphia, 237,050; Baltimore, 94,394; making a total of 4,769,865 received by the principal markets of the United States in one year.

When we contemplate the fact that almost the whole of this properly falls under the head of interstate-commerce and that it is liable to be destroyed at any time by the spread of that insidious and fatal disease, pleuro-pneumonia, we must be convinced that it is the duty of Congress to immediately adopt such means as may effectually eradicate it.

Mr. Chairman, it is hardly necessary to dwell on the importance of maintaining and protecting all of the great industries of this country; suffice to say the man of the West sees in the mechanical industries of the East wealth to all the nation. He sees in them work and good wages for millions of willing hands. He sees in them year by year the cheapening of the products of the loom, the machinery for the farm, and he sees, too, in them a ready market for a large percentage of all his productions. So the man of the East sees in the thriving industries of the West wealth to all the nation. He sees in them cheap food, he sees in them eager purchasers for his mechanical productions, and thus a market unsurpassed by any other in all the world. So the North and South see in each other common business interests in which the prosperity of one is the prosperity of the other. Let us be wise, then, and promote and protect the special interests of each and thereby add to the wealth of all. [Applause.]

Mr. HATCH. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CONGER].

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Chairman, I have not heretofore occupied much time of the House with speech-making, and if apology is necessary for trespassing upon your patience at this time it must be found in the importance of this measure to the whole country, and especially to the constituency which I represent and for whom I speak.

I came to the opening of this Congress with a firm conviction that there was no question upon which considerate and prompt legislation was more urgently demanded than that of the suppression and extermination of pleuro-pneumonia. Hence I early introduced the bill (H. R. 3350) for which the one under consideration is a very excellent substitute.

I shall not discuss the constitutional question raised. I apprehend that the very able and thorough presentation of the constitutionality of such a measure by its friends, both in the Forty-eighth Congress and in this present House, has been sufficient to satisfy the mind of every individual except those distinguished statesmen who have become so accustomed to cry "unconstitutional" for lack of other argument that now, unwittingly, they summon this ghost on all occasions, and the present discussion is no exception.

Congress, then, having the constitutional power, what is the demand for its exercise? A great plague is threatening one of the most important industries of our country; threatening it as the approach of cholera, small-pox, or yellow fever threatens human life. And we should summon all the resources of the Government to suppress it, and to defend our people and their property from this, as promptly and efficiently as we would from the human plague. This may not only affect the health and lives of our citizens by infecting our great food supplies of beef, butter, cheese, and milk, but may also destroy the vast amount of value represented by the various cattle industries of this country.

As to the contagiousness of this dreadful malady there is no longer room for doubt, and the rapidity and certainty with which it spreads is unquestioned.

The following extract from the regulations of the English privy council, which is the knowledge gained from their sad experience, shows the extreme subtleness of the contagion.

All articles which have been in contact with a diseased animal, or any of its discharges, are capable of carrying the infection for an indefinite time, and must be looked upon as being actually infectious to other healthy animals. A single straw may carry the infection to a herd, and thence throughout a county. Such are racks of wood or iron, cribs or mangers of wood, iron, or stone, articles used for fastening animals, leather collars and straps, ropes and chains, the stalls or sheds in which animals have been standing, paths or roads upon which diseased animals have walked or been carried, fields and pastures upon which they have been grazing, the clothes, and particularly shoes and boots, and iron-pointed sticks of drivers; even the clothing of persons visiting infected places, and in fact all persons, animals, places, buildings, and movable things which have been in contact with matter proceeding from diseased animals or with such diseased cattle themselves.

It does not run its course and disappear in a short time, but when once its fangs are planted they can only be torn out with the life of the victim.

When once it is grounded in a community, it is there to stay indefinitely. France has been fighting it for nearly a century with immense expenditures, and is not rid of it yet.

Belgium and Holland have been struggling to eradicate it for sixty years or more, but with indifferent success. Great Britain and Ireland with a twenty years' unceasing war, and the expenditure of millions of money, have not entirely destroyed it. Prussia and Austria have been lavish with their expenditures, industrious and persistent in their efforts to destroy it, yet still it is decimating their herds. Russia, South Africa, and Australia have been for years and are to-day still struggling with it. Billions have been expended in fighting the dreaded contagion in the old world, and the destruction of wealth thereby is absolutely incalculable.

It is fast getting a foot-hold in this country, and unless the most heroic treatment is at once resorted to we may reasonably expect the sad experience of other countries to be repeated here.

From the first appearance of pleuro-pneumonia in Europe in 1690, when it was introduced from Eastern Russia, down through its introduction into England in 1840, and finally into the United States in 1843 by the importation of a single cow from Holland, the experience has been practically the same—terrible losses, enormous expenditures, and crippled trade.

From 1711 to 1714, 1,500,000 cattle died in Western and Central Europe, and from 1745 to 1748, 3,000,000 died; in Austria, in 1862, 152,000, and in Great Britain, in 1865 and 1886, over 400,000—3,000 being buried in one week; and in Edinburgh four-fifths of all the cows either died of the disease or were killed because infected with it.

In 1879 a fearful panic in the cattle trade of this country seemed to be imminent. It was started by the report that a steamship had arrived at Liverpool with a cargo of cattle from the West afflicted with pleuro-pneumonia, and we have not entirely recovered from it yet.

The loss that would be inevitable from a general spread of this disease over our country is absolutely incalculable. We have now forty-five million cattle valued at nearly $1,300,000,000.

The loss would be not only by death, but to this we must add, as Dr. Law says:

All the expense of deteriorated health in the survivors, of produce lost, of loss of progeny, of loss of fodder no longer safe to feed to cattle, of diminished harvests for lack of cultivation and manure, of quarantine, and separate attendants whenever new stock is brought on a farm, of cleansing and disinfection of sheds and buildings, &c., which become absolutely essential under the circumstances.

If once spread over this country the loss entailed, directly and indirectly, would be more than double our national debt.

J. H. Anderson, American consul at Hamburg, twenty years ago sent us these warning words:

The havoc and ruin caused by this awful disease in England ought to make us all very careful. Our custom-houses should refuse to allow any cattle, dead or alive, or any hides, tallow, or bones of cattle to pass. The commission appointed by England to investigate the disease has reported that it is believed to be incurable, and the only thing to be done is to stop its further spread. All transactions in cattle must cease. A perfect despotism should be exercised, in my opinion, along our seaboard and borders by the custom-house authorities, to prevent the introduction of this malignant distemper.

The great good nature and buoyant hopefulness of the American people make them slow to act in this important matter and seemingly asleep to the impending danger, but let them suffer as the English have suffered, and are suffering, and they will regret that delay which has amounted almost to recklessness. We have had very little experience in diseases to which live-stock is liable, and we will only know what it is to suffer in that way, and sacrifice, when the plague now in England shall have entered and ravaged our land from end to end, making rich farmers poor in a single season, and the rest of us turn away with a shudder even from the flesh of the beautiful blooded animals that roam the blue-grass regions of Ohio and Kentucky.

Gentleman, let us learn something from the tardy, hesitating course of our English cousins. It was not until the disease had spread over a great tract of their territory, had killed off half their herds and was slaughtering their cattle in great droves, that the sluggish minds of common Englishmen were aroused and awoke to the threatened extermination of their herds. But the plague still continued its ravages; the government and the people became alarmed, and a law was passed which, by its strict provisions and its enormous appropriations, succeeded in checking its destructive raid, and finally in controling and practically destroying it; but not until millions of property were sacrificed and millions of revenue expended.

In no country in the world are there such facilities for the rapid spread of such a disease as in ours. Our neighborhoods are now co-existent with our States. Our States are so profusely bound with iron bands of interstate railroads that the whole country is practically one vast vicinage.

So rapid has been the march of improvement and so unprecedented our development, that time and distance have both been practically eliminated from the equation of our traffic.

Our people are a thrifty, trading, prosperous, progressive people. The plebeian herds of the West must be infused with the royal strains of blood from the East, and so daily, hourly, some train is hurrying toward the setting sun, with Durham, Hereford, Holstein, Angus, or Jersey, selected with care and great expense from localities which even now may be infected with this dire plague, possibly marking its whole line of march with the deadly poison, and transplanting pleuro-pneumonia into those great masses of splendid, living, moving, growing wealth, the cattle of our Western grazing fields, or dropping fire-brands in Ohio, Illinois, Kentucky, Iowa, Kansas, and Nebraska, from which a blaze may be kindled that would lick up with its devouring flames more value than would a Chicago fire in all the great cities of our Union.

It has been very clearly shown by the history of this disease, and experiments therewith in Europe, the details of which I need not repeat, that the only practical method of treatment is destruction; and that is only possible before a general diffusion throughout our herds.

If we stop and reflect upon the magnitude of the danger threatening us, no member of this House who has the general welfare of the Government at heart, can justify himself for not voting for this measure as the only possible way of warding it off.

Quarantine regulations cannot be established by States at State lines without very seriously affecting general trade and disastrously interfering with commerce between the States, because the great bulk of our business, especially the trade in live-stock, is interstate, and must be treated nationally. There is but one policy left us; and, in my judgment, it is the best, namely: kill every afflicted animal, exterminate the plague from our land, and then enact such rigid quarantine that it will make its entry again impossible.

Inoculation has been tried and tried again, both in Europe and in this country, but not with satisfactory result, and the best authorities now everywhere agree that destruction is the best known remedy.

But this remedy is not practicable, unless provision be made by the Government for payment for all animals so destroyed. Men are very much alike everywhere, and the average cattle-owner is not going to kill his own cattle, nor sit idly by and see them die; but will as surely try to sell them, if disease is expected, as will the average merchant, manufacturer, and trader make effort to sell his wares regardless of condition or value.

Then the danger of spreading the contagion is imminent, and nothing but the strong arm of the National Government can suppress the dreadful scourge or insure the country's future freedom therefrom.

The Government should pay the whole cost, for the results to be attained will not accrue to the benefit of the few, but to the many; not only to the beef producers, but also the beef eaters—and in that category we recognize every man, woman, and child in this broad land.

The expense will be a considerable amount. But the industry to be protected is of such vast proportions as to fully justify the expenditure.

As I said before, we have in this country forty-five million cattle. Some conception of this vast number may be had when we understand that if loaded in the usual freight cars, with accompanying engines and way cars, it would make a train that would encircle the entire globe, and then be obliged to have double track for half the distance across this continent; or, if placed in column of ten abreast, they would make a solid phalanx that would reach from San Francisco to New York and from there to New Orleans.

Giving a faint idea of our commerce in cattle, six millions are marketed yearly.

The number received at the Union Stock Yards of Chicago alone during the past year was 1,905,518—over one hundred thousand car-loads, valued at $100,000,000, and during the last twenty years 20,446,161 head, at a valuation considerably in excess of $1,000,000,000.

I give these figures from the Chicago trade, because that is our greatest cattle market; ay, the greatest in the whole world, and consequently the source of greatest danger from this plague.

I base my advocacy of this measure upon its general and vital importance to our whole country. But I might be pardoned for my enthusiastic support because of the enormous interests in my own State that are to be protected by it.

The State which I have the honor to, in part, represent upon this floor stands second only to great, broad-plained Texas in the total number of cattle it contains. I say in number, for in aggregate value of cattle Iowa stands first among all the sisterhood of States, having, by the census of 1885, 3,103,273 head, with an actual cash value of $90,000,000.

No pleuro-pneumonia has yet entered our State.

Every day we are sending great broad-backed, thick-ribbed, superbly fattened bullocks to the Eastern shambles, and furnishing the beef-eater of both continents with as pure, sweet, healthy, marbled meat as the world can furnish. We desire to keep it so, and will gladly pay our share of the expense proposed in this bill to save our herds from disease and to preserve for you, gentlemen, and for the world, a continued supply of choice healthy beef. But my plea is not for Iowa alone, but for every State and for every owner of cattle, as well for the widow with her single cow as for the owner of thousands.

We are continually importing cattle from Europe and shipping from our own Eastern States in order to improve our stock.

The introduction of one affected animal would endanger and possibly infect our whole number. We, as a State, are powerless to prevent it. A half a score of great trunk lines of interstate railway traverse our State. A single case of pleuro-pneumonia carried over one of these lines, as interstate commerce, might plant the contagion in a dozen of our counties, and sow the seeds for the destruction of this chiefest of the great industries in Iowa, and wipe out as with the fury of a cyclone a hundred millions of accumulated wealth.

The same calamity, in kind if not in degree, might happen to any State. The National Government alone can prevent it, and Congress will neglect that high and sacred constitutional duty, to provide for the common defense and promote the general welfare of the United States, if it does not at once adopt vigorous measures to stamp out this plague from our soil and to absolutely prevent its further introduction from foreign lands. It is a matter of the very highest moment to our whole people, not only beef and butter producers, but milk-drinkers and beef-eaters, and the only criticism of the measure that I make is that the provisions of this bill are not sufficient for the work to be done, nor the appropriation commensurate with the expenditures that should be made and the importance of the result to be attained. I shall, therefore, Mr. Speaker, at the proper time propose an amendment increasing the amount to $500,000.

In 1884, at the very time when the Forty-eighth Congress was discussing this same question, and gentlemen opposed the creation of the bureau of animal industry and the proposed measures for suppressing this disease, claiming that it was then confined to only a small portion of our territory, to States that could and would control and extinguish it; that it had not and would not cross the Alleghany Mountains; yet at that very moment it had crossed the mountain range and was spreading itself with wondrous rapidity in Ohio, Illinois, Missouri, and Kentucky, has cost those States millions of dollars in the last two years, and has terribly demoralized, not only the cattle trade, but the whole cattle interests of those States.

It was only by the skill, energy, courage, promptness, and untiring devotion of this bureau of animal industry that the whole great West escaped, almost miraculously, from being overrun and devastated by the dreadful scourge; and we can not be more certain now than in 1884 that pleuro-pneumonia is not at this moment planting its deadly fangs into the very heart of the great Western herds from which the beef, milk, butter, and cheese supply must be drawn that nourishes and supports our vast population. The recent alarming outbreak at Chicago is but a repetition of that of 1884, only with greater fury and more disastrous results, and is of itself sufficient justification for the passage of this measure. The splendid service of this bureau and the very gratifying results therefrom are unanswerable arguments in favor of its continuance and considerable enlargement. Dr. Salmon, its very efficient chief, and to whom its success is so largely due, says in his annual report—and he arrives at this conclusion not only from actual experiments in this country, but from a very careful, intelligent, and thorough study of the history of the disease in all other countries—

> The only practical way to exterminate pleuro-pneumonia is to slaughter at once all herds infected with a disease that remains in a herd months and even years. No system of quarantine can he made satisfactory; the number of herds under supervision would go on increasing, and we should soon reach a period, as they did in Holland, when quarantine would cease to be a practical measure and when the disease would continue as before.

This is unquestionably proven by the experience with the disease in Holland.

In the districts where every affected animal was slaughtered the disease was extirpated, but in every district where other measures, such as quarantine and inoculation, were relied upon, the efforts were fruitless; and this has been the experience of all other countries where it has prevailed.

We have started out in the right direction; have adopted the only wise policy. Let us follow it with wise legislation and generous appropriations, and innumerable national benefits will result.

Mr. Chairman, we can not estimate too highly the importance of this measure; none more important has had or can have the consideration of this Congress. It is of the highest moment to the cattle raisers of this country that there be a sufficient circulating medium for the necessary transactions of trade, and that it be safe, reliable, and permanent. It is of the utmost importance that there be such governmental supervision of corporations, such judicious control of interstate commerce, that the whole value of our products shall not be absorbed in freight charges.

It is of primary interest to the consumers that the price of their food supply shall not be inordinately increased by unjust transportation charges, and it is wise and prudent that prompt and effective legislation should be had in that direction; but it is of supreme concern to the farmer and beef grower that they shall first have the cattle to sell; and of equal importance to the beef eaters that they shall find in their markets meats free from the poison and infection of disease.

This assurance can be given to neither, except by some legislation in the direction sought by this bill. What boots it to the cattle-grower how much silver there is in circulation, whether it is coined free or otherwise, if his herds have been destroyed by disease? What concern has he in freight rates, in "long hauls," in "short hauls," or in "pools," if he has no cattle to transport?

We are essentially an agricultural people—cattle-growers and grain-producers—and we must necessarily remain so. Twenty-nine millions of our population are engaged in agricultural pursuits, and nature has so fashioned and endowed this continent that it will be profitable for them to so continue.

But the time is rapidly approaching when, instead of being a grain-growing people, we will be a cattle-growing nation. Instead of exporting cereals we must export stock. Breadstuffs must give place to meats. Countries less favored by Providence than ours must furnish the former and we will furnish the latter.

Australia, whose exportation of wheat to Europe has increased from 9,517,217 bushels in 1881, to 18,419,561 bushels in 1884, and India, with an increase of exportation from 4,109,495 bushels in 1880, to 39,202,636 bushels in 1884, are increasing in their cereal productions so rapidly that, with their cheap labor—only 8 cents per day—and growing transportation facilities, they are bound to drive us out of European grain markets, and, except for our wise and judicious protective tariff, would be knocking at our very door with their vast stores.

But neither their soil, climate, nor intelligence will permit them to compete with us in our cattle-growing and beef-producing industries.

Our farmers in the West are fast learning that corn-fields and beef-pastures are vastly more profitable than grain-fields. They have learned that grain-growing kills the soil and exhausts the wealth of the farm, while cattle-growing brings back its life and enhances its value.

This industry is the only salvation for the worn-out farms of Virginia, the very life of which has been sacrificed on the altar of grain and tobacco. So, all over the South, cattle, sheep, and hogs must take the place of cotton, tobacco, and hemp, if prosperity is to crown the efforts of our agriculturists. Here now is one question in which there is no politics. Upon this measure no party lines can be drawn. The old East and the new West, the old North and "the new South," can all join hands, and by a common effort subserve the common good.

Gentlemen, we can all afford to vote the expenditure of a few hundred thousand dollars, yes, of millions, if necessary, to exterminate this dread contagion that is now threatening the great herds of the West, and the extermination of which disease will make it possible for the citizens of the East and South to rehabilitate their worn-out farms with an industry more pleasant and profitable than any in which they have ever engaged.

Another important reason why this plague should be obliterated from its present location is the fact that our great free grazing plains of the far West have already reached their limit of profitable occupation, and the grasses which once furnished fat sustenance for the roaming herds of buffalo, and later for the immense domestic droves that have taken their places, are fast disappearing before the ruthless tread of civilization, and our 45,000,000 cattle must cease to increase, in fact must grow gradually less, unless many of the cereal farms of the Western and Middle States and many of the tobacco and cotton plantations of the South are turned into corn-fields and clover and blue-grass pastures, and cultivators and cattle take the place of the reaper and the thresher, the gin and the press.

We are in less danger of world competition with our cattle-growing and cattle products than with any other of our valued industries.

The United States, by reason of its latitude, its climate, its water, and its soil, is the very paradise of the cattle-grower, the producer, and the manufacturer of dairy products.

There is to-day but one drawback to our entry into the first markets of Europe, and that is the embargo of suspected pleuro-pneumonia.

We grow the best beef in the world, and all Europe knows it. Once let them understand that pleuro-pneumonia is eradicated from our herds, and we will find an open sesame into markets that will at once add from ten to fifteen dollars per head to our exported cattle, and increase the demand to such an extent as will swell the volume of trade very largely in our favor and add tens of millions to the profits of the cattle growers of this country, the widow with her single cow coming in for her share as well as the man with thousands for his.

It is estimated that by reason of the presence of pleuro-pneumonia in the United States the restrictions placed upon our export trade in cattle and cattle products, and the consequent falling off in volume and depreciation in price, results in an actual loss to our people of at least $8,000,000 per annum.

Our average annual exports of cattle and cattle products for the last three years was $45,894,820.

This immense trade will be rapidly and materially reduced, and probably destroyed altogether, if pleuro-pneumonia should become generally distributed throughout our land, or it can be immeasurably increased if the restriction can be removed; and it can be done if we can satisfy the foreign markets that we have stamped out the contagion from our herds, and hence destroyed all danger of introducing afresh the fearful disease which so long and so terribly scourged their lands.

Mr. Chairman, the 29,000,000 of agriculturists in the United States demand this legislation at our hands; the 31,000,000 consumers of their products demand it; the trade, the commerce, the progress, the future of our whole country demand it, and the bill ought to pass.

In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, the Congress of the United States, composed, as it is, almost wholly of professional and business men, has all too long neglected the farmers and their interests. Scattered, as they are, without organization, and without the opportunity of concurrent action, they have silently and patiently toiled on and on, while the organized manufacturers and associated capital have been incessant in their demands for legislation, and have consequently been heard.

But the time has come when we must recognize that the American farm is the basic rock in our structure, and that upon the shoulders of the farmer primarily rests our success or failure as a great commercial nation. Make their calling sure, and success to the other great industries and pursuits is assured.

Stamp out pleuro-pneumonia, and we help them and save our interstate-commerce from the hopeless paralysis which would inevitably result from a general spread of this contagion.

Mr. HATCH. I reserve the remainder of my time till the hour assigned to the other side expires.

Mr. SWINBURNE. The other day when the House adjourned I was entitled to ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is now recognized for ten minutes.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I yield the gentleman from New York [Mr. SWINBURNE] five minutes in addition.

Mr. SWINBURNE. In the investigation of this question of disease among cattle I have no personal object to attain further than to do my duty honestly. My profession as a physician is one that demands honesty and sacrifices to protect the health of the people. I believe in my position as a member of this House my duties in this respect are greater than were I quietly following my profession at home. I have no personal fight with the Department of Agriculture, the Commissioner, or any of his subordinates. But I am free to say that when this House or the country is being imposed upon by ignorant men and deceit attempted to be practiced there is no policy or favor that will force me to silence.

That deceit has been practiced by the Bureau of Animal Industry is evident from the report of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture. I would be the last man in the House to charge that gentleman with being a party to any dishonest scheme to rob the Treasury; but I cannot conceive why he exhibited so much feeling on the floor of this House, or why he has pursued the arbitrary course he has in the committee when any attempt was made to discuss the matter. When the bill now under discussion was first reported by the chairman he made the statement that 60,000 head of cattle had been exposed to the disease. This statement is denied by the Commissioner of Agriculture, and hence there can be no other conclusion than that the head of the Bureau of Animal Industry imposed on the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, which forces me to the conclusion that there is either a dishonest scheme somewhere or that the head of the Bureau realizes his own ignorance, and failing to find anything of the nature of the disease would have the world believe it incurable.

To find the nature of this disease and how to prevent its recurrence can not well be estimated in dollars, as it involves not only a great commercial interest, but affects the health of the people vastly greater than can be imagined. I believe in the liberal expenditure of money by the Government where the people are benefited; but I am opposed to the expenditure of one dollar where no benefit is to be derived but where it might result, as I believe would be the case if this bill should become law, in injury. This House has a right to demand of all the Departments any knowledge necessary to correct legislation. To obtain light on this subject, I present to the Committee on Agriculture a resolution asking specific information of the Department of Agriculture. The committee indorsed this resolution and we now, after months have elapsed, have a reply. What is that reply? By reading the resolution and the answer you will readily perceive that it is not responsive, but evasive and unreliable, and, I am compelled to add, in some parts untruthful.

The Commissioner starts out by telling us that the statement that sixty thousand cattle have been exposed to pleuro-pneumonia is not correct and hence requires a different reply from what was intended. If the statement was not correct then his subordinate at the head of the Bureau of Animal Industry is guilty of a grave offense in furnishing to the chairman of the committee falsehoods, not facts. The reply is an insult, because it admits that the Commissioner knew what information the committee wanted but refuses to furnish it.

The reply to the resolution is an attempt to cover up the ignorance of a department over which an educated and scientific man should preside; a man who would be practical and attempt to discover the causes producing this disease, for it is a well settled scientific fact that the organism of both man and beast are so perfectly constructed that where disease is found it comes only from some violation of the laws of a wise Creator.

When the Commissioner in his endeavor to assist his would-be head national butcher in his ignorance, to cover up his failures by butchering the supposed infected and exposed cattle, attempts to prove quarantining a failure by citing the cholera in the city of New York in 1865 and 1866, he is guilty of misrepresentation, as not a case of cholera, according to the report of the Commissioner, was ever traced as coming from quarantine to the city of New York at that time. He forgot, or perhaps was ignorant of the fact, that a large number of vessels with passengers from infected ports upon which there were no signs of sickness of any kind passed up the harbor of New York, no clothing being examined unless sickness was found among the passengers. He may not have known that at that time cholera was being carried into Halifax, Nova Scotia, and other ports of the Provinces, as well as the United States, and that passengers were constantly arriving in New York from these places without passing quarantine. But, perhaps, were he in authority at the time he would have, on general principles, slaughtered all the passengers arriving because they had been on shipboard or came from countries where cholera was supposed to exist.

Mr. FUNSTON. I desire to ask the gentleman from New York a question. Is it not a fact that while you are having your quarantine at New York city cholera spread all over that city?

Mr. SWINBURNE. We had some cholera there.

Mr. FUNSTON. Did it not get away from you entirely, and did not thousands of people die from that disease notwithstanding your quarantine?

Mr. SWINBURNE. I do not know that to be a fact. But I know the board of health reported that not a single case in New York could be traced to quarantine.

In this reply not one word of light is thrown on what became of the four hundred and fifty-five herds reported exposed, or what finally became of the Cynthiana, Ky., or Callaway, Mo., herds.

With his letter are two reports of herds in Maryland and New Jersey. Now, as I understand it, a herd would be a number of cattle together, but the Department of Agriculture finds most of its herds to consist of one animal. We are told how many were slaughtered, but further than this no knowledge.

It will be observed that in all the cases reported the infected animals were found in close and filthy stables and in crowded places, fed on swill and mash, and in no instance where the animals were kept in clean and healthy places. For three hundred years this disease has existed, and we are now as ignorant of its nature and cause as at any time in the past.

We admit there is a contagious disease, but do not know why it is termed pleuro-pneumonia. Why should it not be called typhus? We know that there is a concentration of poisons in close and illy-ventilated places, such as in the holds of vessels, in cattle-yards, sheds, and stables, which causes disease, and is liable to infect all, whether human beings or cattle, while in the open air or in well-ventilated places disease seldom or never breaks out.

The medical world has learned the cause and nature of typhus and typhoid fevers, and that nearly all who are attacked recover when brought into contact with fresh air, while those who are kept in a foul atmosphere seldom recover. This principle will hold equally good in the treatment of animals.

In the last printed report it is stated that in Illinois, "in consequence of the quite general enlightenment of farmers and others, deaths from Texas fever have been comparatively few in this State during recent years." Had the principle of butchering been followed out the farmers and others would not have been enlightened. And I may add that the State of New York, which now refuses to adopt the method of the Department, expended thousands of dollars to assist in securing this enlightenment.

It is scientific enlightening we want in the matter of this disease. Without this the slaughtering process may go on, the disease continue to break out, and no benefit will be achieved. To get this knowledge there is but one method, that of quarantining and scientific investigation, and if the Agricultural Department can not be so constituted as to accomplish this, then it is the duty of the Government to devise some other method to obtain some knowledge of pleuro-pneumonia. I hold that there never has been an intelligent quarantining and treatment of cattle said to have been affected with this disease in Europe or in this country. At least, I have never read or heard of any such.

There are only two methods of treating disease in men or animals; one is founded on the application of practical and scientific principles to assist nature; the other is the result of ignorance, and to my mind this wholesale slaughter for the cure of disease in cattle is on a par with the traditional surgery which holds that the only way to care for a wounded or fractured limb is to cut it off. The one, the true principle is to save and preserve, while the other is to destroy.

I do not agree with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] that "the danger in dollars and cents to the tax-payers of the United States when the first gun fired at Fort Sumter ushered in the rebellion was not greater than the danger to be apprehended from this recent outbreak of pleuro-pneumonia among the cattle of the Northwest," because I believe Congress will refuse to sanction the schemes of the Agricultural Department or establish a barbarous practice simply that a few cattle dealers and speculators may become rich. I am free to admit that the men who inaugurated the movement which opened the war acted on honest convictions, but am forced to believe that the men who claim to be the most interested in this matter are anxious to establish a perpetual system of uncivilized destruction at the expense of the Government.

I believe a proper system of quarantining is the only means by which we can arrive at satisfactory conclusions and offer no inducements for the practice of frauds. The Department says it knows nothing definite about this disease, pleuro-pneumonia; that its incipiency is to the Department a mystery, and that it does not know when the disease becomes contagious or when it ceases. Killing will not supply that knowledge.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] says he is not a medical man. I am well aware of that fact. If he were, he would know that the only way to learn the nature of a contagious or other disease is by a careful watching of it in all its stages. It was only by this method and by strict quarantining that we are now in the possession of the nature and progress of cholera, yellow fever, small-pox, and the other diseases in the human family, and having secured this knowledge we are able to meet these diseases and suppress them. Through quarantining we obtained our knowledge of the Texas fever among cattle, and can do the same with this disease.

The cattle interest of this nation, involving millions of dollars, is too important to trifle with, and for the reasons I have given I am opposed to this bill and offered as a substitute the bill 8843, the passage of which, I believe, will be in the interest of the stock-raisers, the Government, the people, and science.

The language of the bill now before the House, introduced by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH], and the report submitted by him have, in my opinion, done more to jeopardize the cattle industry abroad, if any injury has been done, than all other causes combined; and now by the statement of the Commissioner of Agriculture we are informed that the report of Mr. HATCH, submitted a year ago, is not true, and that the statement that there were sixty thousand head of cattle exposed to pleuro-pneumonia is misleading. The chairman claims to have made that statement on the strength of an unofficial report from the head of the Bureau of Animal Industry.

There is, then, a serious question as to which of these three, the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, the Commissioner of Agriculture, or the head of the Bureau of Animal Industry is reliable on this subject. On the strength of that report to Congress the statement went abroad that the nation was rotten with cattle disease. These contradictory statements must involve some one in criminal misrepresentation or be attributed to absolute ignorance.

In the printed report for 1884, sent out to the world last year, a large portion of the book was taken up with a report of a herd said to have pleuro-pneumonia at Cynthiana, Ky., which was afterwards, on a certificate of health, permitted to leave the State, taken to Texas, and disposed of. What became of the herd the Department has no knowledge.

The reported diseases in New York and vicinity, and in Brooklyn, I was informed by letter from the health department of these cities did not exist. Is it any wonder, then, that some States refuse to co-operate with a Department run by ignorance or deceit?

The recent reported outbreak of disease among the cattle at Chicago goes to prove that the passage of this bill will offer inducements to keep up a continual excitement over diseases in cattle. The Department wants power to extirpate this disease by slaughter. Did it prove by its action at Chicago its ability to manage this outbreak? When the disease was first known to exist in Chicago were any methods adopted by the Agricultural Department to suppress it? We heard of none until a large number of cattle were reported sick. If the conclusions of the Department are correct that germs of the disease can be distributed long before it is discovered in the animal, why is it that the Department are unable to trace its being carried from Chicago to other places?

A controversy between the Commissioner of Agriculture and the authorities of the State of Illinois with reference to the reported disease among cattle in Chicago recently but confirms my views that the Department of Agriculture should not be invested with the power it asks in dealing with diseases among cattle. The live-stock commissioners of the State of Illinois assert that as far as they know the Department of Agriculture has never discovered a case of pleuro-pneumonia in that or any other State. That the existence of the disease in the cattle-sheds of Chicago should have been unknown at the Department of Agriculture until late last year argues a want of vigilance which can only be attributed to incompetency, particularly as it is asserted it has existed there in a mild form for three or four years.

The commissioners of Illinois hold that under their system of quarantine they were entirely able to prevent the spread of the disease. They claim that upon examination and test but a limited number were actually diseased while thousands had been exposed. They hold that had the plan of the Department of Agriculture been followed out it would have been discovered that probably out of three thousand head of cattle slaughtered, at a liability of from $125,000 to $150,000, not to exceed 5 per cent. would have been found on post mortem examination to have been diseased.

The Illinois commissioners claim that they have done more for the suppression of the disease in ninety days than the Department of Agriculture has accomplished in two years and a half, and I believe they state a fact. They desired to allay the fear that was being aroused and were anxious at their own risk and expense to inaugurate the proper sanitary and disinfecting remedies in their sheds. But the Department of Agriculture, having ignorantly asserted that the only remedy was wholesale slaughter, refused to either try the simple remedies or countenance the Illinois commission in so doing.

That the live-stock commissioners of Illinois are pursuing the proper course in this matter is clearly evident, and it is to be hoped that the General Government will not by the passage of this bill interfere to the injury of the great cattle industry.

I am persuaded that the gentlemen who are now engaged in the investigation of diseases in cattle in the interest of the stockmen of Chicago, if permitted and properly assisted to pursue their investigations, will learn more definitely the nature of the disease, and how to meet and suppress it. Already we have some very important discoveries as the result of their observation.

It is rarely that any number of scientific men suddenly agree on a conclusion where the subject they are investigating is wrapped in mystery. This is particularly the case among the medical fraternity.

Mr. FUNSTON. I desire to ask the gentleman from New York a question right here. Has not every veterinary surgeon who has reported to the Government reported this disease to be pleuro-pneumonia? Do not all agree as to this?

Mr. SWINBURNE. I do not know that to be the fact. They have confessed themselves that it is not.

Mr. FUNSTON. Do they not say it is contagious?

Mr. SWINBURNE. If it be pleuro-pneumonia it is not contagious.

Mr. FUNSTON. Do not they say it is pleuro-pneumonia?

Mr. SWINBURNE. I cannot say.

Mr. FUNSTON. Have you not read this in the report? Do they not say it is pleuro-pneumonia?

Mr. SWINBURNE. If they do, I think they lie.

Mr. FUNSTON. Suppose they say it is you who are mistaken.

Mr. SWINBURNE. Yet there was in Chicago a remarkable instance of nearly twenty so-called scientific men—veterinary surgeons—hastily arriving at a mutual agreement on this disease of pleuro-pneumonia in cattle. The head of the Bureau of Animal Industry, Dr. Salmon, announced a conclusion at which he had arrived, and forthwith all the veterinaries agreed with him. A gentleman of the medical profession residing in Chicago, who had given the subject much study, being present, was asked his opinion. He replied that he thought the gentlemen a "little too unanimous," and desired to know upon what facts they sustained the theory advanced; that, for himself, no diagnosis, post-mortem, or examination had enabled him to reach such a conclusion. None of the veterinaries were able to establish the conclusions reached.

By the report of the State board of health of Maine, a State in which I am free to say there are some of the most thorough scientific men in the medical profession to be found in the nation, we learn that that board does not agree with the conclusions of the Department of Agriculture. It is held by the health department of Maine that at one time perhaps not more than 5 per cent. of the cattle exposed to the disease contracted it; that in well-marked cases of the disease the symptoms are similar to those produced by the ordinary non-contagious, acute inflammations of the lungs and pleura, and that the disease may be confounded with tuberculosis, with the lung-worm disease, or with the acute non-contagious lung inflammations. The health officers of Maine further hold that the poison is supposed to not be diffusible through the air to any great distance, so there is no danger of the spread of the disease to other herds except by the movements of the cattle.

While there are no positive conclusions among those who have investigated this disease either in the Eastern, Northern, Middle, or Western States, the opinions of the board of health in Maine are in accord with all others "that the disease does not affect any large proportion of the cattle exposed, and that quarantining will prevent the spread." The only positive decision is that reached by the department of animal industry, that the disease can only be extirpated by wholesale slaughter.

The health authorities in Maine hold, as do others, that there are many points of resemblance between tuberculosis and pleuro-pneumonia, and that the symptoms are common to both. In Maine it is held that the milk from cows with this disease should never be used as human food, and that even though it is not proved that the eating of meat of cattle in the earliest stages of the disease may give rise to the disease, there is a chance to doubt its wholesomeness and fitness as human food.

I hold to the opinion that it is the duty of Congress to act honestly toward the people and the owners of stock in this matter and refuse to pass a bill which will prevent the further investigation of this disease and secure that knowledge which will enable every stock-raiser to detect it on its outbreak and know what remedies to apply.

It may not be that the bill which I desire to offer as a substitute may effect the desired end, but I am satisfied that the bill now before Congress will not give the relief sought in the interests of the people.

Mr. McMILLIN. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER].

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. One of the old lawgivers has said he who wields the power of a state has long arms. This is a long-armed bill; it reaches into every State and Territory and to every farm and stock-yard in the United States. Nor have I known since I have been in this House a bill which so utterly ignores all constitutional limitations on the powers of the General Government and so ruthlessly tramples down State lines and overrides local authorities as does this bill. That there is any authority under our Constitution to go into the States, enter upon farms and go into stock-yards and seize upon cattle and slaughter them under any pretense or for any purpose, would not have been claimed or thought of twenty years ago.

I say this bill utterly ignores all constitutional limitations on the powers of the General Government, obliterates State lines, and treats State authority as though it had no existence except at the will of Congress. Suppose a State should refuse its assent to this measure, or should resist its execution—and I do not know but it would have the right to resist such legislation as this, it is so manifestly outside of the powers delegated in the Constitution.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. That is nullification, my friend.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Not until the Supreme Court decides it to be constitutional, which I do not believe it ever will.

Mr. SPRINGER. Before resisting it it would be better to wait until the Supreme Court decides the other way.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. The Constitution is law, the supreme law of the land. To be sure, who resists a law assumes a grave responsibility, but if the law is unconstitutional it is no law, and he is justified in the end. We have just as much right to enter a State and undertake to prescribe what shall be the medical practice and how contagious diseases among our people shall be treated—in short, subject the people themselves to the control of an officer here in Washington. Arm a fool with power, it has been said, and you will get pay for your folly. This bill is a repetition of the fable of the frogs. They asked Jove for a king and got a stork. Do the farmers of this country suppose that by creating an office here in Washington and putting somebody in it and endowing him with the power given in this bill, that he will be able from this seat of Government to manage their stock better than they can do it themselves? That is the theory on which this bill is founded. It assumes that somebody put in an office here, given power and supplied with money, clerks, fine furniture, &c., can manage the cattle of the country, and control diseases among them, better than the people can themselves.

There is no question as to the power of Congress to regulate the movement of cattle from State to State as a part of commerce among the States. But that is the exercise of a very different power from that proposed in this bill, which sends the agents of this Government into the States and supplants the local authorities and takes supreme control of matters which I believe the people can much better, and certainly much more economically, manage themselves. I do not believe in the theory on which this bill is constructed. It is founded upon the motion that some man here in Washington, armed with power and supplied with money, can attend to local affairs better than the people can themselves; doctor their cattle better and take care of them better. But the dear people will pay for it all the same, and pay dearly, too. It is the same theory as that of the educational bill; create an office here in Washington, appoint an officer, give him power and money, and he will manage the education of our children better than we can do it ourselves. I would rather have one dollar collected from the people it is assumed and expended where it is collected, either for educational purposes or for treating or eradicating this disease among cattle, than five dollars collected from the people, brought to Washington, and passed through the hands of all these officers, subjected to all the charges it would be subjected to before it reaches its ultimate destination. It is but a small remainder that ever reaches the real object of taxation. Government at arm's length is always costly.

And, Mr. Chairman, the principal reason why our Government is becoming so costly is that we are constantly extending its powers. Government wherever located must be carried on by men. Government officers, although located at Washington, are but men after all, and they know no more after they get here and become seated in office than they did before. Yet the framers of this bill seem to think that all that is necessary to destroy pleuro-pneumonia is to put the matter into the hands of somebody in Washington and give him, first, all the power he wants, and, next, all the money he wants. This, I say, is the way governments are made costly. The end of it is the overthrow of self-government. Self-government presumes that the people can manage their own affairs best, and certainly most economically. This bill goes on the theory that somebody else, operating from a central office at Washington, can do things for them better than they can themselves. In every view of the case, therefore, the constitutional view, or the view of economy, the best way to accomplish the end desired, in my judgment, is not by a bill of this kind.

Mr. STEELE. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. STEELE. In case a poor man's herd gets infected and has to be destroyed, who does the gentleman think should reimburse him, or does he think he ought to be reimbursed at all?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I would leave that question entirely to the people of the States, who, I think, can manage the whole business much better than it can be done by some fool located here in Washington, for the idea seems to prevail that the fellow who is to work these wonders must be located in Washington.

Mr. STEELE. I agree with the gentleman entirely; but we are going to have a change of administration soon and put a fellow there that is not a fool [Laughter.]

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I would leave this whole matter to the people of the States who are interested and who know quite as well what to do and can manage quite as well for themselves as any body in an office here in Washington can manage for them, I care not who he is. These, briefly, are my reasons for opposing this bill. It is said that the farmers are demanding it. I doubt that very much. Agitators who want office try to make farmers believe that more legislation is what they want and that the cure-all for cattle diseases is more law and more offices. These agitators may get resolutions passed at farmers' meetings and get up long petitions; but that the intelligent farmers of this country are asking the General Government to step in and displace their local governments and take upon itself work of this kind I do not believe. They will see some day if they get this bill who has to pay the cost. There will be plenty of pleuro-pneumonia in the country after this bill passes, if it ever passes, as I hope it will not.

Mr. EDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman if he has been able to discover from this bill how many officers may be employed by this commission?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. There is no limit, and no limit to the cost to be incurred. How many officers will be required or appointed under this bill nobody can tell. How many men may be required to execute the provisions of the bill no one can tell. I feel quite safe in assuming, however, that the cost of dealing with this disease will be ten times as great as it would be to leave it to the people of the States, except where it comes within the constitutional provision for the regulation of commerce among the States, or when cattle are transferred from one State to another.

Mr. McADOO. Is not this an attack on the whole Federal system?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Certainly; it is the overthrow of the Federal system. It is the annihilations of State-rights and local government, and I repeat what I said before that there has never been a bill brought into the House which trampled so ruthlessly upon constitutional limitations of Federal power and the rights of the States and the people as does this bill. The safety of our Federal system lies in the fact that it localizes Government, leaving to the States and the people what concerns them alone. But this bill overrides all local authorities and centralizes all power in an office in Washington. I do not believe our system can long stand unbroken with power centralized in this way.

Mr. FUNSTON. Does not the bill propose to do all this under the laws of the respective States?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Oh, under the laws of the respective States! How can it do that? What business has this Government to go into a State and undertake to execute the laws of the State? Let the States execute their own laws.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Yes, sir.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Under our exising railroad system where the commerce passes constantly from State to State without reference to State lines, how is it possible for the States to regulate this matter?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. The States are not competent to regulate commerce among the States, but a thing that is so completely within the States as cattle-growing, a State is entirely adequate to manage, and, in my judgment, it should be left there. The consequences resulting from pleuro-pneumonia are not half so serious as may result from the spread of small-pox or other contagious diseases among persons; yet the General Government does not undertake to control that. Again, if you mean to enter this work at all why not extend the provisions of the bill to the hog cholera? Yes, and chicken gapes? [Laughter.]

If we do anything of this kind, let us go the whole length and take in all diseases of man and beast?

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. Go "the whole hog." [Laughter.]

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Exactly. Let everything be controlled from an office in Washington.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, if we may judge of the future by the past we can have little hope that any resistance to this measure will be successful in defeating it.

Three years ago the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] was here holding up to this House and the country the doleful picture of what would be the consequences if pleuro-pneumonia were not immediately extirpated in the United States. He was then granted a bill with the machinery and the money he demanded; and to-day he comes back here more clamorous, more rampant than ever, asking more power, more money, in order to stamp out this disease; and still he is not able to show that his gloomy predictions have in the least come to pass.

Now, what is this bill? I do not propose to offer simply a factious opposition to it. It is a bill which I think can not commend itself to a people who are dispassionate in the consideration of their rights. In the law which was passed before we find this clause in section 3:

Or where such State or Territory shall have adopted plans and methods for the suppression and extirpation of said diseases, and such plans and methods shall be accepted by the Commissioner of Agriculture.

That clause is left out in this bill; and why? For the purpose of giving the Commissioner of Agriculture authority to go into a State that does not seek his interference and lay his hands upon the property of the people and his power upon their rights. This bill directly repeals that part of the former law, and a new section is inserted leaving that out and that only.

Now, I want to call the attention of gentlemen to one fact. We have been struggling here for years in the hope that we might get paid off a sufficient portion of the public debt and burdens of the United States to enable the Government to rely for its revenues upon import duties and ultimately to come back to the point where the hand of Federal power would not be so persistently felt upon the heavily burdened shoulders of the people. But the gentleman in charge of this bill on a preceding day of this Congress came here asking us to increase the power of the Agricultural Department and send its emissaries into the dairies of the country. That was done. Now, it is proposed to place in the hands of the Commissioner of Agriculture this authority, which is to continue when the deputy marshals shall have been dispensed with, when we shall have done away with that species of Federal power—it is proposed to sent the agent of the Agricultural Department into the premises of the farmers of the country to search where he is not wanted, and where I predict in some cases he will not be needed.

There is no observance whatever of constitutional rights or constitutional limitations in this bill from one end of it to the other. Let me read one section of the Constitution. I know it is regarded as not very reputable in this day to clamor in favor of constitutional government; but what does the fourth Article of the Constitution provide?

The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized.

Now, what does this bill provide in section 8?

Any officer appointed under this act, or the act to which this is amendatory, may enter in the daytime, for the purposes of examination and inspection under the provisions hereof, any building, inclosure, or place where animals are kept by the owner, consignee, or custodian thereof; and any person refusing permission to an officer of the Department of Agriculture appointed as aforesaid to make necessary examination of animals supposed to be diseased, or attempting to prevent such officer from entering upon premises where such disease is supposed to exist, shall, upon conviction, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and be punished by a fine of not less than fifty nor more than five hundred dollars, or by imprisonment for not less than thirty nor more than one hundred days, or by both fine and imprisonment, at the discretion of the court; and any person who shall knowingly conceal the existence of such disease or diseases on his premises, and who shall fail to report their presence to the proper authorities, shall, upon conviction, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, punishable by the same penalties as are provided for resisting the officers of the Department of Agriculture before mentioned.

Mr. HATCH. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MCMILLIN. I will, sir.

Mr. HATCH. Does the gentleman contend that the provision in this bill which allows an officer of the bureau of animal industry to simply enter the premises or the barns where cattle are kept, is in conflict with Article IV, which he has just read from the amendments of the Constitution?

Mr. MCMILLIN. I have read the article, and if it is not plain enough for the gentleman to understand it, no explanation on earth could reach him. It certainly is in conflict with it. The constitutional provision is broad enough to cover all of the citizen's premises and keep out every interloper.

Mr. SPRINGER. My friend will observe that this section applies only to the District of Columbia, where Congress has exclusive jurisdiction.

Mr. HATCH. No; it is general.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The gentleman from Missouri himself states it is general. It shows it on its face.

Mr. HATCH. There is no question about it.

Mr. MCMILLIN. And I undertake to say there is not in the world a mind discriminating enough to point out why that section is not in violation of the clause of the Constitution I have read. Where in that clause is authority given to enter your barn and not your house? Is any distinction drawn? Does any man suppose there is a distinction?

Mr. HATCH. Will the gentleman allow me another question?

Mr. MCMILLIN. With pleasure.

Mr. HATCH. Does not the gentleman know that the exact language embodied in that section of this bill is now a statute of the United States, and has been so for nearly twenty-five years?

Mr. MCMILLIN. It is nowhere provided you can without the making of the proper affidavit, without the proper proceeding, according to the provisions of the Constitution, after probable cause is shown, enter upon the property of a citizen of a State without his permission.

Mr. HATCH. It is so provided in the internal-revenue law, and that has been the law for twenty-five years.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The only way is by affidavit showing proper cause as provided under the Constitution of the United States. The revenue laws are not analogous, because the tax-collector is armed with authority which has the force and effect of an execution. But I assert that in no instance not involving revenue can a decision of the Supreme Court be found sanctioning entrance by force on premises, except in pursuance of the provisions of Article IV of the Constitution.

Mr. SPRINGER. Allow me to ask the gentleman from Tennessee whether, under the Constitution of the United States, it is not permissible to enter ships entering our ports for the purpose of investigating whether or not cholora or other contagious infectious disease exist?

Mr. MCMILLIN. But the gentleman from Illinois fails to draw the distinction between that point where the Congress of the United States has exclusive jurisdiction and where it has no jurisdiction, unless such as the State gives it.

Mr. MCADOO. That power to which the gentleman refers is the naval police power.

Mr. SPRINGER. Into every vessel coming to the United States we have the right, without affidavit, to send our quarantine officers for the purpose of inspection to learn whether or not they bring cholera or other contagious or infectious diseases into the United States.

Mr. MCMILLIN. During the reign of George III, more than a hundred years ago, the principles embodied in the fourth Article of the Constitution were recognized even in England as common-law principles; principles which the Crown would not dare to invade. When our fathers who framed the Constitution of the United States came to deliberate upon our organic law, they wisely thought that every barrier should be raised againstthe encroachments of governmental power upon the rights of the people.

With the eye of prophecy they foresaw that the time would come when these great principles would be assailed and these glorious heritages would be destroyed. They therefore incorporated the article which I have read, and, as they thought, put it forever beyond the power of the Government to invade the home of the citizen except in accordance with the provisions of the fourth Article, which requires that "no warrants shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched and the persons or things to be seized."

Mr. Chairman, I behold with sadness the little reverence that is paid in modern legislation to the Constitution which we have sworn to support. It is certainly the dearest heritage of the American citizen, and it ought to be the last sacrifice that he is willing to make. If the ordinary statutes are broken, there is hope that they can ultimately be enforced. If lawlessness becomes common, there is a possibility that you may restore quiet and that prosperity may again reign; but once you break down the Constitution and destroy the reverence of the people for it you can have no enforcement of the laws that are made under it, and the people will cease to have that reverence for their institutions which is essential for their perpetuation.

Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to amplify the point I have already made, or to take up my time further by showing that the power does not exist in the Government of the United States which this bill provides shall be exercised.

Mr. Chairman, does this bill provide for showing "probable cause" for entering before you enter? Does it provide affidavits shall be made, that fortification standing in front of a citizen which has to be met before you can enter his premises? Does the bill require that the place to be searched shall be described? Not at all. But these deputies of the Commissioner of Agriculture, these agents of the Agricultural Department, above all law, above the Constitution, if they desire to do so, in violation of all rights of citizens, in every homestead in the State, are permitted to range at will, and, as I have already stated, without any constitutional authority in the world. All they have to show is that they come from the Commissioner of Agriculture, and that they are armed with that Department's autocratic proclamation of war of extermination against his stock; and then if you resist them you are dragged to the Federal court, and may be fined $500 and imprisoned one hundreds days.

Sir, I would not give this authority in violation of the Constitution to any man or junta of men that ever walked the broad earth. I yield up my right to be free from search and to have my property free from unlawful seizure without a protest! I surrender that dearest of all the articles of our glorious Constitution, which secures to me personal liberty, without a murmur! No, sir, never! If nothing will do you but more offices in Washington, more power in the Federal Government, more criminal cases in Federal courts, and more American citizens in your jails, I hope you will at least have the decency to require that oath shall be made and "probable cause" shown before my premises are searched and sacked. And, sir, if the day has come, which John Randolph predicted would come, when it is considered a disgrace for a man to proclaim himself for the Constitution, it is a dark, dark day for the American people.

I felt, Mr. Chairman, I would not be doing my duty if I did not call attention to this plain infraction of the constitutional rights of citizens.

Now, what more do we find? I admit the right of the Congress of the United States to regulate commerce among the States; but I wish to call attention to that part of the bill which results in the inspection of cattle affected with this disease in the States. A proviso has been added to this bill not contained in the original law. It is as follows:

That whenever a State or Territory, in any section of which a contagious or infectious disease exists which the Commissioner of Agriculture has declared to be dangerous to the animal industries of the nation, fails to make provisions for its extirpation, or to co-operate with the plans of the Commissioner of Agriculture for the extirpation of such disease, the President of the United States, on the presentation of the facts by the Commissioner of Agriculture, shall be authorized to declare in quarantine the said State or Territory.

Shall declare in quarantine any State or Territory! But, sir, it does not stop there; look at the next clause:

Or such part of said State or Territory as he may deem dangerous to the animal industries of the country, and to regulate or prohibit the transportation of cattle out of said State, Territory, or District.

What authority has the President of the United States to go into the State of Michigan and select a certain locality in that State, or into Virginia, or into Georgia, or into Maryland, and say that the cattle in that part of Maryland, or Georgia, or Virginia shall not be carried to any other part of the same State? It does not exist. There is no such authority granted under the Constitution. If the citizen keeps his cattle within the State, is not moving them, or seeking to move them, I know of no clause of the Constitution which authorizes the President to go, in violation of the wishes of the State and citizens, and throw a quarantine around the farm or county, and cut it off from the balance of the State. How would you enforce the quarantine? With troops? With deputy marshals?

Mr. BURROWS. Suppose the carrying of them into other States would spread disease which would sweep off the entire stock of the country.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman misapprehends my point. My argument is directed against that provision of the bill which authorizes the President of the United States to quarantine a particular section or district of a State against the balance of the State.

Mr. BURROWS. But suppose if he did not do that——

Mr. McMILLIN. He does not have the power to do it.

Mr. BURROWS. But suppose that were not done and the cattle of that infected district were carried throughout the country.

Mr. McMILLIN. Under the Constitution of the United States the President has no authority to go into a State except under the right which I concede to prohibit the transportation of diseased cattle to other States. The power does not exist under the Constitution for any other purposes, where the State objects, and it is in my judgment an officious intermeddling with the rights of the States as guaranteed by the Constitution.

Mr. BURROWS. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. McMILLIN. With pleasure.

Mr. BURROWS. But suppose this cattle disease infected a State, and that disease was carried in the atmosphere, and there was no effort made to destroy it or to destroy the herd in which it existed, so that unless it was destroyed the disease would spread over the whole United States, do you hold that the Congress of the United States has no power to stay the progress of that disease?

Mr. McMILLIN. The power of the Government of the United States is in reference to the regulation of the commerce between the States, and it can only interfere where the transportation of cattle from one State to another becomes inter-commerce. Until it does become interstate commerce the Government can not interfere. The Government can not take hold of it except under that clause of the Constitution which authorizes Congress to regulate commerce between the States.

Mr. BURROWS. Do you hold if an infected herd lying across a State line, and which if permitted to exist, the disease would be carried to an adjacent State, the Government of the United States has no power to arrest it?

Mr. McMILLIN. I hold that the Government of the United States has no power to enter for any purpose except as provided for under that clause of the Constitution; that is, for the regulation of commerce among the States. If the owner of cattle of a State is not seeking to remove those cattle there is no power conferred upon the Government of the United States to meddle without called on by the State, and it must keep its hands off, as the State alone has the power to deal with the matter.

There is another provision of the bill to which I wish to call the attention of the House, and that is its fiscal provision, that which provides the mode and manner of paying for the cattle which may be destroyed under the terms of the act. Now, in his fervor and zeal a few days ago when discussing this question my distinguished friend from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] said that the infected cattle were "worse than worthless," and I use his exact phraseology. And yet, Mr. Chairman, under the terms of this bill he proposes to pay three-fourths of the actual value of these cattle, and not the value as assessed according to what they are worth after infection, but three-fourths of their value as sound cattle.

Mr. FUNSTON. That is for the purpose of getting them exposed, to have the disease brought to light.

Mr. McMILLIN. To have them exposed! Well, you will have more "exposed" cattle than you dream of. You may have every old measly hog, every weak-lunged cow in the whole country marched up to the Government slaughter-pen to get a good price for them.

Mr. FUNSTON. Well, we will have better judges of the matter than that.

Mr. McMILLIN. But your judge has no discretion. He must pay three-fourths of the value, according to the terms of the law, of the cow before it became infected with the disease. He does not pay three-fourths of the value of the diseased cow, but of a sound cow when diseased. Now in your fervent zeal to reach out your hand to another class of power you propose to do injustice to the tax-payers of the country, and make them pay for that which you thus declare is worthless.

Mr. FUNSTON. What would be your remedy?

Mr. McMILLIN. My remedy would be, where you have got the authority to destroy, where that authority exists at all, to go, and if decided that the disease exists, destroy the cattle, and if worthless, pay nothing. If your cow doctors make a mistake and kill a sound cow, pay its full value.

Mr. HAMMOND. Will the gentleman from Tennessee permit me to correct what I think was an inadvertance in his statement or misstatement of the law a moment since?

Mr. McMILLIN. I yield to my friend from Georgia with pleasure.

Mr. HAMMOND. If I understood the gentleman distinctly he mentioned the fact that this bill would cover sick hogs. As I understand it, although that great industry is perhaps much larger than the beef industry, it is not covered by the bill.

Mr. HATCH. Let me say to the gentleman that all contagious diseases of animals are included in the original act creating the Bureau of Animal Industry. This bill now under consideration is an amendment to that act for the purpose of stamping out this disease.

Mr. McMILLIN. This is only an amendment to the act. That power is conveyed by the original bill, and you have every class of disease coming within the cognizance of the Department of Agriculture, but this is the only one in regard to which such extraordinary legislation is attempted.

Mr. HATCH. There is no provision in the original act, or in this act, to pay for the condemnation and destruction of any other animal than cattle affected with pleuro-pneumonia.

Mr. STEELE. You have abandoned the hog altogether.

Mr. HAMMOND. Then the hog cholera might come in and sweep off all the hogs of the United States, and no provision made for the destruction of infected droves.

Mr. McMILLIN. And thus you see one of the biggest industries of the country is beneath the notice of this Agricultural Department.

Mr. HAMMOND. That is the point I wanted to draw out; the point I wished to make.

Mr. McMILLIN. The trouble is, and I thank my friend from Georgia for his interruption, which has brought out this point, that as a Congress we are powerless to do what the people themselves will do, and infinitely better. The great trouble is that when we come here with our commissions in our pocket and get our mileage of from one hundred to three thousand dollars and are sworn in and look up at these coats of arms over our heads, their grandeur and glory lead us utterly to forget that there is a power still behind us much greater than any Congress that ever assembled, the power of the people themselves, who will take care of themselves if you will take your rapacious hands out of their pockets and your heavy arm from off their shoulders.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. That is just it.

Mr. McMILLIN. May I ask what time I have remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has five minutes remaining.

Mr. McMILLIN. In as much as I have promised to yield five minutes of my time to the gentleman from New Jersey, I will desist and yield him the time.

Mr. McADOO. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me to be almost incredible that at a time when all the world is struggling for home rule, that right here in the very house of its friends that great principle should be stricken down. This bill is a direct attack upon the whole Federal system. There has existed from the foundation of this Government to the present day a class of utilitarians who have been attacking the Constitution because it interfered with carrying out their selfish projects. Gentlemen upon both sides of this House say, shall we allow these valuable herds to die when we have it in our power to prevent it; and one gentleman—the gentleman from Michigan—suggests that in cases of cholera vast numbers of people will perish unless we bring to bear the powers of the Federal Government to prevent the spread of such a disease. As a fact these arguments are not tenable. Mr. Chairman, the Federal system has some disadvantages as an offset to its unassailable benefits. It is an old adage that "every rose has its thorn." You can get some passing bribes, I admit, for abandoning home rule.

If present and passing benefit is an argument in behalf of bills here to violate the Constitution it will be violated every day. I am sorry to say, but I believe the fact can be verified, that petitions could be obtained and presented here from various boards of trade in these United States asking uniform laws with relation to debts and upsetting all State enactments. We have already petitions here for uniform laws in regard to divorces; and we have petitions for uniform laws in regard to other subjects, and for Federal interference in matters that belong peculiarly to the States. If then, you are going to consult all these selfish interests, and break down the barriers of the Constitution at their demand, you can succeed through Congress in centralizing this Government beyond recognition from its framers. Centralized government means empire, the destruction of liberty, and caste and class against equality and justice. Our farmers, mechanics, and laborers should be the first to protest against these invasions of Federal power, now being perpetrated in their name, as they will be the first to feel their baneful effect when centralization has become an established fact. The salvation of a few decrepit cows and consumptive hogs will little compensate for the destruction of the Republic.

I would rather for my part see all of these alleged-to-be-infected herds perish than that this cardinal principle of local self-government should be stabbed here by the passage of this bill. In saying this, I am admitting, for the sake of argument, that this law would save them. This is denied by the ablest scientists, who say it is practically valueless and that pleuro-pneumonia can not be stamped out in this way; and many go so far as to deny that the disease is even contagious. We do not want bureaucratic government. We are not legislating to create offices, but to protect freemen in their rights.

The eloquent and able gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] visited my State the other night, and delivered a lecture on agriculture, and was received as he should be, with great enthusiasm; and I have no doubt many of our people agree with him in his advocacy of this and kindred measures. But his friends there have not studied the other side of the question—the question of principle. It is not a question of utility, it is not a question of conserving personal interests, it is not a question of business or trade; it is a question of the highest politics. Shall we, in answer to the demands of selfish business interests, violate the Constitution of the United States by placing in the hands of the Federal Government rights within the States which are not given to them by that instrument?

Shall we adopt unconstitutional means to achieve an otherwise alleged laudable end? Shall we overreach ourselves and apply Federal remedies to local diseases? Can any good come from doing evil and violating cardinal constitutional reservations of power inherent in the States? I believe nothing but evil can come from these measures.

This bill provides—for what? That the President of the United States shall usurp the place of the governor of the State within the State; that he, from his place here in Washington, shall quarantine a portion of the territory of a State, becoming superior within the State to the State government itself; and that the minions of the Federal Government shall have the right by this bill in the communities policed and kept by the States to go into the private premises of the citizen, inspect his cattle, and take his property at a compensation fixed by this bill.

Mr. Chairman, this and other bills of this kind are working an injury to popular government and to the Federal system. You are educating the people insidiously by these measures to look not to their State governments, not to their local and municipal governments, but you are teaching the people of this country to look for remedies for all existing evils to the Government at Washington. Under this system of bribes to quiet the conscience of the people—under the practical illustrations of these bills passed by large majorities, we find vast bodies of our citizens in various parts of the United States inundating this Federal assembly with petitions, asking for remedies of grievances which are local and State, and which the local authorities and the State alone have the power to remedy and deal with.

I therefore, Mr. Chairman, even if I knew that many of the people of my State were asking for the passage of this and similar bills, protest, on behalf of State rights legitimate under the Constitution, and of local self-government and home rule, against the Federal Government undertaking to remedy evils over which the Constitution has given it no jurisdiction.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HATCH. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY].

Mr. CAREY. To my mind the subject of contagious pleuro-pneumonia or lung disease is a most important question to this country to-day. The great cattle interest is in imminent danger from this disease. The States where this disease exists are not responsible for its existence, as the disease in every instance has been imported from foreign countries. It is a question that I believe the Federal Government can deal with, and I believe that it is utterly impossible for the States and Territories to successfully deal with it.

This disease, as I have said, is an exotic. It has been brought from abroad; and not in one instance has it broken out in this country where those skilled in making investigations have not been able to trace it from cattle imported into the country. In 1884 a car-load of thorough-bred bulls was sent West from the city of Baltimore. We trace a portion of this car-load to Troy, Ohio, and there the disease breaks out. We trace an animal from this car-load to ——, and there the disease breaks out. We trace a portion of these cattle to Virginia, in the State of Illinois, and the disease breaks out in that place. It is traced to Springfield, and finally to a little town near Chicago. It is traced to the State of Missouri, and also to the State of Kentucky. From this one car-load of infected cattle shipped from the city of Baltimore all this occurred within a very few months.

I now ask the members of this House how it is possible for these several States to deal with this disease when the commerce of this country is shipping these diseased cattle from one State to the other, and they are liable to affect the cattle in every State in the American Union?

How much did the introduction of this disease into the State of Kentucky cost that State? Ex-Senator Williams says not less than $20,000,000 by the depreciation in the value of the thorough-bred cattle of that State. It has been estimated that the importation of this disease into the State of Missouri cost that State alone in the depreciation in the value of her cattle not less than $10,000,000. If the States where their cattle are cared for in pastures or in farm-yards can not deal with this disease, I ask you how in the Western States, where the cattle range in common in vast herds, where it would be impossible to quarantine the cattle, how it is to be dealt with there when it has spread out over that country? I ask you how you are to deal with the disease when it breaks out in the State of Texas or elsewhere—the same as it has in Australia and New Zealand? It will spread till it destroys millions and millions of dollars in the value of cattle every year.

This bill which has been reported by the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture is not in fact an amendment of existing law. It is to give greater power, to give more money, to enable the Commissioner of Agriculture to successfully cope with the disease.

While I believe that even more stringent measures should be adopted than this bill, I believe great good can be accomplished under it; and at this late day of the session it is the duty of every member of the House who takes any interest in this matter to vote for the bill and see that it is promptly passed with such amendments as may be deemed desirable.

There are some peculiarities about this diseaae. As I have stated, it is an exotic disease. It causes a portion of the lung of the animal to decay. In some instances the decayed part may become encysted and the lung may heal; but scientific men have told us that even after this has taken place, the power to contaminate other cattle still remains for at least fifteen months; so that there is really no safety in quarantined cattle. The only way to-day to eradicate this disease is to destroy, not only the affected animals, but every animal that is exposed to the disease. Can this Government afford to do that? I believe the cattle of this country are worth at least $1,500,000,000.

We know that cattle and the products of cattle stand fourth in the list of articles that we export from this country, cotton standing first, wheat and its products second, the hog and its products third, neat cattle and their products fourth. The exportation of cattle from this country amounts to not less than $58,000,000 each year. How has the exportation of cattle from this country been affected by this disease? We find that, owing to the existence of pleuro-pneumonia in the vicinity of the Atlantic and in the eastern border of this country, an order was made by the privy council of Great Britain that all cattle landing on those shores from this country should be slaughtered within twenty-four hours after landing. What was the result of this order? It immediately reduced the exports of live cattle to Great Britain to the amount of two or three million dollars each year. This is a question of export, a question of interstate commerce; and if Congress has the right to regulate any question I believe it has a right to regulate this.

Now, does the disease exist? It is true the learned gentleman from New York [Mr. SWINBURNE] expresses great doubt about its existence in this country. It is said that doctors always disagree; but we have a remarkable case presented, so far as the city of Chicago is concerned. Dr. Murray, who is recognized as the most experienced veterinarian in the State of Michigan, has pronounced the disease pleuro-pneumonia, or contagious lung plague. Dr. Gadsden, of Philadelphia, who has had large experience in England, as well as this country, has pronounced this disease contagious pleuro-pneumonia, or lung plague. Dr. Caldwell, the State veterinarian of Illinois, has also pronounced it contagious pleuro-pneumonia, or lung plague. Dr. Hopkins, who went through the entire siege in the State of New York as one of the board to eradicate the disease in that State, has made a critical examination and has pronounced it contagious pleuro-pneumonia.

I could go on and cite a long list of veterinarians who have made a critical examination of this disease in the city of Chicago since its outbreak there; and not one of them has yet cast any doubt upon the question of the existence of this disease there. Dr. SWINBURNE says that he has not seen the disease in the city of Chicago. He told me that he passed through that city without taking time to make an examination. I say that when $1,500,000,000 of property is in danger in this country, we should not, by reason of a mere doubt, withhold the legislation which appears to be necessary.

Mr. MILLARD. Can the gentleman state accurately or approximately the number of cattle that have died from pleuro-pneumonia, or are alleged to have died from it within the last year?

Mr. CAREY. I can only answer that question in one way. We know that the people of Chicago are so much interested in this matter that, though for two years the men who own the distilleries in that city kept the existence of the disease a secret——

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HATCH. I yield the gentleman two minutes more to answer the question which has been put to him.

Mr. CAREY. The distilleries in the city of Chicago, since the existence of this disease was known, have submitted to the killing of 2,200 head of cattle without any law whatever to pay them for the cattle thus slaughtered, they thinking perhaps that, if Congress did not, the State of Illinois would pay them for these animals.

Mr. MORGAN. Were not those animals which were seized and showed no signs of the disease sold afterward?

Mr. CAREY. As to those that showed no signs of the disease, their meat was sold I understand.

Mr. MORGAN. How many showed signs of the disease?

Mr. MILLARD. Were not the 2,200 animals referred to, animals which had been exposed rather than animals actually suffering with the disease?

Mr. HATCH. Several hundred of them were diseased

Mr. CAREY. As I understand, several hundred of them were diseased.

But now, to bring the matter closely home to gentlemen here, I will say that if any of you had gone to the Agricultural Department a few days ago you would have seen there a diseased lung brought here from the city of Baltimore, where the Government during the past year has slaughtered 300 head of animals. You would have seen a lung diseased with pleuro-pneumonia and weighing 50 pounds, though in a healthy condition it would not have weighed over six or seven pounds. If gentlemen will go to the Agricultural Department from time to time, if they will take the testimony of the most skillful experts of this country, they will find that this disease does exist to-day beyond a doubt.

Now, I think it is very poor policy for men to stand up here and assert that this disease does not exist, when there is not a prominent veterinarian or a prominent scientific man in the country to-day who has examined the disease as it exists in Chicago and Baltimore who does not admit that it is the lung-plague or contagious pleuro-pneumonia. I think but few men comprehend——

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CAREY, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. HATCH. I now yield eight minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER].

Mr. SPRINGER withholds his remarks for revision. [See Appendix.]

Mr. HATCH. I ask for the reading of the bill by sections for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That to better promote the exportation of live-stock from the United States, and to increase, protect, and facilitate the commerce in cattle among the several States, the act establishing a Bureau of Animal Industry, approved May 29, 1884, be, and the same is hereby, amended as follows:

Repeal section 1, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Commissioner of Agriculture shall organize in his department a Bureau of Animal Industry, and shall appoint a chief thereof, who shall be a competent veterinary surgeon, and whose duty it shall be to investigate and report upon the condition of the domestic animals of the United States, their protection and use, and also inquire into and report the causes of contagious, infectious, and communicable diseases among them, and the means for the prevention and cure of the same, and to collect such information on these subjects as shall be valuable to the agricultural and commercial interests of the country; and the Commissioner of Agriculture is hereby authorized to employ a force sufficient for this purpose. The salary of the chief of said bureau shall be $3,000 per annum; and the Commissioner shall appoint a clerk for said bureau, with a salary of $1,500 per annum."

Mr. HATCH. I move, in line 24, after the word "thousand," to insert "five hundred;" so it will read, "the salary of the chief of said bureau shall be $3,500 per annum."

Mr. HOLMAN. That will be above the usual rate of pay for such position, and I hope my friend will not insist upon his amendment. It is above the rate of salaries allowed in the Departments.

Mr. HATCH. I will state for the information of the gentleman and the House that the best talent in this direction should be employed, and that a salary of $3,000 is less than is now paid to veterinary surgeons elsewhere in the United States engaged in the same character of service.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Who occupies the present position?

Mr. HATCH. Dr. Salmon.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Is he not efficient?

Mr. HATCH. He is in my judgment both able and efficient.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Does he decline to work longer for three thousand?

Mr. HATCH. I do not know that issue has been made with him, but the friends of the measure who wish to see it carried out in the interest of the country and especially of the cattle industry, all agree, so far as I have conferred with them, that the salary should be increased from $3,000 to $3,500 a year. And whether the present incumbent of this position remains or it is necessary to supply his place with another, it is believed the Commissioner of Agriculture should have the right to offer such salary as such a gentleman can obtain elsewhere in the United States for like services. I can not name another. Dr. Laws, of New York, would not come here for such salary. He receives at present larger salary at Carroll University. There is no more efficient man than the present incumbent of this position, and it is only right and proper his salary as chief of this bureau should be fixed at $3,500 a year.

Mr. EDEN. I wish to ask the gentleman from Missouri about what number of persons will be employed under this clause of the bill?

Mr. HATCH. I will answer candidly and frankly the change made in this section as now reported over the present law is to strike out the restriction to the employment of twenty persons at any one time. There is no limit in this section to the number of men except the discretion of the Commissioner. It is provided whenever this disease may break out the Commissioner of Agriculture is authorized to employ a force sufficient for its extirpation. He therefore has the right to employ as many men as he pleases.

Mr. EDEN. The object of my inquiry was not to limit the number especially, but it seems to me that in giving this general authority to the Commissioner of Agriculture to employ just as many men as he chooses there ought to be an estimate, at least, on which the House might form some judgment as to the propriety of such a measure.

Mr. HATCH. I will state to the gentleman that it is utterly impossible to form an estimate of what sort of a force will be needed. It must be left entirely to the discretion and executive ability and integrity of the officer himself. You can not undertake to fix any limit to it, because you do not know what the emergency may be. He may need one hundred men a month or a week, or he may need five hundred men; no man can tell.

Mr. EDEN. Does the gentleman think that a thousand would be a sufficient number under this clause of the bill?

Mr. HATCH. I would not undertake to limit it to a thousand or any other number. We have placed it within the discretion and executive power of the officer whom the President of the United States shall appoint to that position to execute the law.

Mr. CUTCHEON. No, sir. The Commissioner may employ either professional or non-professional men, and pay such wages as he finds necessary.

Mr. EDEN. It seems to me extraordinary that we should clothe the Commissioner of Agriculture with power to employ just as many men as he pleases; and I suppose he fixes the compensation, for the bill does not. There ought to be some limit; while you might make the number large and liberal and fix the compensation to meet the emergency the bill provides for, yet there should be some limit placed to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 52, noes 51.

Mr. HOLMAN, Mr. BLANCHARD, and others. No quorum.

Mr. HATCH. The gentleman from Indiana will waste more time for the purpose of saving $500 than would pay the salary of this officer four times over.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I make the point of order that the debate is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. BLANCHARD and Mr. HATCH were appointed tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 100, noes 63.

So the amendment was adopted.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. CRISP having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendment, in which concurrence was requested, the bill (H. R. 1280) to authorize Frank W. Hunt to erect and maintain a ferry across the Missouri River at the military reservation of Fort Buford.

Also, that the Senate insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. 2539) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to sell certain property at Abingdon, Va., and agreed to the conference asked by the House on said bill, and had appointed Mr. MAHONE, Mr. SPOONER, and Mr. CAMDEN managers on the part of the Senate at said conference.

Also, that the Senate had passed a bill (S. 729) for the relief of Rear-Admiral Carter, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

PLEURO-PNEUMONIA BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment, to come in after the word "purposes," in the twenty-third line:

The Clerk read as follows:

But the total expense of such force shall not exceed $50,000 in any one year.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, the bill as it now stands places no limitation upon either the number or the compensation of the forces which may be employed by the Commissioner of Agriculture under the terms of this bill. He is made the sole judge both of the adequacy of the number and the measure of their compensation. I think that some limitation ought to be placed either upon the number or the gross expense. For instance, if the Commissioner should think it necessary to employ one thousand men and pay them a compensation of $1,000 each, he could thus create a debt against the United States of $1,000,000. I think the gentleman in charge of the bill will not object to placing some limitation upon the expenditures. I am willing to leave in the hands of the Commissioner the power to fix the number to be employed in some exigency, but I would like to have a limitation placed in the bill in some such shape as will prevent the creation of an unlimited debt upon the United States Treasury, for if pleuro-pneumonia should break out in a State he may think it necessary to employ a much larger number of agents than the occasion requires; and I do not see how, under this bill, in which we do not undertake to fix the compensation, such a state of affairs could be prevented unless we limit the amount which he may expend in any one year.

I will not take further time of the House in discussing the matter, but I think it ought to be adopted.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Chairman, I can only repeat my former statement that the committee in framing this bill believed it necessary to place this extraordinary power in the hands of the Commissioner, because in no other way can a proper execution of the law be had. It is utterly impossible that the Commissioner could create any debt against the United States. He can only expend such money as this Congress shall from time to time appropriate for this purpose; and while we are undertaking to place a limitation upon the force, either in number or amount, we are simply hampering the execution of the law. I know it is an extraordinary power. I have stated it frankly to the House. But this is a great emergency which demands it.

Mr. CUTCHEON. If the gentleman from Missouri has finished what he wishes to say, I will add this: I maintain that this bill does put it in the power of the Commissioner of Agriculture to create a debt to any amount against the Government of the United States. It says in express terms:

The Commissioner of Agriculture is hereby authorized to employ a force sufficient for this purpose.

There is full and plenary authority given to the Commissioner to employ a force whose limitation is only in his discretion and whose compensation he alone can fix.

Mr. HATCH. Does the gentleman from Michigan not know that there is a law which prohibits any Department from expending any sum in excess of appropriations or involving the Government in any contract for the future payment of money in excess of such appropriations?

Mr. CUTCHEON. But when the United States Congress by express words of legislation authorizes him to employ this force can he not summon a posse comitatus and claim the payment of the debt?

Mr. HATCH. He can only expend such money as is appropriated in the bill.

Mr. CUTCHEON. This is not a limitation on the appropriation, but it is a plenary authority that is given to the Commissioner of Agriculture.

Mr. McMILLIN. I agree with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON] that there should be some limitation contained in this bill. There is no limitation as to the number of people to be employed under it or as to the length of time they shall be employed. There is no limitation as to the salaries that shall be paid them, and there is not even a requirement so far as I now remember that the Commissioner of Agriculture shall report the names of the men he employs.

Mr. HATCH. Let me state to the gentleman from Tennessee that the law of which this is amendatory provides that the Commissioner shall report at every term of Congress the name of every single employé, how long employed, what he has paid him, and how he has expended every dollar of the appropriation.

Mr. McMILLIN. That, Mr. Chairman, had escaped me, as it is nearly three years since that law passed. It had escaped me that there was even that limitation. But still that does not correct the evil. There is still here unlimited power to employ men and put them in the field and give them authority to go everywhere and search everywhere, whether they are sought by the State authorities or not.

I think the gentleman from Michigan is right. I would not give that authority to any man in the United States. In every other Department we put some limitation upon our appropriations.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. McMILLIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. How can we in framing this bill anticipate the kind of help that the Commissioner may need? He may need experts; he may need herdsmen, or farm hands. It is impossible to anticipate precisely what kind of force he will employ.

Mr. McMILLIN. I believe the gentleman from Iowa is exactly correct, and one object of my discussing this question was to show that neither Congress itself nor the Commissioner of Agriculture nor any other man or body on earth knows what is needed. We go here in the dark.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. The Commissioner can tell when the exigency arises.

Mr. McMILLIN. And here stands the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] who for three long years has proclaimed the exigency is now on us.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. The gentleman does not quite understand me. I mean when a condition arises where the Commissioner must employ this help he can tell what he needs. But you cannot frame a bill to tell how many men he shall employ, or what kind of men, experts, slaughterers, or mere herdsmen, are needed.

Mr. McMILLIN. He is authorized to employ this force to obtain information; and he knows what information he wants to get.

Mr. BAYNE. Will the gentleman from Tennessee permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. McMILLIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BAYNE. I understand that this disease is a year and a half in process of incubation.

Mr. McMILLIN. I will state to the gentleman right there, the doctors disagree as to that, and the maxim in that case is that the patient is in danger.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PETERS rose.

Mr. HATCH. Will the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS] yield to me to read the last section of the act?

Mr. PETERS. I yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. HATCH. Section 11 of the present law is as follows:

That the Commissioner of Agriculture shall report annually to Congress at the commencement of each session a list of the names of all persons employed, an itemized statement of all expenditures under this act, and full particulars of the means adopted and carried into effect for the suppression of contagious, infectious, or communicable diseases among domestic animals.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Can he create a debt under that?

Mr. HATCH. No, sir; not a dollar.

Mr. PETERS. I think it is entirely unnecessary to apprehend any danger from the power that is given here to the Commissioner of Agriculture, for this reason: The bill provides:

The Commissioner of Agriculture is hereby authorized to employ a force sufficient for this purpose.

Every member of this House knows the moment the Commissioner of Agriculture employs more than a sufficient force under that provision a resolution of investigation would be introduced in this House by the party that was in the minority, and that official would be investigated, and would be shown up if he had done anything wrong. It is all idle to talk of any head of a bureau under the vigilance of the political minority abusing a discretion that may be placed in his power.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. PETERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Why do you not give the Secretary of War plenary power to enlist as many soldiers as he thinks necessary to protect the frontier?

Mr. PETERS. That is another question. He can use of the Army as many as he pleases.

Mr. CUTCHEON. But you limit him to twenty-five thousand.

Mr. PETERS. Because the Army is limited to twenty-five thousand, and because there is no parallel between the Army and a force of this kind. But, aside from this, the objection is made that this bill gives an extraordinary power and interferes with the rights of the States. I want to call attention to the fact, as set forth in the bill, that it provides that the governors of the States, or the proper authorities in the several States, must consent to and acquiesce in the supervision that is proposed to be exercised, so that you can not force anything upon a State under the provisions of this bill. If the State authorities do not acquiesce, and the Commissioner of Agriculture ascertains that there is pleuro-pneumonia in the State, and that fact is certified to the President, then the President may declare that State in quarantine; but all these powers are hedged around by such safeguards as will never be overridden.

I send to the Clerk's desk to be read a concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of my State, which I have just received.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CRISP was recognized.

Mr. PETERS. I should like to have a little more time, Mr. Chairman, so as to have that resolution read.

Mr. CRISP. If I can be recognized next, I have no objection to yielding to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair cannot undertake to enter into any agreement of that sort.

Mr. CRISP. I yield to the gentleman.

The resolution was read, as follows:

[Senate concurrent resolution.]

Be it resolved by the senate of the State of Kansas, the house of representatives concurring therein, That our Senators in Congress be instructed and our Representatives requested to use all proper means to procure the passage of House bill 10359, being an act "to extirpate contagious pleuro-pneumonia, foot-and-mouth disease, and rinderpest among cattle, and to facilitate the exportation of cattle and the products of live-stock, and for other purposes." And that a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress by the secretary of state.

I, E. B. Allen, secretary of state of the State of Kansas, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of the original resolution now on file in my office, and that the same was adopted by the senate on the 19th day of January, A. D. 1887, and concurred in by the house January 21, 1887.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto subscribed my name and affixed my official seal. Done at Topeka this 25th day of January, A. D. 1887.

[SEAL.] E. B. ALLEN, Secretary of State.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, in the utmost good faith, I want to call the attention of the friends of the bill to the provisions of this section. This amendment looks solely to the matter of obtaining information. There is nothing in it that is directed to the execution of the law, or that would require the employment of herders or butchers; it simply looks to the gathering of information. Now the proposition is to grant to the Commissioner of Agriculture—a gentleman for whom we all have great respect, I admit—power to employ any number of people he pleases to perform this duty. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] says it is well known that it is not in the power of any officer of the Government to create a debt. I suggest to my friend that the passage of this bill will be a repeal, pro tanto, of that law, because here you expressly say to this officer that he may employ as many persons as he pleases, and if you have not appropriated a sufficient amount of money to pay those whom he employs, then, in my judgment—I say it modestly—any such person would have a right to go to the Court of Claims and obtain a judgment for his compensation.

Mr. HATCH. If the gentleman will yield to me for a moment, I wish to say that I have no doubt in the world about the correctness of my own position in this matter; but in order to meet the suggestions of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON], I am willing to add these words: "Within the provisions of the appropriation made under this law." That will prevent him from going outside the appropriation.

Mr. CRISP. The point is this: Here is an extraordinary delegation of power to an officer of the Government to employ as many persons as he pleases, at any compensation that he pleases, for what? Not to execute the provisions of the law, but to collect information.

Under this law the Commissioner of Agriculture might employ a person in every county in every State in the United States to keep the Department informed as to the condition of the cattle there, and the money that is to be expended for this purpose is to be used only to obtain such information. Now I submit that it is a very extraordinary thing if we are going to lodge in the head of a bureau the power to create a debt without any limitation except his own judgment and discretion.

That is something we have never done before. On the contrary, we have a law on the statute-book expressly providing that no head of a Department, no member of the Cabinet, if you please, not even the President himself, shall incur any debt for which the Government shall be liable; yet it is now proposed in this case to repeal that law as to the Commissioner of Agriculture, and allow him to appoint, if he pleases, a person in every county in every State, and to determine the compensation of such persons. As suggested by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON], it may involve a million dollars, and I submit that the amount which you have here appropriated is no limitation upon the authority given to the Commissioner under this law to make appointments and fix salaries.

Mr. PETERS. Can we repeal a general law by implication?

Mr. CRISP. It is not a general repeal; but here is a law which says that this particular officer of the Government may employ whom he pleases, and may fix the compensation of the persons he employs. The general law says that no officer of the Government may do that, but this law, passed subsequent to the general law, provides that this particular officer may do it in this case; and if it is legal for him to employ such persons and to fix their compensation, then I submit to the conscience of the committee that it is only just and honest and right that the Government should pay the persons whom he employs.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I move to amend by inserting——

The CHAIRMAN. There are two amendments pending—one offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON], and the other by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS].

Mr. PETERS. I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I move to amend by inserting after the word "purpose," in line 23, the words "within the limits of the appropriation that may be made for this purpose."

Mr. HAMMOND. "That may be made."

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes, that is right—within the limits of appropriations which may be made from time to time—made by this bill, or hereafter to be made.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. That leaves the provision still objectionable, because the Commissioner of Agriculture will still have power to fix the salaries—a power which we do not permit to be exercised in other cases.

Mr. SPRINGER. It seems to me the amendment as suggested will remove all the objections that gentlemen have made.

Mr. HATCH. I accept, so far as I have power to do so, the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL].

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina offer his amendment in addition to, or as a substitute for, the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON]?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I would like to hear that amendment read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "purpose," in line 23, insert "but the total expense of such force shall not exceed $50,000 in any one year."

Mr. HEMPHILL. I offer my amendment as a substitute for that just read. I move to insert after the word "purpose" the words "within the limits of the appropriation made by Congress."

Mr. McMILLIN. I suggest to the gentleman from South Carolina whether that would not authorize the Commissioner of Agriculture to expend for this purpose up to the limit of the appropriation contained in this bill.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Yes, the entire amount.

Mr. McMILLIN. And then there is the other provision authorizing him to expend the amount appropriated for a different purpose. So that he could make contracts to the extent of what this bill carries, $250,000; and then, in addition, there is the appropriation of $250,000 for the extirpation of disease; so that instead of this being a bill appropriating a quarter of a million dollars, it would appropriate half a million dollars.

Mr. SPRINGER. Oh, the gentleman multiplies too often.

Mr. McMILLIN. My mathematics are more accurate than those of the gentleman.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman mistakes the bill entirely. The intention is that the Commissioner shall expend the amount appropriated for the purposes indicated in the bill; nothing more.

Mr. CUTCHEON. There is nothing appropriated by the bill for this specific purpose.

Mr. McMILLIN. As the gentleman from Illinois seems to think his arithmetic better than mine, I want to know how much, under this amendment, would be appropriated for this specific purpose. Will the gentleman kindly answer me?

Mr. SPRINGER. The amount appropriated in the bill for this purpose.

Mr. McMILLIN. How much?

Mr. SPRINGER. Read the bill, and you will see.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman has certainly gone wrong in his arithmetic.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I have but a word to say, and I promise the committee that what I have to say will have no reference whatever to the merits of the pending amendment. [Laughter.]

It was stated during the general debate on this subject that the passage of this bill was not asked for by the agricultural interests of the country. I desire to say that, so far as concerns the State of New Jersey, which I have the honor to represent in part on this floor, that statement lacks all the elements of accuracy. One county within my district stands third in the United States in the amount and value of her dairy products. Herds are kept there, not for speculative purposes, but for practical use. I have had the honor of presenting the petition of the board of agriculture of that county, asking for the passage of this bill. Not only that; I have the honor of bringing to the attention of this House the petition of our State board of agriculture, asking that this measure may be enacted. Further than that, I have myself conversed with many of our most intelligent agriculturists, and I find them united in sentiment for the passage of some stringent provision by which our cattle may be protected from further contagion and disease.

I promised that what I had to say would have no reference to the pending amendment. I think I have kept my promise.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to oppose the substitute offered for my amendment, and will state the ground of my opposition. While the amount appropriated in the bill is $250,000 in one gross sum, the substitute, unless modified, will allow the Commissioner of Agriculture to set apart for the one purpose of gaining information under the first section the entire amount appropriated by the bill. I submit that it is wise to limit the amount which shall be used under that particular section and for that particular purpose. If $50,000, the amount named in my amendment, be not sufficient, then make it $75,000 or $100,000; but let us have some limitation upon the amount which the Commissioner may expend. Under this extraordinary provision he is authorized to employ such force as he may deem necessary; and there should be some limitation, either as to the number or compensation of the employés or as to the aggregate amount to be expended. There should be some restriction either in detail or in gross.

I think $50,000 is a reasonable sum to be fixed; and therefore I have named it in my amendment.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Would that come out of the gross sum appropriated in the bill?

Mr. CUTCHEON. I suppose so. This is a limitation of the amount which may be used under that particular provision.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, the committee have carefully considered this subject before presenting this bill, and must undoubtedly have taken into account the objection which would be made to this particular provision. They stated very frankly to the House that it was giving a very extraordinary power to the Commissioner of Agriculture. The committee, of course, trusted to the good sense, as I trust to the good sense, and as the House must trust to the good sense, of the Commissioner of Agriculture in the discharge of this important duty.

It is well, sir, to bear in mind, while you are giving this extraordinary power, without placing any limitation upon it, like that which the gentleman from Michigan and others would like to have imposed, that the force or the disease with which we are compelled to deal is itself unlimited. If pleuro-pneumonia should break out, and it should be confined to a certain district, the Commissioner would then need but few men. But, suppose after breaking out, it should rapidly extend and spread beyond that district where it began, the Commissioner of Agriculture would then need more money and more men to prevent its further spread. If we appropriate $250,000 the Commissioner of Agriculture will only use the amount of money and employ the number of men which may be necessary.

Here we stand, Mr. Chairman, attempting to control a disease which threatens the extinction of the entire stock interest of the country, and by placing a limitation upon the Commissioner as to the amount of money he shall expend or the number of persons he shall employ, we may prevent the Commissioner from striking at the proper time an effective blow and thereby saving millions of dollars invested in this stock industry throughout the country. It is not presumed that the Commissioner will expend the whole $250,000 unless he shall find it necessary. It is only provided that he may expend it if he needs it.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. My friend from Kansas forgets that the States are expected to co-operate with the General Government in the steps which may be taken for the extirpation of this cattle disease. In view of that fact, therefore, I think it is unnecessary to give this unlimited power to the Commissioner of Agriculture.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, that is no reason why we should give the Commissioner of Agriculture less power and smaller appropriation. You can not say what States will pay out money in co-operation with the United States in the extirpation of this disease. They may do nothing. If that should happen to be the case the Commissioner of Agriculture should be left, by our action, to make such use of this fund as would enable him to take effective steps for the extirpation of this disease.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. If the people of any State should be interested in having this work accomplished does my honorable friend imagine that State would not take the proper measures to co-operate with and aid the General Government in securing the extirpation of this cattle disease?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Oh! it is easy to see there may be a particular feeling in a State, owing to State rights or some other general theory, that would prevent that State from taking action. A State can not be compelled to take action, and I can not for my life see why there should be objection to this present bill as recommended by the committee. I shall favor the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Let me call attention to the fact when the country was threatened with cholera and small-pox, to such an extent as to threaten to extirpate the human family along the border, we even in that case limited the amount to be appropriated and placed it at the disposal of public officers. In that instance the amount was much lower.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. How much?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. About $100,000.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I have the floor, I believe.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I know it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. That probably was when there was no serious danger, and is no precedent in this case. Here stands a disease threatening one of the largest industries of the country. There is a pressing necessity for the extirpation of that disease.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HATCH. I wish to say to the House and to the friends of this bill particularly, that this is one of the most important amendments submitted by the committee, and if it be not accepted in the terms reported it is not necessary to consume any further time of the House in undertaking to legislate on this subject. It is the pivotal point in the whole bill, to give the Committee of Agriculture unlimited power with a force sufficient to suppress this disease wherever it may break out. The bill may as well be defeated as to adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan. The amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina covers the whole point, and ought to be accepted by the friends of the bill. I yield the remaining portion of my time to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL].

Mr. HEMPHILL. The difference between the amendment I have offered and that of the gentleman from Michigan is this: This is an act which proposes to establish this bureau with this additional authority. If you fix the limit at $50,000, no matter how greatly the disease may grow you can not make an additional appropriation without changing the organic act. Whereas under the amendment I have suggested any appropriation made for this purpose hereafte rcan be properly applied, and with the provision I have inserted, that in no case can a debt be run up against the United States, I think the proposition is a perfectly safe one.

I ask that the amendment be again reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "purpose" insert "within the limits of the appropriation made by Congress: Provided, That no debt against the Government shall be created under the provisions of this bill."

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that it strikes me the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina is subject to the objection which has been urged against it, and which is that there still remains the power in the Department to contract an indebtedness for this specific purpose up to the aggregate amount of the appropriation. In my opinion it would be better to provide that there should be no indebtedness contracted under the provisions of this bill, in excess of the amount appropriated, and then leave the discretion with the Department to employ as many men as it may see fit to carry out the purposes of the law.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. And pay whatever he chooses to pay them?

Mr. HEMPHILL. The very purpose of my amendment is to provide that no debt shall be created.

Mr. RYAN. If I understand your amendment, it is that no debt shall be contracted against the Government for the employment of this specific force.

Mr. HEMPHILL. No; it provides that no debt shall be contracted under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. RYAN. Very well; that being so, I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Chairman, as I understand the amendment, it authorizes the Commissioner of Agriculture to expend every dollar appropriated by this bill in the employment of such persons as he may select to search out pleuro-pneumonia.

Mr. RYAN. Then he would not have a dollar left for anything else.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. That is it exactly; and so far as his disposition to slaughter diseased cattle in different localities is concerned, no matter how great it might be, he would have no money to pay for them, and hence he could not execute the law.

I object to that for two reasons: First, it goes on the assumption that the States themselves will take no interest in ferreting out or hunting up the disease and taking steps to suppress it; that they will not aid the commissioner in ascertaining whether in fact the disease exists within their borders at all; and, second, because of the fact that they will not do this, then the whole duty devolves upon the General Government. If I understand the object of the law, it is to provide that the General Government shall assume general direction and control in this matter, and take such steps as may be necessary to suppress the disease; and this amount, that is the amount carried in the bill, is appropriated to employ not only a suitable force for purposes of investigation, but, beyond that, to pay for such cattle as may be slaughtered in the public interest; that is, with direct reference to the suppression of this disease.

I submit, then, that you should limit the amount that the commissioner may appropriate for the employment of agents, and the rest of the appropriation can then be devoted to the payment for cattle which have been destroyed.

Mr. HEMPHILL. If the Commissioner of Agriculture has no more sense than to use all the money in the employment of agents to hunt up pleuro-pneumonia, and leave nothing to pay for cattle destroyed, then there is no use in Congress making such an appropriation at all.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. That same argument might be advanced against every appropriation we make. We limit the number of men a Department may employ, and limit their compensation, without any reference to the adequacy of their sense to exercise wise discretion in carrying out the law.

Mr. CUTCHEON. We ought to have sense enough not to put it in the power of anybody to expend the entire appropriation for one object in the bill, leaving the rest to go unprovided for.

Mr. BRAGG. Will the gentleman from Ohio permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. BRAGG. Is it supposed that pleuro-pneumonia is a curable disease?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Well, I do not know whether it is or not; but I understand that in order to cure pleuro-pneumonia, or suppress it, the cattle that are affected have to be destroyed from the hoofs to the horns—absolutely wiped out.

Mr. BRAGG. If it be a disease of that kind, which absolutely destroys the cattle, why make any provision for paying for them at all? If the cattle are worthless, suffering from an incurable disease which must ultimately destroy them, why should the Government pay for them?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. That question does not properly apply to this point; but I will say to the gentleman that while I am not in favor of making compensation for the destruction of such cattle as this bill does, or making the United States a live-stock insurance concern to the extent here proposed, to a certain extent I am in favor of compensation.

Mr. SPRINGER. But the gentleman from New York proposes to cure the disease by quarantine and inoculation in the tail of the animal.

The amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina will bring this provision within the statutes which prevents the incurrence of debt beyond the amount appropriated by the law, and ought to be satisfactory to all the friends of the bill.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. But does not my friend think there ought to be a limit fixed?

Mr. SPRINGER. It is limited to the amount of the appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] to the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON]. The Clerk will again report it.

Mr. HEMPHILL'S proposed substitute was read.

Mr. CANNON rose.

Mr. HATCH. I hope the gentleman will not interrupt the vote. This has been under discussion for an hour.

Mr. CANNON. I want to know what I am voting on. I want to know whether I am voting the whole of this quarter of a million of dollars to a lot of veterinary surgeons, or people who suppose they are such, or whether I am voting money to pay for these cattle.

Mr. HATCH. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois there is no purpose in the bill to expend the money simply for salaries.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I ask for the reporting of my original amendments, for which that of the gentleman from South Carolina is a substitute.

Mr. HATCH. I object. The committee was dividing on the substitute of the gentleman from South Carolina.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 73, noes 42.

So (further count not being called for) the substitute was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan as amended by the substitute of the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. HATCH. I did not understand that the proposition of the gentleman from South Carolina was offered as an amendment to that of the gentleman from Michigan, but that it was offered as a substitute for it.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the same thing.

Mr. HATCH. Will the Chair please again state the question?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offered an amendment. A substitute for that amendment was offered by the gentleman from South Carolina, and has been agreed to, and now the question recurs on the amendment as amended.

Mr. HATCH. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HATCH. If the vote now is "aye," does that adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan?

The CHAIRMAN. Not at all. It adopts the substitute of the gentleman from South Carolina.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SWINBURNE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the amendment just adopted insert the following:

"Which shall include three experts of scientific attainments and of not less than six years' actual experience in sanitary and pathological work, and especially in the investigation of contagious diseases; and to aid these experts in their investigations all necessary assistance shall be extended by the Commissioner of Agriculture."

Mr. SWINBURNE. I offer this amendment in view of the fact that this bill may pass. If it does pass it contemplates the killing of the stock as it did last year. Last year the Committee on Agriculture, through its chairman, reported that there were 60,000 head of cattle exposed to this disease, and that 1,700 were then sick. They recommended the killing of the whole of them. They were not killed. And now, when we ask for information from the Department where these cattle are, we are told they never so reported.

I offer this amendment for another reason. The commission report that they do not know when these cattle are sick, when the disease becomes contagious, when it ceases to be contagious; and yet our Department makes provision for a quarantine from Europe of only six weeks, and these same cattle are allowed to come here and poison all the others, as in the case referred to by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY], that of the bulls shipped from Baltimore which contaminated the cattle wherever they went.

Now, when we do not know when this disease commences, what safety have these people in letting those cattle be sick? At Chicago they killed between two and three thousand, although only very few of those cattle presented any evidence of disease. So far as we can find out from the agricultural reports there were but three herds of cattle that were sick. One of these was a herd of cattle at Cynthiana, Ky. The chief of the Department went down to look at the cattle and he would not say whether the disease existed there or not. We have now lost sight of them. In the recent report of the Agricultural Committee they say these cattle did have pleuro-pneumonia. The truth is, they do not know anything about pleuro-pneumonia, any of them, and that is why I ask for this commission. Let us have one solid doctor from Boston, another, say, from Philadelphia, and another from the South.

In Europe this disease has been running for more than a hundred years, and yet we know nothing positive about it. They have been practicing inoculation, but when they inoculate they do not know where to stop. So it is with killing. Cattle are killed and the premises are left dirty; left in such condition that other cattle are exposed; and if they become sick still others are exposed. The only way to stop the disease is to put every herd of cattle so called into quarantine so soon as they are inspected, and in this bill I would have the word "suspected" as well as "infected," because nobody knows when they are infected; and not knowing that, there is not safety in killing so many. If the recommendation of our committee last year had been carried out this Government would have been indebted $3,000,000; this sum of $250,000 would have been a mere bagatelle.

There is to-day a bill pending in the Senate, and my constituents have written me to vote for it. That is their judgment. I wrote them I would not do so. It is not a proper bill as it stands to-day. Neither is this. But if we can modify it and bring the rights of the people to obtain in it I shall be satisfied with the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. If this bill is to become a law, I trust the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SWINBURNE] will be adopted. It strikes me that the legislation now proposed is of very doubtful expediency. If gentlemen will turn to their dictionaries and look at the meaning of the word pleuro-pneumonia they will find that it signifies an inflamed condition of the pleura and of the lungs. Every medical man in this House has treated many cases of pleuro-pneumonia in the human family, and no medical man has ever yet dared to say upon his professional honor and reputation that in the human family it is a contagious disease.

I stand here, sir, to say that we have no proof whatever that the so-called pleuro-pneumonia in the cattle of this country is a contagious disease, and if this House is to legislate upon the subject at all, let us go upon the broad ground that it is safer to employ scientific experts to determine what the disease is before we proceed to lavishly spend the people's money in experiments to extirpate it. We have had an able speech from the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CONGER] upon this bill. Now if I should ask that gentleman how many cases of pleuro-pneumonia exist at this time in the great State of Iowa, he would answer me that there is not a case of which he has knowledge.

Mr. CONGER. We do not want any, either.

Mr. GALLINGER. Again, we have had an eloquent speech from the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON], but I should like to have that gentleman tell us how many cases of pleuro-pneumonia exist in that State to-day.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I do not know whether any exist or not; but if this be a contagious disease, then most emphatically we jeopardize the whole cattle interest of the country by neglecting it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes, if it be a contagious disease, but we have no proof that it is. Again, there is Texas, which has been pointed to as the great cattle State of the Union, yet not a single Representative from Texas will stand up here and tell this House that there is a case of pleuro-pneumonia, contagious or otherwise, in that State to-day.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. What are we fighting then? Where is it?

Mr. GALLINGER. Go to the great overcrowded stock-yards in the large cities and you will find a disease called pleuro-pneumonia; go to the sinks of iniquity in the large cities where vice and filth prevail, and you will find small-pox and scarlet fever and diphtheria among the people who are crowded there. Those are filth diseases, produced by filth, as scientific men assert, and have always asserted, and if you trace this disease of so-called pleuro-pneumonia in the cattle of this country you will find that it exists where sanitation has been neglected, and where the laws of life and health have been set at defiance, and very likely it found its origin either in the cruel conditions under which the cattle were transported, neglect of proper care after they were brought to their destination, or the direct result of climatic changes. Now, if we are going to spend $200,000, or $100,000, or $50,000, or $25,000 for this purpose, let us spend it to determine, first, whether the disease exists; and if it exists, what its exact nature is, and whether or not it is contagious. My opinion is that we had better spend $20,000 for a commission of scientific men, and give them authority to go out and ascertain whether the disease is pleuro-pneumonia, and if it is pleuro-pneumonia, whether it is contagious, and let them report to Congress.

Then we shall have a basis upon which we can enact legislation that will really be for the benefit of the people who are interested in the cattle industry of the country instead of being stampeded by the fears of communities where the disease confessedly does not exist at all. To-day the question is undecided whether diphtheria is a contagious disease. Scientific men differ on that question. Of course, gentlemen who have never looked into the matter believe the disease is contagious; but I assert that that is an open question to-day among scientific men. I say again, then, Mr. Chairman, if we are to spend money for this purpose, let us spend it in a sensible way; let us spend it by putting it into the hands of intelligent, educated, trained experts, who will go out into the communities where the disease is alleged to exist and ascertain whether these reports are based on fact or not, and let them recommend what in their opinion is the best method to stamp out the disease if it is found to be a reality. [Applause.]

Mr. HATCH. I rise to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SWINBURNE]. I will not undertake to answer the position assumed by the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. If that gentleman is not satisfied by the proof that has been produced before the House and the country that pleuro-pneumonia in cattle is a contagious disease, it would be utterly impossible to convince him if I were to talk to him from now until the end of the year. If the gentleman has read the reports which have accompanied these bills in this House for the last eight years, and is still unsatisfied that such a disease as pleuro-pneumonia exists in this country and that it is contagious, all the argument in the world, coming from any source, whether experts or non-experts, would not convince him. The existence of this disease is no longer a question for discussion. It is a fact. The stock men of the country know it; and every reading man in the country knows it.

Now, to undertake to prescribe the qualifications of any portion of this force is simply to defeat the purposes of this bill. The Commissioner has all the power that these provisions prescribing qualifications confer upon him. He is expected to employ the very best experts in this country that he can get. But, so far as my knowledge goes, if you adopt the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SWINBURNE] it will be a dead letter on the statute-book; for it is drawn with the idea that there is but a single man in this country who will "fill the bill," and that is Dr. SWINBURNE, of New York. [Laughter.] He is the only gentleman within my knowledge who possesses all the qualifications stated in that amendment.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Does not the Swinburne amendment conform nearly to the provisions of what is known as the Miller bill?

Mr. HATCH. It does not.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. If not, will the gentleman point out the difference between the Miller bill and the bill now before the committee?

Mr. HATCH. I can not do so in five minutes. Besides, I am not discussing the Miller bill. That bill is not before the House.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. To enable the gentleman to make the explanation I will yield him any time I may have. The reason I ask the question is this: The people of my district have petitioned here in favor of the Miller bill——

Mr. HATCH. If the gentleman wants to support that bill, then when the proper time comes all he has to do is to support it. The Miller bill is not under discussion. It is the bill of the Committee on Agriculture that is now being considered, and the pending question is on an amendment submitted to the first section. No bill known as the Miller bill is before the House or on the Calendar. It was introduced and sent to the Committee on Agriculture, where, by a vote of 6 to 1, it was laid on the table.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. The Miller bill?

Mr. HATCH. The Miller bill; and there it lies. I will say that so far as the provisions of that bill are concerned they go so far beyond the provisions of this that if gentlemen on this floor will not accept the bill now before the House it is absolutely useless to talk about any further legislation on this subject; and if the friends of such legislation are not willing to stand together now upon this bill as reported the sooner we bring this matter to a test vote and decide it the better for the country and for the interests of legislation.

Mr. MCCOMAS. Mr. Chairman, as the question has been raised whether this disease is contagious or not, let me give an instance which may throw some light upon the statements made on this subject. Yesterday, in behalf of a constituent, I applied to the Department of Agriculture to investigate the very recent appearance of pleuro-pneumonia in Western Maryland, and on this very day an inspector has gone to the heights near Weverton, in Washington County, immediately above Harper's Ferry, because, for the first time, a herd of cattle there has been found to be infected with what is called pleuro-pneumonia or lung plague. Now, that is not a place where this disease could be expected to originate.

The country there is distant from stock-yards, is open and mountainous, washed by rivers and fanned by mountain breezes. The steep hillside has the best surface drainage. If this disease be not contagious, its appearance there is certainly significant when we consider that through that region pass the great Baltimore and Ohio Railroad and its feeders, carrying cattle from the places where this lung plague, or pleuro-pneumonia—I care not for the name—exists, to the main points in the West, in Chicago, where it recently has appeared. And there, to-day, on those heights, where there are no pestiferous sinks, no filth for the breeding of disease, where the free mountain air is constantly exerting its purifying influence, appears this disease. It is suggestive, too, of the need of national aid that this spot is in sight of three States, my own and the two Virginias.

Mr. Chairman, although not skilled to detect cattle diseases, I have the right, coming from a State where this question has been studied and where the sufferings from this lung plague have been experienced, to say something in behalf of this bill, and in behalf of the amendment of the gentleman from New York, Dr. SWINBURNE, which very much improves it.

In the State of Maryland there was held, only a few days ago, a very intelligent and representative farmers' convention. There has been a very important work done in combating this disease, and our farmers strongly favored more stringent legislation by Congress on this subject. There has been there a more extended experience with this disease and with the law on the subject than, perhaps, anywhere else; for, beyond the people of any other State, the people of Maryland have co-operated with the Department in trying to extirpate the disease. In August last this disease was found in Howard County. The herd was slaughtered—paid for partly by the State of Maryland and partly by the General Government—and nobody has heard of the disease in that county since. It has been found in Baltimore city, in the adjoining county of Baltimore, as well as in Prince George's County, and in the county of Carroll.

Under the law which we are now trying to improve there have been slaughtered there four hundred and seventy-nine animals at an average cost of $20.10 apiece. About one-third of these have been paid for by the authorities of my State under our State law, and the rest by the Government. At a total cost of $9,650, those cattle have been destroyed, and, so far as possible, the disease. There were five hundred and fifty-six stables investigated, all suspected of having this lung plague. They contained fifty-one hundred and seven cattle; and these stables were exclusive of the stockyards designed for cattle in the course of transit in the trade. Seven hundred and seventeen cattle were found infected with this lung plague. The same characteristics were found in all these cattle. The cattle were found along the line of travel, near the stockyards. When a herd had been killed in one isolated county, the disease after a lapse of eight months, had not reappeared. But to-day, 50 miles from this city, and from that county, away up in the mountains, it is breaking out afresh. The report of Mr. T. A. Seth, a prominent citizen and a high authority upon the history of this plague in Maryland, impresses me as it did the convention.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that some weight is due to these illustrations of the operations of the law in our State.

It has been said by my eloquent friend near me that this Government must not be a stock insurance company. I agree with that declaration; yet, this very report by Mr. Seth made last week in Baltimore shows that the great hinderance to the enforcement of the law is that men who have diseased cattle conceal the fact, because it destroys the market value of the animals; and the cattle are sold to unscrupulous butchers, that their meat may go into the markets of the country to be sold at the market prices, just as we now know it has been offered in the market of this city. If the disease extends, as it has extended in Chicago and the West, if it gains headway in Maryland, as it is claimed to have done out in Chicago——

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, obtained the floor, and yielded his time to Mr. MCCOMAS.

Mr. MCCOMAS. I wish to say but one word more. I thank the gentleman from Kansas for his courtesy.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Before the gentleman resumes will he allow me an inquiry? I oppose the rate proposed in this bill. Now will my friend, who is for the bill, indicate whether he opposes an amendment which simply proposes that men familiar with the duties they will be called upon to perform shall be employed?

Mr. MCCOMAS. If the gentleman had heard the remarks I have already made he would have heard me say that I am in favor of this bill and in favor of the amendment of Dr. SWINBURNE, which proposes to secure experts skilled in the pathology of these diseases. I think the very first money expended ought to go for the purpose indicated; and yet I believe that there ought not to be a limit too strictly put. The whole argument on this floor in opposition to this expenditure is based upon the false assumption that we already know what the disease is, where it is, and where it is liable to break out. But those are the very things to be ascertained, the things which as yet "no fellow has found out." Now we need not limit the amount beyond the restriction already put in the bill, but with this amendment we can direct the expenditure for the inquiry into the prevalence, the causes, and the extirpation of this plague.

It seems to me this important matter should be followed up vigorously by more stringent national legislation or abandoned. It can be, so far as my State is concerned. The information I receive is that the earnest farmers of Maryland, who so largely contribute to the formation of public sentiment, want the effort to be made; and I come from a State where many are very much concerned about State rights, but they will not stop to talk about State rights when the main question is the extirpation of this most dangerous cattle disease.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Why does the gentleman claim the number of persons the Commissioner should employ should be unlimited? Now, to determine the character of this disease does not require ten thousand men should be employed to examine ten thousand cases. Where the symptoms are the same it is easy to determine the existence of the disease, and twenty-five men would be able to determine the matter just as easily as twenty-five hundred.

Mr. McCOMAS. Nobody knows better than the gentleman from Ohio that that is not a question, but an argument. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTTERWOTH. Very well, then, let me see you tackle it. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. McCOMAS. Then, in conclusion, let me say that this objection is based upon assumed knowledge and assumes the point in controversy. If we had just ten thousand cases all at one time in one place twenty-five men would be ample. Who knows we may not have thirty thousand cases at different times in a thousand different places, thus requiring a sudden increase of men in many States. Let us then take these experts; let us take other men, and let us trust this man whom we lately voted to elevate to a Cabinet position, and let us honestly try to stamp out this disease. Let us appropriate all the money necessary to stamp it out. Unless it is stamped out we shall imperil not only untold wealth in the cattle industry, not only the health, but the cheap meat of the laboring man of this country, and this is the only country in the world where there is cheap meat for the laboring man. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I did not expect to say anything on this bill, as I hoped to derive from the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture some information I wanted. My people have petitioned me in favor of the Miller bill. It is usual for members to get information from the committee that reports the bill, but since the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, for some reason I am not able to understand, has risen above the usual rule of giving information to his colleagues on this floor, even when in sympathy with him in legislation, I venture a few remarks on such information as I have without the aid of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture. [Laughter.]

I am opposed, Mr. Chairman, to the substitute offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SWINBURNE]. And why? The Commissioner of Agriculture, when he comes to employ the necessary force to execute this law, will not employ boot-blacks, he will not employ ministers, he will not employ members of Congress, except, perhaps, my friend from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] or my friend from New York [Mr. SWINBURNE].

Mr. GALLINGER. He will employ horse doctors.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Yes, he might and may do so with wisdom. It is presumed in the exercise of the discretion given to him he will employ just as good men as my respected friend from New Hampshire or my learned friend from New York. They must be competent experts; just as good as you may put into these positions. Why create so many different departments and commissions? We have an organization now, a Department of Agriculture, for that purpose. Let us put the power in the hands of that Department.

Now, Mr. Chairman, from what information I have been able to gather, no thanks to the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, I am in favor of what is known as the Miller bill, which provides for a commission. My people seem to favor that measure, although it appropriates $1,000,000 instead of $250,000. We have the support of the Committee on Agriculture, which I am thankful for, to back up the present bill, and we have been informed we can not get the Miller bill through. Then, as compromise must obtain more or less in the legislative bodies, I shall stand by the committee for the present bill, and I trust the friends of this measure will not be stampeded.

My friend from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], who sits before me, and whose clean-cut method of thought always captivates me, has stated this is a mooted question.

Then, Mr. Chairman, if it is a mooted question when it is admitted such a dangerous peril exists as the spread of this contagious cattle disease, why should we wait until this disease has spread all over the country among the great herds of the East and the West? Let us give this petty sum of $250,000 to be expended by those whom we have elevated to the dignity of an Executive Department. Let us clothe the Commissioner with the power to use experts for the purpose of collecting information and furnishing it to the next Congress.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HATCH. I regret exceedingly, Mr. Chairman, that my friend from Iowa, who has just occupied the floor, misunderstood my answer to his inquiry. I was discussing an amendment under the five-minute rule, and had but a single moment, and hence stated to my friend that I had not the time to explain the difference between these two bills. I supposed the gentleman had read the two bills himself, and also that he had heard my remarks in presenting the bill to the House, in which I took care to explain the difference between them. But if my friend is not satisfied with that explanation, if he will meet me this afternoon after we get through with this bill I will give him as much time as he wants, and will take great pleasure in supplying him with all the information I have upon this subject, for I take great delight in imparting such information as I have, and especially to my friend from Iowa, who always receives it so kindly.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. The answers I received from the gentleman to-day have been so unfruitful of information that I beg leave most respectfully to decline the invitation, and will endeavor to jog along in my own way with such little knowledge as I have gained from the discussions that have taken place on this floor. [Laughter.]

Mr. HATCH. I think my friend from Iowa makes there the most serious mistake of his life, for he needs information more now than ever before in his life. [Laughter.]

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to add but a few words to what I said a few moments ago. I have no disposition to prolong this controversy, neither do I wish any gentleman on this floor to assume or undertake to say that if this bill can not be properly amended I will vote against it, for no man has authority to make that statement here or elsewhere.

So far as the personal suggestions of my friend from Iowa are concerned, they have no weight at all with me.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. My personal allusions were entirely complimentary.

Mr. GALLINGER. And I can only quote for the gentleman's benefit those well known lines—

And you, O Polonius! you vex me but slightly.

[Laughter.]

This is a question, however, of very serious moment to the people of this country. It is one that we have a right to consider, and consider fairly and squarely upon its merits; and if the gentleman from Iowa wishes to stand here and assert that it is not wisdom to put in it a provision that the men called upon to investigate this scourge, if scourge it be, shall be men capable of making a scientific investigation into the character of the disease we are undertaking to combat, then I can only say I fail to agree with his views.

I hold in my hand an article which I assume to be true, which states that very recently an effort was made to establish a quarantine in Pennsylvania against cattle coming from the Chicago yards, as a cow had died of so-called contagious pleuro-pneumonia at the stock-yard gates, and the officers of the United States Agricultural Department had so reported. And yet it appears that the secretary of the Board of Agriculture of the State of Pennsylvania caused an investigation to be instituted, and has produced here indisputable evidence to the mind of any man who can understand testimony that the cow died of a puerperal disease and not from pleuro-pneumonia at all. [Laughter and applause.]

I say that in my judgment—notwithstanding I may vote for this bill, because I think it important that some legislation should be adopted on this subject—in my judgment, if you pass the bill as it is here reported you will find every sick cow on the prairies of the West will eventually be slaughtered because of alleged pleuro-pneumonia, and the Government of the United States will have to foot the bill. Why, it is a matter of fact within the knowledge of the medical profession that every sick dog in the country has hydrophobia; and yet hydrophobia is a disease almost unknown to science in this or any other land. But notwithstanding that fact every dog which is found sick on your streets is shot down because he is pronounced to be suffering from rabies. And so every cow sick with puerperal disease, or any other disease, or which has come in contact with another animal sick of some disease—for filth germs affect other animals as well as the human species—will be slaughtered under the provisions of this bill, and the Government of the United States will have to pay the expense.

I say furthermore, Mr. Chairman, that if we are to pay for sick cows, for God's sake do not compel us to pay three-fourths of their worth while they are well. [Laughter.] If they are sick let us have some scientific body say what their worth may be when they are slaughtered, not when they are in health. If the bill is passed let us also eliminate the provision concerning the herd books altogether, so that you will not have to pay, simply because they are so entered, fancy prices, or prices they may be regarded as worth when they are well, when they are worth nothing at all if sick.

I have no disposition, I repeat, Mr. Chairman, to delay the consideration of the bill; but if we are wise men we will adopt the amendment proposed by the distinguished gentleman from New York, and we will thus say to the Agricultural Department, if this matter is to be investigated, it shall be investigated intelligently, and if pleuro-pneumonia exists in this country let it be determined by experts whether it is contagious or not.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Does my friend assume that the Department will make the investigation unintelligently?

Mr. GALLINGER. It might.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. So might the commission.

Mr. GALLINGER. Not likely, if they are appointed as contemplated by the amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SWINBURNE] by his amendment proposes the appointment of a commission and insists that this commission shall be under the control of those who are physicians. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] If gentlemen will pardon me I will detain them only a moment. The gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] will pardon me if I suggest the Commissioner of Agriculture will employ under this bill such agencies as will enable him to reach a just conclusion. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] I am ready to vote, then, if gentlemen want to vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SWINBURNE].

The question being taken, there were—ayes 114, noes 25.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was adopted.

Mr. HATCH. I give notice that I will ask for a vote in the House on this amendment.

Mr. O'HARA. I offer an amendment, to come in at the end of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

And the said experts shall examine and report upon the disease affecting the hogs of the country, known as hog cholera, and also what means are necessary to extirpate this disease.

Mr. HATCH. I make the point of order; but if the gentleman from North Carolina desires to speak I reserve the point of order. It is that the provision of his amendment is already embodied in the law—in the act of which this is amendatory.

Mr. MILLS. That is a matter of debate then.

Mr. O'HARA. I admit it is already in the law, but it is known to the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture that the Department of Agriculture has abandoned, for any practical purpose, the investigation of hog cholera.

Mr. HATCH. On the contrary, they are pursuing it now with more energy than at any other time since the law was passed.

Mr. O'HARA. Admitting that to be true, the amendment will have the effect of instructing them to have this board appointed by the amendment just adopted to act with more diligence. This question of hog cholera is a question of very great importance to the people of the South, especially in my section of the country. I suppose I can also say it is a question of very grave importance to the entire people of this country. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. EDEN. Why not provide to pay for the hogs?

Mr. O'HARA. We do not propose to pay for the hogs as it is proposed to pay for the cattle.

The question being taken on Mr. O'HARA'S amendment, there were—ayes 109, noes 40.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was adopted.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to—ayes 93, noes 18.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLOUNT reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union having had under consideration the bill H. R. 7208, had come to no resolution thereon.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HATCH. I move that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet on Saturday next.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Under the standing order of the House, on Friday, at 5 o'clock, the House takes a recess until half past 7 for the transaction of pension business. I ask whether or not that order takes effect to-day?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is inclined to think that the order to which the gentleman from Michigan refers means the legislative day of Friday; and it would be necessary to have another order for the consideration of that class of business.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I ask unanimous consent that that order may be considered as applying to this evening.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit that request after the question is taken on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH].

Mr. MILLS. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MILLS. Does not the adjournment to-day of itself carry the House over to meet at 12 o'clock on Saturday?

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes that would be the effect; but the gentleman from Missouri desires by his motion to keep the Journal correct, as the House has been prosecuting business to-day in the legislative day of Thursday.

The motion of Mr. HATCH was agreed to.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I now ask unanimous consent that the order by which the House at 5 o'clock on Friday takes a recess till half past 7 for the consideration of pension business be considered in force with reference to this day.

Mr. WALLACE. I object.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I move that the House take a recess until half past 7 o'clock.

Mr. SPRINGER. The only business in order to be the consideration of private pension bills.

The SPEAKER. That can not be made a part of the motion. In the absence of any order on the subject the House, if it takes a recess, would be in session for all business.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas moves that a recess be taken until half past 7——

Mr. TOWNSHEND. And that the business be the consideration of private pension bills.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair has just stated, that can not be included in the motion for a recess. Pending that the gentleman from Missouri moves that the House do now adjourn. Does the gentleman from Missouri insist on his motion?

Mr. HATCH. I do.

The question being taken on the motion to adjourn; there were—ayes 71, noes 69.

So the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 52 minutes p. m. Friday, January 28) the House adjourned till Saturday at 12 o'clock m.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, January 28, 1887.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. CAMERON presented the credentials of MATTHEW STANLEY QUAY, chosen by the Legislature of Pennsylvania a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1887; which were read and ordered to be placed on file.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I present the petition of Messrs. Wells, Richardson & Company and sundry other business men, largely engaged in manufactures, commerce, &c., in the State of Vermont, praying for a repeal or reduction of internal-revenue taxes.

Many petitions of this kind have been presented; and in presenting this petition and moving its reference to the Committee on Finance, I wish to urge upon that committee, so far as I may, respectfully, what I think is the importance of this subject, to reduce, if we cannot altogether repeal, this remnant of the "unpleasantness" that existed between the different parts of the country twenty-five years ago.

I should be glad to see the country restored to its business conditions in respect to the Government that it was in before the war of the rebellion came on, and that the resources of the Government should be obtained entirely from duties on importations and the little incidental matters about lands, &c., and not by keeping up an army of internal tax-gatherers, and inspectors, and all that sort of thing. I hope the Committee on Finance will take the matter into serious consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. FRYE presented resolutions adopted at a meeting of the A. A. Dwinal Post, No. 3, Grand Army of the Republic, of Mechanic Falls, Me., warmly indorsing the bill known as the Edmunds-Tucker bill, touching Mormonism; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. FRYE. I present the petition of John D. Best and 52 citizens of Portland, Me., setting forth that $12 only are required as the special tax for a wholesale dealer in tobacco, while $480 are charged to a wholesale dealer in oleomargarine, and praying for an equalization of those taxes. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM presented a petition of Singer & Wheeler and 17 other firms, merchants and manufacturers, of the city of Peoria, Ill., praying for the repeal of the internal-revenue tax laws; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CULLOM. I present the petition of H. S. Stewart and 34 other citizens of Geneva, Ill., respectfully representing that they are consumers of oleomargarine in their own homes, and stating that the license tax on oleomargarine is from five to fifty times higher than the license tax on whisky, beer, and tobacco, and praying for a reduction of the same. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON presented petitions of citizens of Philadelphia, Johnstown, Scranton, and Bristol, in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for a reduction of the internal-revenue taxes; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CAMERON. I also present a memorial of East Lynn Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, of Pennsylvania, remonstrating against any amendment of the oleomargarine law, and praying for the passage of the interstate-commerce bill. Inasmuch as the interstate-commerce bill has passed both Houses, I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SABIN presented a petition of the Grand Lodge of the Independent Order of Good Templars, State of Minnesota, on behalf of a membership of 4,000, praying for the passage of the bill (S. 1579) granting to the people of the District of Columbia the right to determine by ballot whether intoxicating liquors may hereafter be legally manufactured and sold in the District; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. PAYNE presented the petition of A. L. Bailey and 21 other citizens of Cincinnati, Ohio, setting forth the inequalities and injustice of the special taxes on oleomargarine in comparison with other articles of internal-revenue taxation, and praying for a reduction of such taxes; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CALL. I present resolutions in the nature of a memorial of the town council and city government of the city of Tampa, Fla. The resolutions state that—

> Our intercourse with Havana, on the Island of Cuba, has become frequent, and considerable emigration from that island is coming to our shores to find employment in the cigar factories established here, all of which is highly desirable as being of mutual benefit to our community and the Cubans.

The town council of the city of Tampa also states that:

> In view of this continuous and frequent intercourse with Havana, a place where yellow fever prevails every summer, we deem it of the highest importance that a national quarantine station and hospital be established on one of the islands near Key West, Fla., and that such station and hospital shall be under the direction and control of the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine-Hospital Service under authority of the national-quarantine act of April 29, 1878; and that our members in Congress from the State of Florida are respectfully requested and urged to use their influence in passing such measures during the present session of Congress as may be requisite to enable the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine-Hospital Service to establish such quarantine station and hospital as early as practicable to meet the exigencies of the coming summer.

I move that the resolutions be referred to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS presented resolutions adopted by the State Board of Agriculture of Kansas, in favor of the enactment of the agricultural experiment-station bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Kansas State Board of Agriculture, in relation to the cattle interest; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MORGAN presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Alabama, favoring legislation in behalf of a world's exposition by the colored people; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. EVARTS. I present the petition of Jacob Hilgman and 57 citizens of New York city, and the petition of Dr. W. H. Reynolds and 20 citizens of Reynoldsville, N. Y., respectfully representing that they are consumers of oleomargarine in their own homes, and stating that the license tax on oleomargarine is from five to fifty times higher than the license tax on whisky, beer, and tobacco, and praying for a reduction of the same. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PALMER presented the petition of David W. Davis, of Detroit, Mich., praying for an extension of the patent for an improvement in a freezing box or pan for fish; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

He also presented the petition of Hammond Standish & Co. and 157 other citizens of Detroit, Mich.; the petition of Anthony Lubke and 25 other citizens of Copper Falls Mine, Mich.; and the petition of Edward B. Noble and 20 other citizens of Elk Rapids, Mich., representing that they are consumers of oleomargarine in their own homes, that the license tax on that article is from five to fifty times higher than the license tax on whisky, beer, and tobacco, and praying for a reduction of such tax; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. PLATT presented a memorial of citizens of the collection district of Middletown, Conn., remonstrating against the removal of the custom-house in that district from Middletown to Hartford; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PLUMB presented a resolution adopted by the senate of the State of Kansas, favoring the passage of the bill (H. R. 10359) to extirpate contagious pleuro-pneumonia, foot-and-mouth disease, and rinderpest among cattle, and to facilitate the exportation of cattle and the products of live stock, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. HOAR. I present the petition of William B. Clark and 52 citizens of Worcester, Mass., praying for the reduction of the special taxes on oleomargarine, and that the same may be equalized so that wholesale dealers in oleomargarine shall not pay $480 per year while wholesale tobacco dealers pay only $2.40 a year. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The motion was agreed to.

THE TOBACCO TAX.

Mr. MAHONE. I present the proceedings of the Tobacco Association of Lynchburg, Va., urging the abolition of the tax on tobacco.

I also present a similar petition of manufacturers of tobacco at Richmond; a like petition of the Tobacco Board of Trade of Farmville, Va. I also present a similar petition of the South Boston (Virginia) Tobacco Board of Trade, and also the proceedings of the Tobacco Association of the city of Petersburg, Va.

In moving the reference of these petitions to the Committee on Finance, I wish to call the attention of that committee and of the Senate briefly to the subject to which they relate.

Mr. President, on the 14th day of December, 1885, I introduced here two bills relating to the laws affecting the manufacture of tobacco—one, (S. 476,) repealing section 3151 of the Revised Statutes, which subjected tobacco manufactured for export to the perfunctory performance of inspection and the burden of a fee that, till lately, was collected at the rate of ten (10) cents per package.

This fee, which did not in fact nor constructively either go into or come out of the Treasury, composed the salary of the inspector. It was the mere perquisite of an unsalaried office. It in no manner touched the subject of revenue, and yet this bill was reported to the Senate adversely and so stands upon the Calendar now, and was so reported, as I am advised, because it was held to be a revenue measure.

The other of these two bills, (S. 477,) provided for a drawback of duties paid upon all imported ingredients used in the manufacture of tobacco exported. This bill was likewise so reported to the Senate and for the same reason. Meanwhile, a bill covering the same object as that described in Senate bill 476 came to the Senate from the House of Representatives, and it is now a law.

Likewise a bill (H. R. 2522) of similar import as that of Senate bill 477 passed the House, and is yet with the Finance Committee of this body.

On the third day of August, 1886, I introduced and the Senate referred to the Finance Committee an amendment to House bill 8738, which that committee held and still holds under consideration, repealing the internal-revenue laws so far as they apply to tobacco.

It is conceded, Mr. President, that to the House of Representatives belongs the constitutional right of originating revenue measures—all bills touching the sources of taxation—imposing, increasing, diminishing, or repealing income derived from any form of taxation.

House bill 2522, to which I have referred, sent here for the action of the Senate and remaining with the Finance Committee of this body, is by fair, legitimate interpretation a revenue measure, and must be so regarded by the Finance Committee of the Senate, under its own ruling—by its own deliberate judgment in respect to Senate bills 476 and 477.

If to abolish an office which neither put in nor took out of the public Treasury a dollar, can be considered as a revenue measure, and the Finance Committee of the Senate report adversely upon a bill to refund duties paid upon imported materials used in manufactures for export, because of the conceded prerogative of the House of Representatives to originate revenue measures, House bill 2522, it must be admitted, is a measure, open here in this body to such amendment as a majority of the Senate by virtue of its constitutional authority shall see fit to impose.

It is, therefore, Mr. President, I hold that the Senate is in possession of a desired opportunity to deal directly and practically with a subject which concerns the pretended if not manifest solicitude of all parties—certainly the great body of the people.

We have here, Mr. President, an opportunity to reduce taxes and to arrest the unnecesary accumulations of the money of the people in the national Treasury. It is admitted—by the end of the current year, when there will be no longer any portion of the public debt redeemable for some years to follow—there comes an annual surplus in the Treasury—more money than is needed for the expenses of the Government—of ninety millions.

Whatever the arithmetical process by which that statement of the administration is disputed, distinguished leaders of opposing political parties and the President of the United States are all agreed that the income of the Government is in excess of current expenses, supplemented, if you please, by any expenditure for betterments, which may be in the reason of any possible legislation, whether for coast defenses, Navy, or other objects.

The people in every State of the Union, and everywhere in all of the States, are educated to this belief and are inspired with the anxious hope that practical effect will be given, and by this sitting of the National Legislature, to such judgment, by an outright reduction of taxes. They expect, and they have a right to expect, that such action will be taken as will preclude the withdrawal from circulation and the congregation of so large an excess of the needed currency of the country in the vaults of the national Treasury. They sorely need, and are weary of the promise of, a reduction of burdens long and patiently endured.

They will not be content with any play of political parties for future stakes of power, when the needs of the Government no longer require the imposition of taxes which may be safely removed.

They will hold to account, and justly, any inaction which shall leave to proceed that retirement to the vaults of the Treasury and idleness such accumulating sums of the money of the country, and bring on the disastrous consequences to every industrial interest, directly or indirectly, which that policy must superinduce.

A policy which can not fail to paralyze industrial development, narrow the employments of labor, and harden the times for the masses of the people.

No attempt by inaction or failure on this question to meet the popular expectation as the means of compelling an abandonment of the successful policy of a tariff for the protection of American products, whether of the field, forest, the mine, the forge, or the factory, and promote the welfare of the laboring classes of our own country, will, permit me to suggest, be approved.

Our tax-payers have borne with irritating impatience the imposition and burden of internal taxes. The occasion comes by a hurtful accumulation in the Treasury, when they may be removed and some measure of relief extended.

The Constitutional inhibition which has forbidden legislative action on the part of the Senate is no longer in the way.

Hence, Mr. President, with no thought or lack of the highest and most profound consideration for the Finance Committee of this body, or for any member of it, I venture upon these remarks more in the way of a reminder than for the purpose of compelling the action of that committee upon the subject.

All of us, Mr. President, well know that no system of taxation is more distasteful, more irritating and uneven in its application than that of an excise tax—and the field of agriculture should be the last resort—however wisely discriminating may be the objects chosen for its application.

What industry, Mr. President, and that an agricultural product, more or less common to the fields of every State in the Union, is so severely embarrassed, incumbered, and harassed as is the growth of and the trade in tobacco?

Under our internal-revenue laws the grower of tobacco is forbidden to barter, or to market, or to manufacture his own crop, and so environed by pains, penalties, and taxes is the distillation of the fruit of the citizen of scanty resources, whose only means of providing clothing and table groceries for his family may depend upon such conversion of fruit otherwise valueless and unmarketable.

The time, Mr. President, has gone by when the pretext to any acceptability may be used for imposing proscriptive laws and burdens upon tobacco as a luxury. "Bread or tobacco," said the philosopher Locke, "may be neglected, but reason at first recommends their trial, and custom makes them pleasant." It has long since ceased to be the nature-imposed narcotic of any race of people. In one form and another its use among men is too nigh universal at home and elsewhere for either of such classifications.

Taking the average population of the United States, for ten years preceding 1881, at forty-five (45) millions, the annual average consumption here and for that period is estimated at five (5) pounds per capita, while the average for the whole world is stated at seventy (70) ounces, equal to an aggregate consumption of more than two and three-quarter billion (2,750,000,000) tons.

Neither coffee nor tea is classed among the staples of life, and is no more essential to the comfort of man than tobacco. Upon these stimulants the consumer no longer pays any tax, and yet the consumption of coffee in the United States, per capita, is not double that of tobacco, and of tea only one-fifth.

If tobacco is an enemy to the human family, obnoxious to "the general welfare," why not otherwise, as the Constitution may be turned, hinder yet more severely, its cultivation here, and its importation into the country.

If a luxury, why so embargo its production and the trade it creates as to place its use beyond the reach and enjoyment of the masses? If neither, and its cultivation and value are of respectable concern to the fields of industry, the commerce and wealth of the country, why not liberate the plant and the product, and allow them to proceed with their increasing contribution to wealth and employments?

Mr. President, tobacco enters too largely into our agricultural and manufacturing interests, and furnishes too many of our people employment and the means of sustenance; it gives activity to too much capital, and composes too large a share of the commerce, wealth, and exports of the nation, relatively small as these may be, to be classified as a narcotic or a luxury, or to be treated as an alien interest.

We must not forget, Mr. President, that its cultivation in 1885 occupied an acreage of seven hundred and sixty-two thousand two hundred and fifty (762,250) acres of American soil, yielding a crop of five hundred and sixty-two million seven hundred and thirty-six thousand (562,736,000) pounds, which added forty-three million two hundred and sixty-five thousand five hundred and ninety-eight dollars ($43,265,598) to our wealth, and gave employment to over two hundred thousand (200,000) of our population—equal to about three and one-third (3⅓) per cent. of the persons over ten (10) years of age employed in agriculture.

Until the year 1840 Virginia, where the formal cultivation of the plant in our colonial year of 1607 was introduced, led in this agricultural product, furnishing from her own fields fully one-third of the national crop. Since then her eldest and esteemed daughter, Kentucky, has held that distinction, and yet one hundred and forty thousand (140,000) acres of Virginia's cultivated lands are now devoted to the growth of tobacco, and of the two hundred and fifty-five thousand (255,000) of her population above the age of ten (10) years engaged in agriculture, forty-seven thousand (47,000), or about eighteen (18) per cent., are employed in that agricultural pursuit.

In measuring the interests which are concerned in the growth and manufacture of tobacco and the commerce it generates, we must remember there were in the year 1880 five hundred and eight thousand (508,000) taxed dealers engaged in the trade, and in the manufacture of chewing tobacco, snuff, cigars, cigarettes, and in stemming seven thousand six hundred and seventy-four (7,674) establishments, where the capital invested was thirty-nine million nine hundred and ninety-five thousand two hundred and ninety-two dollars ($39,995,292), and eighty-seven thousand five hundred and eighty-seven (87,587) persons found desirable employment, and for wages twenty-five million fifty-four thousand four hundred and fifty-seven dollars ($25,054,457) were paid; where the value of materials converted into other forms of commerce was sixty-five million three hundred and eighty-four thousand four hundred and seven dollars ($65,384,407), and the value of the product was one hundred and eighteen million eight hundred and seventy thousand one hundred and sixty-six dollars ($118,870,166).

The manufacture of tobacco, as did its culture, had its crude beginning in Virginia as early as the year 1732.

It has now become an important industry to at least twenty of the States, and its culture is common to all.

Virginia losing the lead in the field, occupies it in the line of the manufactured product. She manufactures the equivalent in quality of five-eighths (⅝) of her own crop, going to Kentucky, Ohio, and North Carolina for a part of the forty-eight million five hundred thousand (48,500,000) pounds her factories consume. Her proportion of the capital invested in the manufacture of tobacco is nine and one-half (9½) per cent. of all. Her share of the employment given to labor on this account is sixteen and one-half (16½) per cent., and her proportion of wages paid is thirty (30); and her measure of our exportations of manufactured tobacco is full eighty-five (85) per cent. of that furnished by all the States.

The plant is the staple of a large section of that State, the dependence of a conspicuous portion of her population in field and factory. Its growth and manufacture enter largely into the trade, commerce, and wealth of the Commonwealth.

As a factor in our export trade, tobacco bears no insignificant part. In the twenty-three years last gone by it has brought into the country six hundred and forty-three million dollars ($643,000,000) of foreign gold, and to-day represents full seventy (70) per cent. of the merchandise balance to our credit on account of that trade.

It brings into the country now thirty and a half millions gold—equal to the amount derived from our exportation of corn and sixty (60) per cent. of that derived from our exportation of wheat—and thirty-three (33) per cent. of the value of our exportation of wheat and flour.

Once set at liberty and relieved of the espionage and the restraining laws and burdens which hinder and repress development, as I trust it may now be the judgment of the Senate it shall be, and placed upon an even footing with other agricultural products, this important industry, Mr. President, will take new life and go on widening the avenues of employment for labor, and add fresh fields to the cultivated acreage of the nation. It will go on to multiply our manufacturing interests and to increase its contributions to the wealth of the country.

Surely, Mr. President, tobacco and fruit distillations have contributed their full share of the tribute to the exigency on account of which they have now for twenty-three (23) years been held under duress and burden.

In that period tobacco has contributed directly to the National Treasury seven hundred and seventeen millions eight hundred and seventy-three thousand three hundred and forty-three dollars and eight cents ($717,873,343.08), and of this imposing sum Virginia paid ninety millions seven hundred and six thousand one hundred and seventy-seven dollars and thirty-nine cents ($90,706,177.39), equal for the twenty-three (23) years of the imposed burden to an annual contribution on her part, and from this single industry, of four millions three hundred and seventy-eight thousand nine hundred and sixty-four dollars ($4,378,964) or the equivalent of one dollar and twenty-five cents ($1.25) on the one hundred dollars ($100) assessed value of the real and personal property of her people.

In the same period fruit distillations contributed twenty-one millions thirty-seven thousand five hundred and eighty-four dollars and eighty-seven cents ($21,037,584.87), of which Virginia's share was two million two hundred and twenty thousand five hundred and thirty-six dollars and eighty-one cents ($2,220,536.81), or an average of ninety-six thousand five hundred and forty-four dollars ($96,544) per annum, equal to twenty-eight (28) cents on the one hundred dollars ($100) of the assessed value of the real and personal property of the Commonwealth.

Mr. President, there is no longer any occasion for continuing the burden and bondage under which these two agricultural products have been sorely oppressed.

The revenue derived from these sources of an exigency tax is not needed either to pay debts, provide for the common defense, or for the general welfare. The income of the Government from other sources is yet sufficient, and in excess by many millions of any probable demand for these three several purposes for which Congress is empowered to levy taxes.

It appears an arbitrary exercise of the constitutional power, as certain it is repugnant to the spirit which governed the formation of the Constitution, to impose an excise tax as a mere means of revenue when no exigency exists, when it is estimated by the administrative head of the Government that we are to have at the end of the current fiscal year a surplus over and above all demands full ninety millions of dollars ($90,000,000), not counting thirty-two millions ($32,000,000) of fractional silver.

Mr. President, it is agreed in all quarters and by both political parties that this excess of revenue ought to be arrested; and to what subject can you apply the remedy more fittingly with equal justice and with the hope of larger public approbation and better results than to the important agricultural product of tobacco?

If it has manfully borne burdens and will bear them longer, if you please, why continue them when the Government is not needing the tribute exacted of this industry and so largely drawn from the great body of the people—that class of consumers least able to bear the tax you impose on an article they will and must have—if, as a luxury, it may be said it is a nature-imposed necessity with them for all that?

If it is the consumer who pays the tax entire, the greater is the reason, in this case, for its removal. It is relief which will be more directly and sensibly felt by the working classes of the country than any other which may be conferred by recourse to the tax list. It will enter the home of the workingman everywhere in our own country, and leave a saving on every five (5) pounds of tobacco consumed sufficient to purchase eight (8) pounds of sugar, or three (3) pounds of coffee, or one (1) pound of tea, or fifteen (15) pounds of flour, or five (5) pounds of bacon, or eight (8) yards of calico, or six (6) yards of shirting, or two (2) yards of flannel.

Mr. President, let us remove this odious and onerous tax of an American product, and remind the American citizen that he may once more use this product of his own country upon the same even terms on which we offer it by exportation to the citizens of other countries. Let us unfetter a potential factor of American industry, of commerce, and of wealth, and rid the beneficent policy of protection, which has contributed so immensely to the growth, power, and wealth of the nation, of the singular contradiction which the tax and the proscriptive laws in respect to this American industry present.

Let us now and here, so far as the action of the Senate may effect such result, emancipate this American industry and save to the national Treasury and the people the five million dollars' ($5,000,000) expense for collecting a revenue no longer needed to pay debts, or for the common defense, or for the general welfare of the nation.

If we assume that the consumer pays the tax, let us not forget that by it his capacity to buy is lessened, and the incentive to increased and increasing production is diminished. Let us remember that each and every successive step taken in the direction of a reduction of the tax has added to the acreage of cultivation, increased the product, and multiplied factories, dealers, and employments.

Let us complete the emancipation of this industry, and, as the amendment to House bill now in possession of the Finance Committee of the Senate since the 18th of June, 1886, proposes, unburden our export of manufactured tobacco, and thus stimulate the expansion of that trade by remitting the duties paid on imported ingredients actually employed in the manufacture thereof.

There is here, in this proposition, no new principle. It is merely the adaptation of existing laws—liberalized, if you please—as will be seen by reference to sections 3022 and 3026, Revised Statutes, which respectively allow drawbacks on imported salt used in the curing of fish, and on saltpeter used in the manufacture of gunpowder; and further, as will appear by reference to section 3019 and section 3433, Revised Statutes, the latter as amended by section 14 of the act of the 28th of May, 1880. (Supplement, Revised Statutes.)

Under these last-named sections foreign and domestic distilled spirits in bond may be withdrawn without the payment of duty or tax, and after being manufactured into various preparations, these preparations or products are exported without the payment of tax or duty, and the result has been to increase the export of such manufactures.

Let us put this article of American industry and export, whether produced by manufacturers wholly or partly engaged in the manufacture of tobacco for export, upon even terms with those of other home products manufactured for export, and thus conform our treatment of it to established policy, and remove a burden by the indirect tax so levied on export, estimated at 3 per cent. on the value of the article which has largely transferred our export trade in manufactured tobacco beyond the borders of our country, notably to Canada and Australia.

We are advised, Mr. President, by the Internal-Revenue Bureau of the Treasury Department, that there can be no difficulty in ascertaining the quantity of dutiable goods so consumed, and it is seen that the cost of keeping the necessary accounts to this end amounts to a mere bagatelle, the paltry sum of one-tenth of 1 per cent., which if not in full, is largely covered by the non-collectible claims—below $10.

But why should the owner of such goods be charged for any such clerical work when we have a customs service, the cost of which is paid out of the common treasury of the nation?

It is a trifling affair; too small for a government of such proportions as ours.

In all of such imported ingredients so consumed it is estimated there are of licorice one million (1,000,000) pounds; of sugar, nine hundred thousand eight hundred (900,800) pounds; and of all other ingredients, assimilated, a half million (500,000) pounds, while in the manufacture of tobacco consumed in the United States there are used fourteen and a half millions (14,500,000) pounds licorice, one million three hundred thousand (1,300,000) pounds sugar, and of other ingredients, assimilated, six millions eight hundred thousand (6,800,000) pounds, leaving, as will be observed, yet such an immense demand for these ingredients as forbids hurtful encroachment upon the market for the home product of such ingredients by remission of duty upon the relatively small quantities consumed in the manufacture of tobacco exported.

Let us, Mr. President, now that we may without apprehension of any possible shortage in the income of the Government to meet its every necessary and contingent liability and cover every imaginary demand which either exigency or progress is likely to impose, repeal all laws and parts of laws in any manner restricting the grower of tobacco in the disposition of his crop, and in any form imposing a burden by tax, license, or otherwise, upon the dealer in the same, the peddler, and manufacturer thereof, and by this means enlarge the field of productions, extend the avenues of employment, and level down the barriers which now confine its manufacture and commerce, and without measure of capital, allow all who will to engage in either.

Mr. President, if I express the hope, as earnestly I do, that the honorable Finance Committee of this body will quicken its consideration of this matter, and return at the earliest day to the Senate, House bill 2522 so amended as to reduce taxes in the respect I have spoken and otherwise, and further, as that committee may advise, I feel that I but voice the impatient sentiment of the people.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petitions will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CHENEY, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4308) to regulate steam-engineering in the District of Columbia, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. FRYE, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2287) for securing statistics of the extent and value of the vessel fisheries of the United States, reported it without amendment.

Mr. PUGH, from the Committee on Education and Labor, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3000) fixing the salaries of the Commissioner of Education and the Commissioner of Labor at $5,000 each per annum, reported it without amendment.

Mr. CALL, from the Committee on Education and Labor, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2051) to incorporate the National Academy of Dental Science, reported it without amendment.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7596) to enable foreign executors and administrators to sue in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment.

Mr. CHACE, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 62) enlarging the powers of the Washington Safe-Deposit Company, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 495) changing the name of the Real Estate Title Insurance Company of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. INGALLS. I report from the Committee on the District of Columbia an amendment to the bill (S. 2819) relating to the manufacture and sale of gas in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, and amendatory of an act entitled "An act regulating gas-works," approved June 23, 1874. I ask that the amendment may be placed with the bill on the Calendar. I should like to have the Calendar printed to-morrow so as to show that the amendment has been reported by the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be printed and noted to accompany the bill on the Calendar.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report back a communication from the commissioners of the District of Columbia in reference to the extension of certain streets, and to recommend that the communication with the accompanying map be printed. I ask that it may be so ordered. There was no resolution on the subject referred to the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the order to print will be made.

Mr. ALLISON, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the memorial of the committee representing the medical profession of the United States, praying for an appropriation to aid in defraying the expenses of the international congress to be held in Washington, D. C., in 1887, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations; which was agreed to.

ALLEGED OUTRAGES IN TEXAS.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I am directed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred a resolution submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] on the 24th instant, regarding the investigation of alleged outrages in Washington County, Texas, to report a substitute therefor.

The substitute was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay out of the contingent fund of the Senate, upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, or the chairman of a subcommittee thereof, the necessary expenses of said committee or subcommittee, in inquiring into the circumstances attending certain alleged unlawful occurrences in Washington County, Texas, the investigation of which was ordered by resolution of the Senate January 25, 1887. (Miscellaneous Document No. 36, Forty-ninth Congress, second session.)

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2539) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to exchange property purchased at Abingdon, Va., as a site for a public building for more suitable property, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SNYDER, Mr. WILKINS, and Mr. BROWN of Pennsylvania managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 3877) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to settle and pay the claim of the State of Florida on account of expenditures made in suppressing Indian hostilities, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (H. R. 10457) for the relief of dependent parents and honorably discharged soldiers and sailors who are now disabled and dependent upon their own labor for support.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 10242) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CAMERON introduced a bill (S. 3234) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the purchase of a site and the erection of a suitble building for a post-office and other Government offices in the city of Scranton, Pa.," approved July 27, 1882; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. EVARTS introduced a bill (S. 3235) to increase the pension of George H. Laurence; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, introduced a bill (S. 3236) for the relief of Charles W. Denton, of Oregon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3237) for the relief of M. S. Hellman, of Canyon City, Oreg.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. EDMUNDS introduced a bill (S. 3238) to establish a hospital and reformatory for inebriates in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

COMMITTEE ON PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the leave of the Senate that the Committee on Privileges and Elections may sit during the sessions of the Senate during the remainder of the present Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks the leave of the Senate that the Committee on Privileges and Elections may sit during the sessions of the Senate. If there be no objection leave will be granted. The Chair hears no objection.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. TELLER. On the 17th of January I presented the petition of Wollf & Brown, praying payment for horses pressed into the service of the United States by Col. Thomas Moonlight in 1865 at Denver, Colo., which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. On examination I find it should have been referred to the Committee on Claims. I ask that an order may be made changing the reference as I have suggested.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the suggested change of reference will be made.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. BUTLER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers in the case of Charles W. Denton, of Oregon, be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Ordered, That the petition and papers in the case of M. G. Hellman be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

REJECTION OF PENSION CLAIMS.

Mr. PLUMB submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to inform the Senate whether there is any rule of his Department applied in the Pension Bureau or any rule of said bureau existing and applied with his knowledge or consent whereby any applicant for pension is denied a hearing in said bureau concerning his claim by reason of said applicant having petitioned Congress for relief.

Mr. PLUMB. The occasion for the resolution is found in a letter, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be read if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, PENSION OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., January 24, 1887.

SIR: In response to the request of Hon. P. B. PLUMB, relative to your claim for pension, No. 260105, as late of Company D, Fifth Pennsylvania Reserves, you are informed that it was rejected January 29, 1879, on the ground that the alleged affection of eyes was incurred by lifting heavy timbers in the year 1857, as shown by the certificate of disability upon which you were discharged. Furthermore your appeal to the Congress of the United States for aid forfeited your right as a claimant before this office, which therefore declines further consideration of the claim.

Very respectfully,

JOHN C. BLACK, Commissioner.

DAVID C. CANFIELD, Fort Scott, Kans.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, the applicant for pension named in the letter, Mr. Canfield, had his application rejected as stated therein, and on the 9th day of January, 1884, I presented a bill in the usual form to the Senate granting him a pension. That bill was subsequently, on the 24th day of March, 1884, reported adversely from the Committee on Pensions of the Senate by Mr. Slater, then a Senator from the State of Oregon.

Thereupon this applicant for a pension proceeded to strengthen his case in the Pension Office by new testimony, hoping to bring himself thereby within the somewhat technical requirements of that bureau and secure a reversal of the former unfavorable decision.

The result is recorded in the letter which I have had read, in which this ex-Union soldier is advised that inasmuch as he has had the temerity to appeal to Congress, in fact to present a petition to Congress in accordance with the Constitution, one of the creatures of our legislation, one of the offices established by law passed in accordance with that Constitution, has decided that he can not be heard.

Mr. ALLISON and Mr. INGALLS. "Forfeited."

Mr. PLUMB. Yes, "forfeited." He is advised that he has thereby forfeited his right to be heard in the Pension Office.

I am anxious to know what explanation can be offered for a decision of that kind. I should like to know whether there is any connection between this decision of the Pension Office and the somewhat virulent vetoes of special bills for the pensioning of soldiers who, having failed to secure the requisite proof to satisfy the Pension Office, had appealed to Congress, of which we had a surfeit at the last session; to know if it is not only the rule of the Pension Office to thus treat and to thus characterize the soldiers of the Republic, who are entitled to gratitude at least if they are not entitled to financial relief, but if this is to be a part of the general policy which characterizes this administration in the consideration of their claims. Until that explanation is made I shall not detain the Senate further.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I have no objection to the inquiry indicated in the resolution of the Senator from Kansas; but I do think in presenting a resolution calling for information it is certainly out of place, before the reply is given which the Senator seeks, for him to take the floor and denounce not only the action of the Pension Commissioner with regard to this particular affair but to denounce the President of the United States as having made a manifestation of virulence toward the pensioners of the country. The charge is not sustained, I say in presence of the Senator from Kansas. Every veto of a pension bill sent here has shown the reasons of the President, and there has been nothing virulent or at enmity with the soldiers of the country manifested by the President in these cases.

I am not the special defender of this administration; it does not do what I should like to have it do in a great many instances, but I believe that such treatment of the executive department of this Government is uncalled for.

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to ask the Senator from Delaware before he sits down whether he thinks that letter is the sort of reply which should have been made.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, is this debate in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair——

Mr. SAULSBURY. I was not objecting to the inquiry so as to let the Commissioner answer for himself, but, in advance of his answer, not only to attack the Commissioner, but to attack the President of the United States in the presentation of a resolution of inquiry, in my opinion is not the thing to do.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRIS. Has the resolution been just introduced?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that the Senator from Tennessee raises the question of order. The Chair is bound to say that the resolution is not in order unless by unanimous consent. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HARRIS. Let it be printed and go over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the resolution goes over.

WASTE OF WATER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there are no further "concurrent or other resolutions," the Chair lays before the Senate a resolution submitted yesterday by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], which comes over under objection.

The resolution was read, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, directed to report to the Senate at the earliest practicable time the principal sources of waste of the water supply in this city, and what measures, if any, have been taken to stop or lessen such waste, and the result of their action, and whether there is a 48-inch main now in the ground intended hereafter to connect the new reservoir with Capitol Hill, now lying idle and unconnected with the city system, and whether if such main were connected with the distribution system it would give freer circulation and an ampler supply of water to smaller mains now failing to furnish a sufficient supply in many residences in the northwestern part of the city, and if so, why such connection has not been made, and what steps are necessary to be taken to secure such connection.

PENSIONS OF DISABLED SOLDIERS AND DEPENDENT PARENTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] to a message from the House of Representatives, which he lays before the Senate. The communication from the House of Representatives will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, January 28, 1887.

Ordered, That the Clerk be directed to return to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (H. R. 10457) for the relief of dependent parents and honorably discharged soldiers and sailors who are now disabled and dependent upon their own labor for support.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What does the Senator from Massachusetts desire to have done with the bill?

Mr. HOAR. I had proposed to withdraw the motion to reconsider and to make a statement in the Senate which I think should go out with the passage of the bill; but I have been requested by a member of the Senate to withhold that statement for the time being. I suppose the bill stands now on the motion to reconsider.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be retained.

Mr. HOAR. The motion to reconsider was entered in time, on the same day the bill was passed. The Chair will let it lie, and I will call it up at some very early time convenient to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That course will be taken.

Mr. BLAIR. Does the Senator from Massachusetts propose to call up his motion to reconsider at a subsequent time? I did not quite understand him.

Mr. HOAR. I had expected to make a statement about the bill and to withdraw the motion to reconsider. I said that I should call up the matter at a very early time at the convenience of the Senate. I have been requested to delay it.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator will notify me when he does so?

Mr. HOAR. I have been requested by a member of the Senate to delay calling it up for the time being.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator from Massachusetts delayed calling up the bill and withdrawing his motion to reconsider at my request. I only desire this much delay: As I understand the bill, it pensions a class of soldiers whom Congress has never pensioned before; that is, the survivors of the Black Hawk, the Seminole, and various other Indian wars. I do not think it was understood. I do not object to it; but I should like to refer to some estimates which have been made by the Commissioner of Pensions in former times to see how much money it is going to take, and compare it with the probably small amount which it will take to pay the Union soldiers of the late war under the bill. I shall do that very soon.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 3877) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to settle and pay the claim of the State of Florida on account of expenditures made in suppressing Indian hostilities, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. COCKRELL. My impression is that the bill ought to go to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HARRIS. My impression is that it ought to go to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Committee on Military Affairs heretofore has had jurisdiction of that particular case. It has been referred to that committee, and it has made one or two reports upon it, and I believe that one bill which was reported by the Military Committee was passed by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not care to what committee it goes; I am only stating the fact that that committee heretofore has considered the case, and I think reported once upon it. Whether the bill was passed or not I do not know.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is now referred to the Committee on Claims as it stands.

Mr. CALL. I do not know what to say as to which committee it should be referred.

Mr. HARRIS. It is already referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CALL. I have no choice in the matter of reference, but I should be very glad to see the bill put on its passage as it came from the House if there is no objection to it.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT ABINGDON, VA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2539) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to exchange property purchased at Abingdon, Va., as a site for a public building for more suitable property, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the Chair will understand that the Senate insists upon its amendments and agrees to the conference asked for by the House of Representatives.

Mr. MAHONE, Mr. SPOONER, and Mr. CAMDEN were appointed as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

REAR-ADMIRAL CARTER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar under the eighth rule is now in order. The first case will be stated.

The bill (S. 729) for the relief of Real-Admiral Carter was announced as first in order, and its consideration was resumed by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there any report in that case?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report has been read heretofore, but if the Senator demands the reading it will be read again.

Mr. COCKRELL. If it is not long let it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. BLACKBURN from the Committee on Naval Affairs December 15, 1886, which has been heretofore published in the RECORD.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have before me a letter from the Secretary of the Navy which I ask to have read, and also a list of rear-admirals on the retired-list of the Navy, promoted to that grade on said list from the grade of commodore, retired.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter and accompanying paper will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, December 22, 1886.

SIR: Agreeably to your telegraphic request of yesterday's date, I have the honor to send you herewith a list of the rear-admirals on the retired-list of the Navy, promoted to that grade from the grade of commodore, retired, showing their present rate of pay and the rate of pay at the date of their retirement.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. C. WHITNEY,
Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. GEORGE F. EDMUNDS, United States Senate.

List of rear-admirals on the retired-list of the Navy, promoted to that grade on said list from the grade of commodore, retired.

Name.	Rank when retired.	Present rank.	Pay when retired.	Present pay.
T. O. Selfridge*...	Commodore.....	Rear-admiral....	$1,800	$4,500
T. P. Greene†.....	.....do.....	..... do.....	2,500	3,750
R. N. Stembel‡....	.....do.....	.....do.....	2,500	4,500
S. P. Carter§.....	..... do.....	.....do.....	3,750	3,750

*Paid when retired under section 20, act of July 16, 1862 (12 Stat., 587), under joint resolution of July 1, 1870 (16 Stat., 384); promoted to rear-admiral with pay of that grade; present pay 75 per cent., under section 1588 Revised Statutes.

†Paid at date of retirement 50 per cent. of the highest pay of his grade, under section 5, act of July 15, 1870 (16 Stat., 333); promoted to rear admiral under section 1460 Revised Statutes; present pay 75 per cent. of the sea-pay of the grade in which retired, section 1588 Revised Statutes.

‡Paid at date of retirement 50 per cent. of the highest pay of his grade, under section 5, act of July 15, 1870 (16 Stat., 333); promoted to grade of rear-admiral under act approved July 25, 1866; present pay 75 per cent. of the pay of the grade of rear-admiral, under act approved March 2, 1883.

§Paid at date of retirement, and at present, 75 per cent. of the sea-pay of his grade, under section 1588 Revised Statutes; promoted to rear-admiral under section 1460 Revised Statutes.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire simply to call the attention of the Senate to the effect of these special acts. Here is one where the increase is from $1,800 to $4,500; another from $2,500 to $3,750, and another from $2,500 to $4,500. To the last one, Carter, it seems that there is no increase of pay.

I do not think that such legislation is just or proper or fair to other officers on the list, and I desire these papers spread before the Senate as the reason why I am opposed to the passage of the bill.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I am somewhat of a warm nature, and I am perfectly familiar with what I regard the merits of this application and why it should receive special favor at the hands of Congress.

Rear-Admiral Carter in 1861 was a lieutenant in the United States Navy. Senators will remember that the officers of the Navy under legislation taking place since that time, and since the close of the war, are entitled to this advantage, that those who had distinguished themselves by heroic conduct and meritorious services were, by a resolution of Congress in 1866, authorized to be promoted or advanced, under which a great number of officers of the Navy were advanced. Again, under an act of Congress, officers of the Army and Navy who have received a vote of thanks on the part of Congress, were entitled and are entitled, under the law, to be continued in years, as I remember the number, ten years, before being retired.

Under this last-mentioned act, supposing Lieutenant Carter had had the opportunities in the Navy that other officers had he might have had, and doubtless would have had, the same benefit and an advantage that other officers of the Navy had. I say "would have had." Mr. President, you well remember that the State of Tennessee was the theater of war; you well remember that a great many political considerations entered early in the history of that war into the management of affairs in Tennessee. The President of the United States, knowing that Lieutenant Carter, of the Navy, was connected with a large and influential family in that State, that his name was a household word, that he was related by blood to those who held prominent positions in the State, for political considerations, early in the war assigned Lieutenant Carter to the Army, in the office of brigadier-general; he was afterward promoted to be major-general. He was sent to East Tennessee, taken away from the theater where the same services performed would have won the vote of Congress or won promotion for heroic conduct. There, in obedience to the demands of his Government, governed by high motives, to a theater to which he was unused, where he was required to perform actions to which he was not educated, that gentleman goes. He performs these services, is taken away from the theater where his fellows and associates did win honor and did win promotion. Now, within a few months, by reason of his age, when he might have been promoted but for that age to the position of rear-admiral, the ax comes down upon the question of age, and he is cut off by reason of the fact that he had performed important political and military duties at the instance of his Government.

I submit to you, sir, it is a hardship upon him. I submit to you that he is, for these special considerations, entitled to the favor of Congress. It is upon these grounds, and these grounds alone, that his friends and himself present this application, and I trust it will receive the favor of the Senate.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. President, by direction of the Committee on Naval Affairs I reported this bill favorably to the Senate, and I desire in a very few words to state to the Senate the reasons which induced the committee to make that favorable report.

At the beginning of the war this rear-admiral was a lieutenant in the Navy. He asked no transfer of service. Without request from him the War Department or the President detached him from his naval assignment, and ordered him for a double purpose to the State of Tennessee, of which he was a native. One, as has been stated by the Senator from Tennessee, was to get the advantage of his influence politically in that State at that period of time. He was ordered there to discharge military duties. He raised a brigade of troops for the Union Army. Such was the character of his military service that he was promoted, until he reached the grade and rank of a major-general of volunteers, which he held at the close of the war.

Having been assigned and sent to this service without his own request, at the close of the war, when he was ordered back to his place in the Navy, he went there, of course, shorn of every advantage and stripped of every chance for promotion or advancement that continuous service in the Navy during the war would have given him. He took his place back at the foot, which he was forced to do by reason of this unasked-for assignment to military duty. After he went on and reached the grade of commodore in the Navy he was put upon the retired-list, Congress recognizing—for I can discover no other explanation of the act that Congress passed—recognizing the fact that, without intention, injustice had been done this officer, promoted him to the rank of rear-admiral; but he was then upon the retired-list.

Now, I have a letter from the Secretary of the Navy under date of the 12th of this month in answer to my inquiry as to how many cases the roster of the Navy shows like this one of Admiral Carter. He says:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, January 12, 1887.

SIR: In reply to your letter, I have the honor to inform you that Rear-Admirals T. P. Greene and S. P. Carter were promoted while commodores on the retired-list to the grade of rear-admirals on that list, and receive only the pay of commodore on the retired-list.

I am sir, very respectfully,

W. C. WHITNEY,
Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. J. C. S. BLACKBURN,
Naval Committee, United States Senate, Washington, D.C.

It seems that there are but two officers upon the naval roster of this country, this being one of the two, in whose behalf such a claim can be presented. I do not know whether it will impress the Senate——

Mr. COCKRELL. Let me ask the Senator a question. Is it not the rule of the Navy Department to promote on the retired-list just the same as if officers were on the active-list, but not to accompany the promotion with pay?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will answer the Senator from Missouri, and say that according to this official letter of the Secretary of the Navy of the 12th of this month it seems that there are but two men holding this grade that have been promoted without increase of pay. Upon the contrary, I go further in answer to the Senator with some more information that I have here. I think that Rear-Admiral Selfridge was retired in 1866 on $1,800 a year and that he now receives $4,500.

Mr. COCKRELL. By special act.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes, sir. I think that Rear-Admiral Greene, who was retired in 1874 on $2,500, now gets $3,750.

Mr. COCKRELL. That was by special act.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Remember that this is a special act.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand that.

Mr. BLACKBURN. And I am submitting reasons for it. I think that Rear-Admiral Stembel was retired in 1876 on $2,500 and now draws $4,500, and Commodore Carter, who was retired in 1881 on $3,750, promoted in 1882 to rear-admiral, now draws $3,750, precisely where he started.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair must advise the Senator from Kentucky that his five minutes have expired. The Chair will not enforce the rule if no objection be made to the Senator's proceeding.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will not ask to go further except simply to say that in consideration of the distinguished services this officer has rendered in both the naval and military branches of the service of the country, the Committee on Naval Affairs thought the report should be made.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THEOPHILUS FISK MILLS.

The bill (S. 2023) providing for the payment of $2,500 to Theophilus Fisk Mills for executing a model and design for an equestrian statue of the late General John A. Rawlins was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not see any of the members of the committee in charge of this bill. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], called home by his family misfortune, asked that that bill should be laid over, and I suggest that it be laid over without prejudice, retaining its place on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That course will be pursued, no objection being made.

FERRY AT FORT BUFORD.

The bill (H. R. 1280) to authorize Frank W. Hunt to erect and maintain a ferry across the Missouri River at the military reservation of Fort Buford, Dakota Territory, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill was passed and a motion to reconsider entered. The question is on that motion. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] entered the motion to reconsider the vote on the passage of the bill.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I think the motion had better be denied. It is a House bill that came here and was approved by the War Department.

Mr. PLUMB. The information I had at the time was that this power was not necessary to be exercised at all, and I think on the whole that was the view of the committee, and perhaps that would be the finding of the committee. Besides it would transgress private rights already acquired.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I think this bill has the approbation of the military authorities at the post there and has been recommended by them.

Mr. PLUMB. It is entirely unusual to grant privileges of that kind by special act. The Secretary of War now has authority to name such persons as he sees fit to carry on sutler's business. This really sets up a privilege there in the name of this one person, which must necessarily become a monopoly, and which can not be for the public good.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I think just the opposite is the effect, that this is intended to prevent a monopoly and in favor of the interests of the Government. Let the House report be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to reconsider. There has been no report made on that motion. The question is on the motion to reconsider.

The motion was not agreed to.

MAJ. E. A. HANCOCK.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. 1822) for the relief of Maj. E. A. Hancock, which was reported by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill being adversely reported will be passed over.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it go to the other Calendar; I object to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be transferred to the Calendar under Rule IX.

YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK.

The next business on the Calendar was the bill (S. 2436) to amend sections 2474 and 2475 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, setting apart a certain tract of land lying near the headwaters of the Yellowstone River as a public park.

Mr. PLUMB. Is that bill subject to objection?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is subject to objection under the eighth rule.

Mr. PLUMB. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over under objection.

Mr. VEST. It is in order, I believe, to move the consideration notwithstanding the objection?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That motion is in order.

Mr. VEST. I make that motion. The Committee on Territories reported the bill, and it ought to be considered, either beaten or passed.

Mr. PLUMB. I have no doubt it is an important bill, and for that very reason I think when the Senate is so thin as it is now it should put it over.

Mr. VEST. If the bill is postponed at this stage of the session, the appropriation bills coming in, there is no chance for it. The whole effect of the defeat of this bill is to leave the Yellowstone Park without any law governing it. Any crime can be committed there with impunity, and that is a condition of things that ought not to be tolerated for an instant on any foot of American soil.

Mr. PLUMB. The bill provides for a great staff of employés, and has provisions for the punishment of criminals, &c., of a character that I think ought to be subject to very decided scrutiny before the bill passes.

Mr. VEST. It has been subjected to the scrutiny of a committee and reported here; and if the Senator's opinions in regard to it prevails he can amend it in the Senate; but the bill ought to be acted on. Congress ought not to adjourn leaving that reservation in the condition it is now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question under the rule is not debatable. The question is on the motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill notwithstanding the objection.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I should be glad if some member of the committee reporting this bill would state if any changes are made in the present boundaries of the park by the terms of the bill. I am not familiar with the provisions of section 2474 of the Revised Statutes determining the present boundaries, and I therefore should like to know what change, if any, is made by this bill in the boundaries there fixed.

Mr. MANDERSON. In the first place, I might say, in answer to the request of the Senator from Iowa, that because of the fact that, when the original act was passed defining the boundaries, this country was not well known; the boundary lines were exceedingly indefinite. After exploration, it was found that it was a matter of necessity that those boundary lines should be well defined. That, however, has not been attended to until by the terms of this bill.

The boundary line of the park is extended by this change made by the first section of the bill some 30 miles to the eastward and about 20 miles to the southward of the present boundaries of the park, throwing out of the park a small strip upon the north that is now in Montana Territory, a strip about a mile and a half to two miles wide. It brings the north line to the Wyoming line so that the present boundaries of the park would be within the Territory of Wyoming and extended, as I suggest, to the east and the south.

This change is made by the Committee on Territories in this bill by reason of the recommendations of the Interior Department. The officers of that Department who are familiar with this park and its necessities know that it is absolutely necessary for the purpose of protecting the forests in the vicinity of the park and in the park itself that there should be an extension of the boundaries. No part of the country that is taken in by this extension is available for agricultural purposes, as I understand, and there are no apprehensions on that score.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I would ask the Senator from Nebraska whether this does not change the rule of the right of trial by jury.

Mr. MANDERSON. I do not think it does interfere with it. It gives for certain offenses jurisdiction to the judicial officer who is resident in the park, but it does not prevent any one from a jury trial.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I should like to have it distinctly understood that it does not, because, if we have any foundation at all for our Government, it is the right of trial by jury.

Mr. MANDERSON. There is certainly nothing in this bill that tends to repeal or annul the provision in the Constitution of the United States and the constitutions of all the States referred to by the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to ask in reference to the change of the northern boundary of the park whether it in any manner involves any questions that have been connected with the projected building of railways in that direction.

Mr. MANDERSON. Not at all; it carefully excludes all the mineral sections known as the Clark's Fork mines from the park still, as did the old bill.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Then it excludes from the park portions of the territory now embraced within it over which one or more of these railroad lines would pass if constructed?

Mr. MANDERSON. No; the projected railroad, known as the Cinnabar and Clark's Fork Railroad, proposes to run through this park to a point about 12 miles south of its northern boundary. This proposed change simply cuts off from the northern part of the park a strip about a mile and a half or two miles in width.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. And does not involve the question arising upon the proposed construction of railroads?

Mr. MANDERSON. Not at all. It has no bearing on that subject.

Mr. PLUMB. I have not been able to get a copy of the bill yet, but I understand it was introduced by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. I should like to know what is the difference between Senate bill 101 as I discover it, reported from the committee on this subject, and this Senate bill 2436.

Mr. MANDERSON. The difference is not very material. It is rather in changing the language, the words, than in a change of idea in the frame of the bill.

The bill as originally presented to the Committee on Territories came from the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], and we had the benefit, although he was not a member of the committee, of his experience in reference to the legislation for this park. These changes, as I say, are not very material. I have the bill as originally introduced and can point out the difference.

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to make a suggestion to the Senators who are moving this bill. I am not certain now that I have got the bill. I have just got Senate bill 2436.

Mr. MANDERSON. Senate bill 2436 is the bill before us.

Mr. PLUMB. Was it reported without amendment?

Mr. MANDERSON. It was reported from the committee as a new bill.

Mr. VEST. Senate bill 101 was the original bill.

Mr. MANDERSON. This bill was reported by the committee in lieu of the bill presented by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST.]

Mr. PLUMB. This bill makes a very considerable addition to the present law. It goes very elaborately into a class of questions which are not now settled; that is to say, it creates a very great number of questions not now settled by the law.

Section 2475 of the Revised Statutes embraces what the Congress that established this reservation thought was necessary. This provision was passed on the 1st day of March, 1872, and this park has been able to get along from that time down to the present without any very great trouble, though I am not aware that there has been any great public purpose served by the establishment of the park or that there is likely to be. But that section 2475 contains a very simple provision and one which has been effective up to the present date for doing whatever is necessary to be done for the protection of the park and the objects therein.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, being the railroad attorneys bill, so-called.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on the 26th instant, approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 1577) to amend the third section of an act entitled "An act to provide for the sale of the Sac and Fox and Iowa Indian reservations, in the States of Nebraska and Kansas, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1885;

An act (S. 634) relating to sales for taxes in the District of Columbia;

An act (S. 766) for the relief of Francis Denmead;

An act (S. 1213) to regulate insurance in the District of Columbia;

An act (S. 2600) to authorize the commissioners of the District of Columbia to make police regulations for the government of said District;

An act (S. 1130) to exempt from taxation all property held by the trustees of the Corcoran Gallery of Art, and for other purposes;

An act (S. 1188) to exempt the property of the Young Men's Christian Association of Washington, D. C., from taxation;

An act (S. 228) for the erection of a public building at Camden, N. J.;

An act (S. 1212) for the further protection of property from fire and safety of lives in the District of Columbia;

An act (S. 1882) to repeal parts of an act relating to tax on the business of real-estate agents in the District of Columbia, approved June 20, 1872;

An act (S. 2791) to provide for an American register for the steamer Nuevo Moctezuma, of Philadelphia, Pa.;

An act (S. 2848) for the relief of Benjamin P. Loyall, of the State of Virginia; and

An act (S. 2721) to remove the political disabilities of John K. Mitchell.

The message also announced that the President had, on the 27th instant, approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 1614) granting a pension to Sarah C. Wright;

An act (S. 1844) granting a pension to Orrin P. Cooley;

An act (S. 1997) granting a pension to Mrs. Abbie B. Heath;

An act (S. 2029) granting an increase of pension to Elvira Bliss Sheldon;

An act (S. 2037) for the relief of Mary Anna Egan;

An act (S. 2132) granting a pension to Fridoline Glastetter;

An act (S. 2144) granting an increase of pension to Grace F. Edes;

An act (S. 2321) granting an increase of pension to Clara B. Davidson;

An act (S. 2330) for the relief of Anthon Eitapence;

An act (S. 2334) granting a pension to Isaac Ransom;

An act (S. 2587) granting a pension to Elizabeth Ward;

An act (S. 1201) granting a pension to Louise Ambrecht;

An act (S. 1207) granting a pension to Caroline Sees; and

An act (S. 1481) granting an increase of pension to Col. Charles E. Capehart.

RAILROAD ATTORNEYS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2578) to prohibit members of Congress from acting as attorneys or employés for railroad companies holding charters or having received grant of lands or pecuniary aid from the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On this bill the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, the original bill relating to the subject-matter now under consideration, introduced by the Senator from Kentucky during the last session of Congress, is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That it shall be unlawful for any member of either House of Congress to accept employment as attorney-at-law, or payment for services of any kind, from any railroad company, or any officer or agent thereof, which obtained its charter, or any grant of lands, or pecuniary aid from the United States; and any person who violates this provision shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction, be fined in any sum not exceeding $5,000, and imprisoned not more than one year, in the discretion of the court.

This bill, Mr. President, at that time appeared to the majority of the Senate to be so eminently proper and so clearly right that, contrary to the usual practice, the Senate refused to refer it to a committee, and, upon a yea-and-nay vote, passed the bill, 37 Senators voting for it and 11 against it. Subsequently, upon motion of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], this action of the Senate was reconsidered, and the bill was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. A majority of that committee reported a substitute for the bill. I think, however, that it is hardly necessary to discuss the merits of the substitute. I think it is admitted that the members of the committee reporting the substitute think that it ought not to pass; that they prefer it to the original bill if either passes, but are opposed to both. The real question at issue, as I understand it, is as to the propriety of passing the original bill.

The objections urged against this bill by those who have opposed it are that it prescribes qualifications and imposes restrictions upon members of Congress not authorized by the Constitution; that it is an infringement upon the rights—an unauthorized restriction upon the privileges of the lawyers in this and the other House of Congress, and that to a certain extent it casts a stigma upon an honorable profession.

Without entering upon a discussion as to the constitutionality of the proposed law, I will say that it seems somewhat strange that the question should be raised now for the first time. There is a law upon the statute-book prohibiting members of Congress from practicing in the Court of Claims, and I never heard any one doubt its constitutionality or question its policy.

There is another law which prohibits any member of Congress from practicing before any of the Departments, and so far as I know no one has sought to repeal that law or evade its provisions. If members of Congress can be prohibited from practicing before the Court of Claims and before the Departments, why shall they not be prohibited from appearing as attorneys for railroads holding grants of land from the Government and railroads that have received pecuniary aid from the Government—railroads that are largely interested in legislation that is now pending in one or both Houses of Congress?

Can it be truthfully said that a member of Congress who is employed and paid by these railroad companies, who occupies to them the intimate relation that exists between client and attorney, who constantly receives from the officers of the company the most confidential communications, one whose interest is identified with that of the company—can it be said of such a member that he is entirely free from all bias and prejudice, is wholly impartial, and can judge as fairly as to the rights of the Government and the railroad company as one who does not sustain this relation? We will take for instance the Union Pacific, which has a bill pending here to postpone for a long term of years the payment of its indebtedness to the Government of the United States. Would a Senator or member who is employed by that company, with their money in his pocket, be in a condition to judge fairly and honestly as to the merits of that bill?

Or suppose some member of Congress is the attorney for the Northern Pacific Railroad Company and that he should be called upon and it would become his duty under his retainer to contest the rights of settlers claiming lands under the homestead or pre-emption laws and basing their claims upon the theory that the railroad company forfeited all right by not complying with the terms of the grant, and after a trial and such a contest in the courts will such attorney be a competent and impartial judge to sit as a member of Congress and pass upon the question whether or not Congress has the right and the power to forfeit all lands not earned within the time specified in the grant?

No man can serve two masters. No man can, while acting as the attorney of a railroad company, be an impartial judge between that company and the Government.

Mr. President, all experience teaches us that when one man is employed as an attorney for another he, to a large extent, makes the cause of his client his own; all of his energies are exerted on his behalf; all of his thoughts are directed towards establishing the justice and equity of his claim; and, in a large majority of cases, he comes honestly to the conclusion that his client is right, that his cause is just, and not unfrequently he is fully persuaded that the client on the other side is a great scoundrel, and his lawyer not altogether free from suspicion. It is utterly impossible that one occupying that relation can be an impartial judge, and no State in this Union will allow a judge to preside upon the trial of a cause where he has been employed as counsel.

But, Mr. President, suppose this is not true. If it could be truly said that members of Congress are so far superior to the rest of mankind that they can take ten or twenty thousand a year from the Union Pacific or the Northern Pacific Railroad Company and not be influenced by it, that they can go into the courts of the country and argue one day as to the rights, and powers, and privileges of these roads, and the next day as a member of Congress fairly and honestly judge between these roads and the Government upon a question involving perhaps the same identical point argued in the court; if it be true that they can do all this, unfortunately the people of the country will not believe it to be true; and it seems to me that if members of Congress hope to wield any influence for good, they must not only be pure, but must be believed by the people to be pure and free from any suspicion of being influenced by improper motives.

And will any Senator who opposes this bill assert that an argument made by a member of Congress in favor of the bill extending the time for the payment of the indebtedness of the Union Pacific Railroad Company or against the bill forfeiting lands granted to the Northern Pacific Company will carry with it the same weight and will be as convincing to the minds of the people as it would otherwise be, when it is known that the member making such argument is the paid attorney of such railroad corporation?

Why, Mr. President, ninety-nine men in every one hundred will cast aside such an argument, however cogent or convincing, as utterly worthless for the reason that such member was paid by the company to so think and had not brought to its determination a mind unbiased, untrammeled, and free from prejudice.

It is no answer to this to say that if the argument be sound it is immaterial what the people may say or may think. The very existence of the Congress of the United States rests and depends upon the trust and confidence of the American people; and whenever that confidence is withdrawn, whenever they come to believe, justly or unjustly, that they can no longer trust in the honor and integrity of the members of Congress, then the power for good of the American Congress will be gone, and gone forever.

Already, Mr. President, there is a restless dissatisfaction, a vague fear in the minds of many that members of Congress are not actuated by the same high motives and lofty purposes which influenced them in the past. I hope and believe that there is no cause for such fear, but any act which gives color to such a charge or increases such a suspicion will, as I believe, work serious and lasting injury to the country. I fear that the defeat of this bill will diminish that confidence so necessary to good government, and will greatly lessen the respect and regard that the people entertain for the Senate of the United States.

This bill, Mr. President, and one far more sweeping in its provisions, can be defended upon another ground, and that is, that where a member of Congress accepts a seat in either House, knowing at the time the amount of the salary, there is an implied contract upon his part that he will devote all of his time and all of his energies to the public service, and that he has no right to abandon his place here to appear before the courts for the purpose of increasing his income. He is employed to attend to public and not private business. He is employed by the year, receiving an annual salary, and how can he say while Congress is in session that his services are not needed here? How can he determine in advance that he can be absent for a week or a day, attending to lawsuits for his clients, and that the public interests will not suffer by reason of his absence. It is his duty and part of his contract to be here and not before the courts.

It has been charged in the public press that important legislation has been postponed from day to day and sometimes defeated because members of one or the other House wished to participate in the discussion, but were absent in attendance upon the courts. Whether this be true or not I do not know, but the defeat of this bill will give color to the charge and cause thousands to believe it to be true. Let us suppose that the President of the United States should abandon his duties and engage in the practice of the law (and I will vote for an amendment to include all civil officers); suppose the heads of Departments, chiefs of divisions, the revenue collectors and the postmasters of the country should conclude that their salaries were not sufficient for their first-class abilities, and engage generally in the practice of the law for land-grant railroads and others, would this Chamber not be flooded with bills to prevent such practice, with resolutions of inquiry, and the other House flooded with resolutions of impeachment? And are not members of Congress equally with them in the employ of the Government, and have we any right to claim for ourselves privileges and immunities that we would not accord to the executive and judicial officers?

But it is said that the passage of this law or the enforcement of such a rule would lose to the country the best talent in Congress; that the ablest men in the Senate and House can not afford to serve the country for $5,000 a year. Even if this is true, and I do not believe it to be true, it could only be used as an argument for an increase of salary, and not as a valid argument in favor of allowing members of Congress to become the paid attorneys of corporations which have large interests constantly pending before Congress for adjudication and settlement.

I do not know that a single member of either House is attorney for the land-grant railroads. If they are not, no injury can result to them from the passage of this bill; if they are, then I believe that the honor and good name of the Senate will be best preserved and the interests of the country will be best promoted by the passage of a law that will hereafter make such employment absolutely impossible.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, on a former occasion I expressed my opinion on this bill. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] has alluded to the fact that this bill was passed through this body by a vote of 37 to 11. The bill was introduced by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK], and, without the ordinary and usual procedure, without going to a committee, was presented to the Senate for its action immediately. I came myself into the Senate Chamber as the vote was being taken. I knew comparatively nothing of the bill save and except that it was an unusual proceeding, an almost unheard-of proceeding in this body, that a bill of any importance affecting the public interests should pass without the examination of a committee. It was enough for me to know that it had not proceeded in that way, and I voted against it. After a careful examination of the bill on the motion to reconsider I voted to reconsider. I am prepared now to record my vote against the bill, and I am prepared to record my vote against the bill notwithstanding the newspaper clamor, notwithstanding the effort which has been made to attract attention to the fact that this body is a body of lawyers, and notwithstanding the charge which has been made that they were devoting the time which they should devote to the public service in the practice of law for the class of corporations aimed at or referred to in the bill introduced by the Senator from Kentucky.

I stated on that occasion that, without reference to any statute, believing as I did that the public confidence in this body and in public men would be largely promoted by the members of this and the other body abstaining from employment of that character, I had myself studiously abstained from it, and should continue so to do. It could not have been aimed at me nor any of my practice; that is certain.

Mr. President, I am a lawyer, as are a great number of the members of this body. The practice of law is my profession. It is the only business to which I have been educated. It is the only business at which I can get a living. It is an honorable profession. It is one the members of which are supposed to be men of character, of virtue, and of integrity. It is supposed that as a class they have ideas of propriety quite equal to those of any other class of men in this country.

I do not subscribe to the doctrine enunciated a moment ago by the Senator from Arkanas, that when a man is elected to the Senate of the United States he agrees to devote his whole time to the Senate of the United States. He agrees to devote just so much time to the public duties which he has assumed as shall be necessary to honestly and properly discharge those duties, and no more. In the long interval that passes between the 4th day of March at the expiration of a Congress and the succeeding day in December when it reassembles he has an unquestioned right to devote himself to his private and personal affairs; and it is no more improper for an attorney to devote himself to that service out of which he gets his living than it is for the man who plants, or who farms, or who conducts a mercantile establishment, or a banker's or a broker's establishment to conduct his business.

It is not the theory of this Government that the men who sit in this Chamber are to be divorced from all business; it is not the theory of this Government that the men who sit in the other House are to be divorced from all private interests. They are to participate in the general business of the country, and thus become acquainted with the interests and the wants of the people, and thus acquire a knowledge of the interests that come before this and the other body for their action.

I do not believe that any member of this body ought, at any time, to be concerned in any litigation that is hostile to the interests of the Government of the United States. I find upon the statutes a law of that character already. I think any man who is fit to sit in this body would be restrained by his own instincts of propriety and decency in that respect. I do not believe such a law was ever necessary to restrain the members of this body from taking cases against the Government of the United States. If there have been exceptions; if there have been men who, coming into this body and the other, have been so insensible to their high duty, they have never fallen within my observation.

I know that there has been of late an effort made in this country to deride and to decry this body. I know that quacks in politics and men who have not been able to acquire the opportunity of sitting in this body have filled the public press with their attacks upon what they call the House of Lords. I realize the fact that this body, not representing public sentiment directly, not immediately representing the great mass of the people, but representing the States, has ceased to be a popular body in the estimation of the people of the United States. I understand that there is abroad in this country now a determined effort, a very determined effort, to break down this body, to destroy its usefulness, and thus compel eventually the abolition of the Senate of the United States.

Mr. President, it can not be done while Delaware and Rhode Island, small States as they are in the Union, shall insist upon the right given them when the Constitution was adopted. Nobody believes who has studied the history of these States and of others that the time ever will come, unless there is a revolution and an absolute destruction of the Constitution, when the Senate of the United States will be abandoned. It, then, is the interest of every man in it and every man out of it to maintain for it the high character that it has maintained in the legislation of this country for nearly a hundred years.

I do not myself believe that bills of this kind coming into the Senate with a Senatorial declaration that it is necessary by law to keep men from doing that which the instincts of honesty and the instincts of gentlemen will prompt them to avoid, I do not believe such attacks upon the Senate redound to its credit or strengthen it with the people. I believe they impair the usefulness of this body and derogate from its high position which, as I said a moment ago, it had maintained for nearly a hundred years, and which I think it will be able to maintain in spite of all these attacks for many years to come.

Mr. President, as a student of government I have come long since to believe that no better system could have been devised by men than the system of government devised by our ancestors. I have come to believe that the American Senate is indispensable to the maintenance of the integrity of the nation and the safety of the people. I believe it will stand as it has stood heretofore as a conservative element in the body-politic ready to see that the great States do not trespass upon the little States, and that public clamor does not override justice and fair dealing, and I believe it to be the duty of every man in the United States to refrain from casting imputations upon this body save and except as the body merits and deserves such imputations. Therefore I would be the last man almost who would stand up and father or support a bill of this kind, and say that it was necessary to keep Senators from doing what they should not do, by the passage of such a bill.

I do not say that a Senator can not step into the arena of the courts, that he can not become the advocate of one of these railroad companies, without doing violence to his duty as a Senator. I have not asserted that. I only assert that he himself ought, if he is fit to stand in his place, to be left to his discretion and to his judgment to say when such employment on his part will interfere with the duties which he paramountly owes to the people of the United States by virtue of his election to this body. I do not suppose that the members of this body need legislation to prevent them from doing a great many things which the public would disapprove if they should do. I believe that the people of the State that I in part represent when they sent me here sent me with a belief that upon all great public questions I would exercise my judgment; that in all my relations to the public service I would govern myself according to the strictest equity and justice—that kind of equity and justice which would result from a proper moral consideration of the affairs with which I am intrusted.

This bill goes beyond what it should do, even if it was necessary to legislate in this behalf. I can see why the public might say that they prefer, as I said before, that their public servants should not be the employés of a great railroad corporation that was coming here asking legislation; and because of that, and not because I doubted at any time my ability to receive their money and render them the service that a lawyer should, and then do the people justice in this body, or anywhere else—not because of that, but because I desired to maintain public confidence in behalf of this body and every member thereof, and for that reason, and that alone, I have declined employments of this character. But this bill says that any railroad company that may have received a charter, any railroad company that may have its authority to exist from Congress, shall not be allowed to employ me or any other member of this body to do its legal business.

In the State which I in part represent there is a railroad company, organized by an act of Congress before we became a State, that has hundreds of miles of railroad running all through the State. Never have they come here with a question, nor will they ever. It is a local road in the State of Colorado. For it I have never done a dollar's worth of business in my life; neither do I expect to; but is there any reason why I should be prohibited by law from taking a retainer from that company to conduct a prosecution if some man had derailed one of its trains? Is there any reason why I should not take a retainer from it in any ordinary business that a railroad company submits to a lawyer? Yet, by this bill I should be guilty of a violation of a statute and subject to the pains and penalties of imprisonment if I should take such a retainer.

The Judiciary Committee have even gone beyond the original bill in that particular; and they have declared that neither for nor against a railroad company can a Senator be employed as an attorney. I call attention to the words of the original bill. In lines 5, 6, and 7 I find:

> For services of any kind, from any railroad company, or any officer or agent thereof, which obtained its charter, or any grant of lands, or pecuniary aid from the United States.

If a man happens to be the agent of one of these corporations, though he may have business entirely disconnected from the corporation or its interest, yet by this bill we are prohibited from taking retainers from such a man. I find that the Committee on the Judiciary, who reported this bill, provide further in their amendment, maintaining in it this odious and objectionable feature of the original bill:

> Or from or against any bank or corporation, or other officer or agent thereof, which obtained its charter or any pecuniary aid from the United States; or from or against any corporation or company, its officer or agent, engaged in the business of interstate commerce by land or water, or in the business of any interstate transportation, or in the transportation of United States mails; or from or against any corporation, company, firm, or person, or officer or agent thereof, engaged in the production, manufacture, or sale in the United States, or in the business of importing into the United States from any foreign country any article whatsoever upon the importation of which any customs duty is now levied, or shall at any time hereafter be levied; or from or against any manufacturer of any article on which an excise tax is now levied, or shall at any time hereafter be levied, by any act of Congress.

This bill in its general terms as amended by the committee would practically preclude any lawyer from practicing in any class of cases that would give him any considerable remuneration for his labor.

I am opposed both to the bill itself and to the amendment of the committee. I believe the amendment of the committee is not quite as good as the original bill, and if I had to make my choice between the two I think I should make it in favor of the original bill.

Mr. President, if it is the purpose of this Senate to say that any person elected to the Senate who is a lawyer shall cease to practice his profession, if it is to put a badge of disgrace upon that profession, or if it is to keep men honest who come into this body by keeping them away from temptation—in either case I am against it.

The honorable Senator from Arkansas said a few moments since that it was alleged that the salary of Senators and Representatives was not sufficient, although he thought it was.

Mr. BERRY. The Senator will excuse me. I did not hear his last remark.

Mr. TELLER. I understood the Senator to say that it was alleged as an excuse why Senators should seek other employment and do other business than what they are required to do here, that the salary was too small, and I understood the Senator from Arkansas to say that he thought it sufficient.

Mr. BERRY. I do think it is sufficient.

Mr. TELLER. That is a question of opinion. I do not undertake to rate any other man's services nor to speak on this occasion of my own. I know that if some of the Senators sitting in this body were compelled to refrain from any kind of business by which they can add to their income, and to depend entirely upon the salary paid them as Senators, they would be compelled to leave the public service.

There is a complaint among the people to-day that we are filling this body with millionaires, that we are filling it with men of large means, who are elected to this body because of their possession of great amounts of money. If it is once understood that he who comes into this body must rely solely and entirely upon the salary of $5,000 paid by the Government of the United States, there will be many a man who would be useful at least in this body who will be compelled by prudential reasons to abstain from receiving so high an honor at the hands of the people of his State.

I know Senators in this body, whatever may be the reputation of the body for wealth, who would be obliged to surrender their positions if compelled to live entirely upon the salary. I do not say that a man may not live in comfort upon $5,000 a year; I do not say that it is necessary for a Senator to maintain a great establishment; but there are many men in the country who have other things to do than to support their families. There are men who come to this body who before they come here pledged themselves to pay perhaps their just debts, who are honest enough to desire to do it, and who can not do it out of the salary which is allowed them as Senators of the United States.

I do not suppose the time has been reached when the people of the United States are willing to say that their public servants shall do nothing but attend to the public interest. They never have required it. The ablest men who have sat in this body have been known to be practitioners before the courts of the land. A Webster, a Clay, a Calhoun, and all that class of men, without condemnation appeared in all the courts of the land. The people, instead of deprecating it, were proud of the fact that their great representatives could go into the courts of the land, could see that the statutes were enforced, could assist in determining questions of right between private litigants; and it is only recently that it has been a badge of dishonor for a man to appear in a court in defense of the rights of private parties who might be litigants therein.

I know that public clamor will be heard against every man who votes against this bill. I am of the impression that public clamor has its effect in this body as it does everywhere else. I do not profess myself to be above public opinion. I believe no man ever lived who is more anxious for the approbation of the public than myself; but while I remain a member of this body I shall be governed by my own judgment upon questions of this character, independent of the criticisms of the people, or any considerable number of them, on my conduct. I shall endeavor to discharge the duty that I owe to the public in an honest and straightforward manner, but I shall not be deterred from doing it by hope of applause if I should vote one way or by fear of condemnation if I should vote the other.

Believing that this is a pernicious bill, believing that its passage can not add to the credit of this body, but that it will stand in some measure as an indictment and condemnation of it, I shall decline to vote for the bill.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland. Mr. President, in view of the feeling which the discussion of this measure seems to have aroused on the part of some of the most experienced and honored members of this body, the question involved has assumed a character of so much delicacy that I desire to give utterance to the few remarks I shall make in guarded and measured terms. Above all things, upon the very threshold, I repudiate any desire or intention to reflect upon the character of any Senator, or to detract from the honor or standing of the great legal profession to which so many of us belong. The question before us, which seems to the people at least an important one, should be discussed upon the high plane of principle alone, to the utter exclusion of all personalities, expressed or implied, and with sole reference to the public welfare.

The primary question involved in the bill is this: Has Congress the power to pass laws regulating the conduct of its members in matters relating to or calculated to affect the discharge of their legislative duties, whereby offenses are created, penalties are imposed, and jurisdiction over such offenses is vested in courts of law? And if Congress has such power, the next and only other question is, to what extent is it right and expedient that it should be exercised?

Mr. President, it is certainly no undue reflection upon any man or class of men to suggest, what your statute-law fully takes for granted, that a member of Congress may be guilty of a heinous offense, such as the taking of a bribe, for which expulsion would be no sufficient punishment, whether we consider the gravity of the offense or look to the suppression of the crime. Inasmuch as the Federal courts have no common-law jurisdiction over crimes, an act of Congress was necessary and was long ago passed to make such an act by a member of Congress a crime punishable by a United States court. Congress evidently thought that such a crime and its punishment were distinct things from the disgraceful conduct involved in the reception of a bribe and a consequent expulsion from a seat in either House. They saw that the perpetrator of the offense might be indicted and punished by law, whilst for very many imaginable political reasons a two-thirds majority could not be obtained for his expulsion; or he might be expelled from his seat, whilst for want of legally sufficient evidence the talons of the law might fail to seize upon him.

The fact that the same act may be punishable in the two forums in different modes, in neither the one case nor the other, as they understood the matter, involves the establishment of any other qualifications for membership in either House of Congress than those prescribed in the Constitution. Nor can the possession of these qualifications, in the very nature of things, cover over a member with a constitutional panoply which renders him proof against all punishment by law for an act to which Federal legislation affixes a penalty, as being everywhere and among all civilized nations a gross crime. To contend for any such proposition is not only to run counter to what has been thus far in our history the universal sentiment of the legal profession and the long-continued practice of the Government, but also to invest a member of Congress with constitutional immunities not only far beyond those expressed in the Constitution, but extremely dangerous in their extent and in their tendencies.

There is no attempt, sir, in the Constitution to enumerate the cases in which Congress has the power to create offenses and to impose penalties. It would have been utterly impracticable to attempt to frame any such catalogue. Wherever the Government has property, rights, or interests to be protected, there, by a natural and irresistible implication, it possesses the power to pass all penal laws "necessary and proper" to protect such property, rights, and interests from invasion. Whenever the Government has duties and responsibilities resting upon it, which duties and responsibilities are necessarily committed to its agents for their due performance, there the Government has the right to guard and enforce the performance of such duties by its agents with such penalties as to Congress may seem adequate to the end in view.

It would be an invitation to a general system of robbery, peculation, fraud, and inefficiency, if Congress had not the power to impose penalties upon its agents and fiduciaries commensurate with its powers and duties, and necessary to insure the right performance of the varied functions of government. And it would indeed be a strange anomaly if the legislative power could embrace all other repositories of the functions of government within its range of criminal legislation, but should be nerveless to take any step to repress grave offenses among its own constituent members—if it were armed with full energy to keep pure every streamlet of governmental agency, but were powerless to pass any act to protect from pollution the great fountain of political life right here in its own bodies. Nothing can be found in the language of the Constitution to warrant so remarkable an assumption, and certainly there is nothing in the nature or reason of things to justify it.

It is true, sir, it is made the duty of each House to guard over the conduct of its members and to repress all dishonorable acts inconsistent with its dignity and purity. To this end the power of expulsion is given. But this power is rather intended to protect the purity and dignity of the expelling body than to punish the person expelled. Manifestly it may often prove an inadequate punishment both in degree and in kind. Congress, then, having the duty resting upon it to guard the purity of legislation by and through a vigilant oversight over the purity of its component members, must have the power, and the duty is laid upon it, at least to pass such laws as it deems adequate to punish all acts connected with or bearing upon the discharge of legislative duty which the moral sense of mankind teaches to be wrong in themselves.

No one, Mr. President, will be likely to dispute this proposition, especially as illustrated by the crime of receiving a bribe by a member of Congress. But if Congress can, in any case, invest the courts with criminal jurisdiction over members of Congress for acts done in or connected with the discharge of their legislative duties, and courts can try and punish them for such acts, then the whole principle is conceded, and the only question then remaining for us to determine is, how far it may be expedient to carry this criminal legislation by Congress in the effort to secure freedom from corruption.

The senior Senator from Kentucky has quoted from our Revised Statutes many cases in which Congress has exercised the further power to prohibit members of Congress, under severe penalties, from performing acts which may not be wrong in themselves, but which Congress has deemed of dangerous tendency, because their performance would be necessarily attended with powerful motives to forget the higher duties and responsibilities of the legislator, and to sink them in the lower and selfish interests of the attorney and claim-hunter. For more than one-third of a century such legislation has been accumulating upon our statute-book with general approval in and out of Congress. The principle of such legislation is sound in its philosophy. If the Government has the power through its courts to punish the crime of corruption in a legislator, after it is committed (as no one will deny), it would seem a reasonable and necessary corollary that it has the power to guard itself and its members from being surrounded by circumstances and conditions powerfully impelling towards such offenses. That is just what the bill introduced by the Senator from Kentucky is intended to accomplish, and nothing more.

Mr. President, it seems to me that never before was there a complication of circumstances in this or any other land more imperatively calling for just such legislation. Questions of the most vital concernment to the people and to their Treasury are constantly arising between the United States and some of the most powerful corporations which the world ever saw, and which are day by day increasing in power and in the spirit of aggression, corporations so gigantic and overshadowing that, if not promptly curbed, they may soon be, if not now, called imperium in imperio. Momentous questions, involving the forfeiture back to the people of unearned grants of many millions of acres of land, and the claim of the Government for most valuable services which these corporations, by the terms of their charters, undertook to render to the Government, and also the settlement of immense sums of money claimed to be due from them to our Treasury, are either of chronic standing or perpetually arising.

These great questions are to be voted upon by Senators and Representatives, and to be decided by their votes. Who can deny that it is not only seemly and proper but imperatively demanded by common justice, fairness, and decency that each member of Congress, in voting to decide these mighty questions, should be free from all bias, all prejudice, all prepossession, all self-interest? Everybody knows—it is a matter of every-day observation—that a lawyer with a client's retainer in his pocket and probably with a still larger fee in expectancy, and with his busy brain ever at work to make out his client's case a good one (a mental process which is apt to be stronger in proportion to the size of the fee), is rarely in a proper frame of mind to do equal and exact justice to the other side. Gentlemen may refine as they will, and wax eloquent over the dignity of the legal profession, and denounce the attempt to invade the rights of the citizen to pursue his calling free from governmental control; but the people have deep and abiding convictions that no member of Congress has any right to place himself in any such indelicate or compromising position.

Now, Mr. President, I do not pretend to intimate that any member of this body sustains the relation of an attorney to a land-grant railroad. But either it is true or it is untrue that any such accusation, if any such has been made, has a foundation in fact. If it be true, then I do not hesitate to say that the moral sense of the people declares such an attitude of a Senator to be utterly inconsistent with the transcendent obligations to the people which as Senator he has assumed. When he comes here to deal with the imperial interests of a great people he must, if need be, forget that he is a lawyer. What is the business of a lawyer, and what are lawyers' fees, in comparison with the mighty interests of sixty millions of people?

A lawyer's obligation to a client can be escaped by returning his fee and retiring from a case. A Senator's sworn obligations to the people can never be shaken off so long as he sits in this body; and he has no right, as the people view it, to allow any other interests, in comparison with those of their Government, for a moment to have a feather's weight with him. And what is more—inasmuch as public opinion is an uncrowned queen in our land—if public opinion declares that the position of attorney for a land-grant railroad detracts from his usefulness and standing as a Senator, and surrounds him with an atmosphere of suspicion and distrust, he owes it to himself, to the country, and to an enlightened public sentiment, to discard any such complication, and to stand forth before the world unfettered by any other bonds than those which bind him to look to the interests of the Government and of the people.

On the other hand, sir, if there be no attorney for a land-grant railroad in Congress, then is it an auspicious time to crystallize the general sentiment and moral sense of the people upon this subject in the shape of a statute like the bill proposed and so ably urged by the Senator from Kentucky. Such a law will be a perpetual warning to members of Congress of the light in which the people view the assumption by them of duties which are inconsistent with the free and unbiased discharge of their obligations as Senators and Representatives. It will teach them that the people expect them not only to be pure but free from the very suspicion of corruption. And right here I must confess I do not see any occasion for the exhibition of an indignant sense of wounded pride on the part of any member of either House with reference to the proposed legislation. Human laws are not enacted on the theory of immaculate perfection in any set of men, be they high or low.

The Constitution even contemplates that the highest may fall, and has organized a court of impeachment which can strip the ermine from the shoulders of your Chief-Justice or drive a President from the White House. There is no reason, either in the principles of human nature or in the light of our own or of any other people's experience, why we should assume (much less grow indignant at the contrary supposition) that members of Congress, even if they be lawyers, like the rest of mankind, may not be successfully assailed by temptation. It is extremely right and judicious, then, to provide all reasonable safeguards against the possible lapse of legislators from the path of duty. To do this does not involve a charge against any man in either House of Congress. It is only an assertion of a truth, which no one will deny, that to err is human and that human nature requires all the props attainable to keep it from falling.

But, sir, it is contended that we have no right to pass any such law, because its effect would be to add to the constitutional qualifications required for a man to become a member of the House to which he may belong. In addition to what I have already said on this point I will add that I fail to see how a law imposing a penalty upon a constitutionally-qualified sitting member for doing an act which is a crime in itself by the consensus of civilized men, or which is generally considered to be directly against public decency or policy, can possibly be construed into an assertion of a qualification to become a member. No man ever yet conceived that the expulsion of a member from either House for any act of turpitude or of indecency could involve in any possible way the establishment of such a qualification. Still less can we say that the creation of an offense by statute and the affixing of a penalty to it, to be inflicted by a court after a fair trial, can be tortured into a prescription of a qualification for membership. In the latter case neither the constitution of the offense nor the infliction of the penalty in itself involves the loss of a seat in Congress. It remains, as in every other case, for the members of the House to which the offender belongs, by a two-thirds vote, to determine whether he has forfeited his seat by his deliberate breach of a law enacted to guard the purity of the body of which he is a member. It is only necessary to say further in reference to this objection that it utterly fails to recognize the distinction that the grounds upon which one may claim and hold a right are often entirely distinct from those which may work its forfeiture.

It has been further strenuously argued that Congress has no power to pass this bill, because it would be an assertion of a power to regulate the right of an attorney of a State court to practice law in such court—the power to impose such restrictions upon a practitioner in a United States court being conceded, so far as this particular view is concerned. Some supporters of the general scope and purpose of this bill, as it originally stood, recognize this distinction, and would limit the bill to lawyers practicing in Federal courts. With all deference to the views of these eminent lawyers, I have no difficulty in going to the full extent of the legislation originally proposed by the Senator from Kentucky. I hold that we are not claiming the power to regulate or control State laws on this subject. We are simply regulating the conduct of members of Congress, in reference to the discharge of their duties as such. When a man comes here, if he be a lawyer, in everything relating to or bearing upon the discharge of his duty on this floor his character as a lawyer is, or should be, merged in his character as a Senator. His duties to the public are or should be paramount to any duties owed to a citizen or to a corporation.

If any interests antagonistic to those of the people and of their government are so mighty and so aggressive as to make it unbecoming or impolitic for any representative of a State or of the people to allow himself to be retained by such interests, and so compromising as to surround such representative so employed with general suspicion and distrust, and so seductive and warping as to dangerously appeal to the self-interest of the representative to neglect his duties to the Government and to the people, then in the name of public decency and of the highest public policy, and in pursuance of its duty to keep its members free, not only from corruption, but from corrupting influences and surroundings, Congress should forbid its members to become so retained as counsel, not because we have a right to regulate the practice of law in State courts, but because we have a perfect right to control and regulate the conduct of our members in all matters gravely affecting the exercise of their legislative functions, and tending to bring them and the Houses of Congress into disrepute.

And right here, sir, appears to rest the full and complete answer to the amendment proposed by the Judiciary Committee, which seeks to discredit the bill before us by professing to carry it out to its logical consequences. Because it might be childish to attempt to prevent a member of Congress from allowing himself to be retained by a man or a corporation with some much less important interest opposed to the Government, it is highly illogical to argue that no case can arise in which interests can be so powerful, so aggressive, and so seductive as not only to render it unseemly and impolitic, but actually dangerous to legislative rectitude, to allow members of Congress to be retained as attorneys in their behalf. The science of government is not only the science of the attainable, but also of the expedient. Legislation in one class of the cases supposed may well be highly expedient and necessary, while in the other its utter needlessness would only render it ridiculous. Of the one class is the wholesome legislation proposed by the Senator from Kentucky in this bill as it originally stood; of the other, with all due respect to the committee, is their amendment.

Mr. President, we often hear it said, in answer to the proposition involved in this bill, that it is only pandering to a vitiated sentiment in the public mind, which is ever seeking to throw discredit on members of Congress, and to hold them up to public execration as unworthy of confidence or respect. It may be, sir, and doubtless is often the case, that thoughtless witlings do groundlessly seek to throw ridicule and contempt upon public men, and to make the world believe that public honor and private virtue are almost unknown in Washington. It may be and doubtless is also the case that members of Congress, with rare exceptions, are honorable and high-minded men, who would disdain to be swayed in their votes by corrupt considerations. But when, as in the case before us, there is a manifest incompatibility between the employment denounced by this bill, and the discharge of the highest and most important public trusts, and when the public mind is so deeply imbued with the conviction that such employment reasonably and naturally generates suspicion and distrust of the legislator, and inevitably throws temptation across his path, it does seem to be a source of profound regret that lawyers in Congress should rush forward to reject a measure which their first impulse told them was just and right.

Surely, these great corporations can find multitudes of able counsel to prosecute their claims against the Government without seeking to impress into their service members of Congress, who were sent here, above all things, to protect the rights of the people, and whose employment by such corporations will be surely suspected to have been often sought simply because they do sustain that very relation to the States or to the people. If, then, members of Congress do not desire such employment, and do not intend to accept it, and if the moral sense of the people demands that they should not do so, and if to accept it would tend to bring Congress into disrepute, why not pass the law as originally proposed, satisfy the public demand, and dispel any cloud of suspicion which a contrary course will be sure to gather around us?

Where any great and vital principle, either of conduct or of policy, is involved, a member of Congress should not, I admit, ever yield to an unreasoning public clamor. But in a matter involving a principle of conduct, to say the least, so doubtful in its propriety, and so marked by public reprobation that scarcely any Senator will rise in his seat and own, and, in fact, I believe nearly every one who has spoken upon this bill has made haste to deny that he is a retained counsel of any land-grant railroad, it seems to be a highly unwise policy for Congress to turn heedless ears to the general expressions of public sentiment which demands that legislators here shall be free from the bias of counsel retained by such corporations, and which will surely visit with its indignant condemnation any member of Congress who, being so bound up with adverse and powerful interests, undertakes to sit in judgment upon the weightiest rights of the people.

Still further, Mr. President, I can see little force in the objection we sometimes hear, that it is invidious to select the legal profession as the subject of this restrictive legislation. That profession, we must remember, is the only one whose members hold themselves out to the world as prepared to undertake the business of clients for pecuniary considerations, and who bind themselves by oaths to faithfully prosecute such business when intrusted to them. Let us recall another fact developed by this discussion, that, out of seventy-six members of this body, sixty-five are lawyers. If the outcome of this debate should be an approval of the position that it is becoming and proper for a Senator who is a lawyer to become a retained counsel for a land-grant railroad, each one of these sixty-five lawyers will be at liberty, with the expressed approval of the Senate, to accept a retainer by these railroads.

Thus, 85 per cent. of the Senate's members might, with the Senate's approval, be subject to whatever bias such retainer might generate when here called upon to decide questions of the highest importance (though in precisely opposite directions) both to their clients and to the people. And each one of them, after such questions are here legislatively decided, might be called upon to appear before the courts and to attack or defend the legislation which as Senator (and with such a prospect before him) he had aided in enacting. No other class of men who can be called upon to sit here could ever be placed in such a delicate or compromising position. And candor compels me to say that no other class of our citizens can ever so nearly approach to a governing class as the legal profession, and from an alliance of no other in Congress with these mighty and warring corporations could spring so much of danger to the interests of the people.

I shall, therefore, vote against the committee's amendment, and, if opportunity offers, for the original bill—not at all because I know or hear of any immediate exigency in any personal aspect for such action, but because, in view of the struggles now existing or impending between the people and these great corporations, I believe the signs of the times are portentous of danger in this direction. And I shall cast my vote, too, not only with a view to what I believe to be the best interests of the people, but also with a special regard to what I believe will in the long run be most conducive to the honor and fair fame of the noblest secular profession to which an American citizen can devote the best energies of his head and heart.

FISHING RIGHTS OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. CALL obtained the floor.

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senater yield to me just one second?

Mr. CALL. Certainly.

Mr. FRYE. I only want to give a little bit of information which is important just at this moment, and which will be of interest to the Senate:

EASTPORT, ME., January 28.

The winter school of herring has struck in on the American shore, and about twenty-five English boats and vessels are fishing on this shore. Meanwhile the cruiser Middleton (an English cruiser) is patroling between here and Saint Andrews, ready to seize any American fisherman that may venture over the dead line.

That is all.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 222) to amend section 1661 of the Revised Statutes making an annual appropriation to provide arms and equipments for the militia.

The message also announced that the House of Representatives had passed the bill (S. 2256) to create a port of delivery at Lewes, Del., with an amendment; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

RAILROAD ATTORNEYS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2578) to prohibit members of Congress from acting as attorneys or employés for railroad companies holding charters or having received grant of lands or pecuniary aid from the United States.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I wish to make a few remarks in reply to what has been said by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON] in advocacy of the bill.

They have treated this question as if there was an issue here as to the propriety of a Senator or a Member of Congress being retained by a corporation that has interests of legislation before this body, and they have denounced that conduct as improper and as dangerous to the legislation of the country.

That is not the question presented by this bill. The question presented by this bill is whether the Senate can be trusted to preserve the purity of character of its members. The bill affirms that it can not. It asks another instrumentality to be used. The bill declares that the Senate of the United States, selected by States, and the people of States, can not be trusted to preserve the purity of character of its members in respect to the great public interests of legislation that come here. That is the issue presented by this bill.

Let us suppose that to be true, as the arguments of Senators here assume it to be true, what becomes of this Government? Where is it, if it be true that its greatest instrumentality, the States and the people of the States, can not be trusted to send here men who will see, by the power conferred upon them in the Constitution, that no person is allowed to participate in legislation corruptly or under circumstances that may lead to corruption?

What does the bill propose and what do these Senators propose as a substitute for what this the wisest Government created in all the ages has provided for the purity of those who represent the people? What is the substitute? The substitute is a single man, the creature of executive power, in the interests of executive power, and twelve chance individuals selected as a jury. They are to be trusted, says the bill, and say the Senator from Arkansas and the Senator from Maryland, in place of seventy-six men selected by the people of the States, to whom shall be confided the character of the members of the two Houses and the great subjects of legislation which are sent here by the Constitution and the people who sent us here.

What an argument, what a proposition, and what a government that would be! A judge, the creature of executive power, and twelve chance jurors, such as we find hanging around our courts, are to be trusted with the safety of the sixty-six millions or perhaps the two hundred million people who are to compose this country! What a reflection upon our Constitution and our form of Government is this proposition so boldly urged here, for it can not be denied that it is an assertion that the instrumentality to preserve the purity of character, the disinterestedness of the men who legislate here, shall not be the character and virtue of the men who constitute these two legislative bodies, but shall be a judge in the District of Columbia and twelve jurors assembled here.

Let us look a little further, Mr. President. I venture to say, and I wish to put it upon record, that this Government seems to be upon the eve of changing its character. It seems as if the people were no longer to have power in this Government. Various social and personal and political influences are coming into play which seem to threaten to impair the influence and control of the people; but of all of them none is more destructive and subversive of the power of the people than the bill here proposed.

Let us see if that is not a plain proposition. Do not let us talk about the impropriety of Senators and Members of Congress engaging in legislation and practicing in the Court of Claims or elsewhere. This is a government of States and a national government resting upon them. The States send their Senators and their Members of Congress here into the District of Columbia. To obstruct, interfere with, or in any way prevent the representation of the people in either body by any extraneous power or influence may be destructive of the Government. In order that the attendance of the Members and Senators here may be certain, the Constitution prohibits them from arrest except for "treason, felony, and breach of the peace in their attendance here, and going to or returning from the Congress. They come here into the District of Columbia. The bill proposes to say to every judge, "You shall have supervision over the conduct in the two Houses of the Senators and Members of the House of Representatives; you may, if you choose, upon the affidavit of any individual that they are the attorneys of some corporation, arrest them in the performance of their legislative functions; you may select the jury who is to try them; you are the judge; their whole personal security shall be intrusted to you." You may arrest them for an act which is not "treason, felony, or breach of the peace," but which concerns only the propriety of their conduct as legislators; whatever may be felony, treason, or breach of the peace, it is quite certain that in the intendment of the Constitution practicing law by a Senator or Member of Congress is not and can not be either of these crimes.

Let us suppose that the imperial power of corporations shall increase, or that from other causes in the future there shall vest in the Executive of the United States, in the hands of some ambitious man, an overwhelming power, and that a judge may be found willing to sell himself and prostitute his office to serve them—and there are to-day more judges than there are Senators and members of Congress who are the attorneys of railroad corporations, who have sacrificed every interest of the people for them; you propose to say to one of this class of men, "You are incorruptible; you, the agent and attorney of this corporation, the obsequious follower of executive power; you, hoping for promotion from the executive branch of the Government, shall have power over these representatives of States; you may disfranchise a State; you may paralyze the Congress; there is no danger in intrusting these great powers to you over Senators and members of Congress. For you the provision of the Constitution that members of Congress shall be privileged from arrest in their attendance upon and in going to and returning from Congress except for treason, felony, or breach of the peace, shall be of no force or effect. The practice of law before your court by a Senator or member of Congress in a case where a land-grant railroad company is a party is such a danger to the country that the Constitution must be subverted to punish it."

The Senate and the House of Representatives are so much corrupted that although they have ample power to prevent it they will not use it, and they must be subjected to the power of your immaculate purity.

Mr. President, what answer to that proposition is it for the Senator from Maryland to say that jurisdiction attaches criminally to members of Congress for penal offenses? Unquestionably, but by what laws does it attach? In the States they are citizens of the States. For criminal conduct they are amenable to the jurisdiction of their own States for the offenses there committed. When you come here in the District of Columbia for acts of crime, for acts of murder, for homicide, for violence, for robbery, for felonies as known to the old law whether State or Federal laws, the word signifies certain acts, of which practicing law in land-grant railroad cases is not one, they are properly amenable. But who ever heard before that the men upon the performance of whose duties the whole life of the Republic is dependent shall be while in the performance of these duties within the power of another department of the Government as to their personal security for acts which are not felonies nor treason nor breaches of the peace, but which are made by the act of the Legislature, and which are not in themselves crimes?

The vice of this legislation is this, that it concerns the performance of our official duties here, that it enables a court to disfranchise a State and paralyze its vote in this Chamber; that it removes a Senator from the security of a trial in his own State, under the jurisdiction of the laws of his State, and subjects him to arrest and trial in a forum here in the District of Columbia while in attendance on Congress for the manner in which he shall perform his public duties as a Senator or Member of Congress.

I should like these gentlemen to answer that proposition and to say how it is that a Senator coming here as the representative of a State with this body, having full power to require that he shall not be in any wise connected with anything improper, with anything that will affect the character of the legislation of this body, protected by the Government from arrest except for felony, treason, or breach of the peace—how it is wise or proper that, denying the right, the policy of leaving this body to purge itself of its improper members, we shall create a forum outside, and make the performance of its duty, the manner of its performance, which is entirely within the power of this body to correct and control, a crime to be punished outside of the body, and punished in such a manner as to deprive a State of its representation in this body or in the House of Representatives?

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to make one observation in reply to the last remark of the Senator from Florida about trying Senators outside of the State which they represent as being subject to criminal jurisdiction in the District of Columbia. Under the bill a Senator would be tried and punished just like any other citizen of the United States in the district in which he violated the law or committed the crime. If he violates it in the State in which he lives, he will be triable there; if he violates it here, he will be triable here.

Mr. CALL. All I have to say in answer is that it is a drag-net, and that makes it that much worse. A Senator could be dragged anywhere upon a false charge, upon suborned testimony, upon hired witnesses, before a corrupt judge, anywhere and everywhere in the United States. It is bad enough when here in the District of Columbia, where it is supposed the most of his time would be spent, that if such an act occurred it would be tried here, but according to the Senator from Mississippi, a charge may be made anywhere in the United States, and you may by enough charges take every Senator outside of the Senate and paralyze its operations.

With an executive seeking to do it, with a powerful corporation seeking to do it, or a combination of them, it is possible that you might find judges enough to take all the Senators upon false charges, or enough of either House of Congress to paralyze the action of either body and to change its legislative and executive course. That is a possibility which this unnecessary legislation opens up, because if you say that this body is so corrupt that it will not pass a resolution purging itself of any member who will be guilty of improper practices, no matter what this body may think to be improper, they may extend it as far as they please—unless you say that this body, these seventy-six Senators from the people of all the States are so corrupt that they can not be trusted, unless you say that the Government is a failure and the people can not be trusted to select men who when they come here will purge themselves, having power to do it, beyond the possibilty of corrupt influences, then your legislation is unnecessary and you open to us the possibility that it may be used in the interests of great concentrated power to destroy the power of the people. This is the argument and these the facts which the advocates of this bill must answer and disprove, and not content themselves with proving certain acts to be improper and hurtful to the public interest.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to make another observation in reply to my friend from Florida. He complains, in the last remarks he made to the Senate, that the bill subjects Senators to combinations of these powerful corporations, who will use their immense power for the purpose of persecuting them and trumping up false charges against them, and all that sort of thing.

Mr. CALL. Who may do it?

Mr. GEORGE. I do not think that the corporations will use their power for the purpose of inflicting wrong upon those who receive fees from them. They are not apt to abuse their power in that way.

I wish to make another observation, Mr. President, and I shall then sit down. The great burden of the Senator's argument is that there are corrupt judges of the Federal courts; that there are improper jurors summoned before and organized in the Federal courts; and that this bill subjects Senators and Representatives in Congress to be tried before those judges and jurors. I do not know whether there are any corrupt judges of United States courts or not; but if there be, they have jurisdiction over the people of the United States; they try citizens for their estates and they try them for their lives and for their liberties; and if we allow, under our Constitution and laws, those judges, corrupt though they may be, as the Senator suggests, to try the honest average common citizen of this country in all which pertains to his property, to his life and his liberty, I do not see what great crime is committed if the Senators in this body and the Representatives in the other House, who are but the mere servants of these people, should be tried in the same tribunals before which the people are tried.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DOLPH in the chair). Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I desire to ask what right of trial by jury you have anywhere except in your State.

Mr. GEORGE. Is that the question?

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Yes, sir; if you can give me an answer to that question I will be obliged.

Mr. GEORGE. I will. So far as the Federal courts are concerned we have a constitutional guarantee that in all common-law trials where the amount involved is over $20 there shall be a trial by jury. We have another provision in the Constitution of the United States that all crimes shall be triable by a jury after indictment by a grand jury.

Mr. CALL. My friend from Mississippi, like all the advocates of this bill, even with his very distinguished ability will never meet the argument that is made but he will meet some other argument that is in some way, directly or remotely, related to it. I did not say that the judges of the United States courts or the judges of the District of Columbia or anywhere else were more corrupt in one place than another, or that they are corrupt. I said there are more judges who are subject to those influences which would make legislation improper or the discharge of their judicial duty improper than there are Senators or Representatives. But his proposition is that because the people of the United States are subject in their lives and property to be tried by those juries, therefore we ought to be, as we are, for crime committed, for we all stand in the same position in that respect, and nobody has suggested the contrary. We are all amenable for felonies, but the proposition he makes is that because that is so a new crime shall be created.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. May I ask the Senator from Florida a question? Do you say you are amenable for a felony to any other law than that which prevails in the State?

Mr. CALL. I am not discussing that proposition now. I am discussing another proposition.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I ask the Senator from Florida whether he means to argue—and there comes in the whole point in this case——

Mr. CALL. I will give way to my friend from Virginia very soon. I am discussing another proposition now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the Senator from Florida declines to yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. CALL. I am willing to yield, but I shall be through in a moment.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. The Senator declines to yield to a question as to what he calls States' rights, and yet he stands up for States' rights.

Mr. CALL. I have no doubt I agree with my friend; but I am now discussing the proposition of my friend from Mississippi. His proposition, that because we are all of the people and nothing but the people, subject to trial before the courts of the United States for crimes committed according to the limitations of the Constitution in the district where they are committed, therefore a new crime relating to our duties here, which we are competent and better competent to punish than anybody else, shall be made and committed to them, is not an answer to the argument. It has nothing to do with it.

The fault in the argument is that the crime, in respect to the manner in which we discharge our duties, made so by statute, is a violation of that public policy in our own organic law which exempts a member of Congress from criminal prosecution for any other than actual felonies, not concerning that which the Constitution has provided a remedy for, namely, the performance of our duties here, our conduct in this body in respect to legislation committed to us.

In the first place, the argument is faulty in that it loses sight of the fact that no law should be made when there is no necessity for it; that is, when there is an adequate remedy to punish it elsewhere, when there is a better forum created for the purpose, and a constitutional forum. The objection to this proposed legislation is that we are competent to purge this body of every improper influence, and that it is confided to us to do it, and in respect to that no law should place the power outside. If it be expedient to punish a man beyond expulsion from this body, then that ought to be done somewhere else than in the District of Columbia; it ought to be done somewhere else than by giving power unnecessarily to convict a member for that which he does here in the course of the performance of his duties. That, I take it, is the argument which the Senator will not be able to answer.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, the Senator claims that under the Constitution this body is competent to expel for improper conduct. That may be true; but that is only part of the question in this bill. The question is this: Whether we may not declare by law that to be improper which before has not been considered improper, and when we so declare, then it comes under the general principles of jurisprudence, under the general principles of the Constitution, and although it may be a new offense, it comes exactly within the rules which govern old offenses.

The Senator seems to be horrified at the idea that we were going to make a new offense, subjecting the members of this body to a new crime not before existing. That is exactly what we do with reference to the people of the United States everywhere at every session of Congress. We make new offenses, we denounce new penalties, we provide for new punishments at every session of Congress for acts which were before innocent in themselves, or, at least, not against the law.

At last the great trouble with my friend from Florida—for he repeated it again in the very last sentence when he was up last time—is that he seems to claim that we are depriving Senators of the natural and rightful jurisdiction of the courts in the States in which they live, and subjecting them to a jurisdiction in the District of Columbia. The answer to that is found in the Constitution of the United States, and must have been very well known to my friend if he had taken the trouble to have read it and to have remembered it. We can not confer, if we tried to confer, upon any court sitting in the District of Columbia jurisdiction over a crime committed outside of it. The venue of all crimes, the jurisdiction of courts over them, is fixed unalterably by the Constitution of the United States, so that if a Senator commits a crime within the District of Columbia he must be tried there, because nowhere else in this broad land is there any jurisdiction to try him; and if he commits a crime in the State in which he lives, he must be tried there for the same reason; and if he commits it in any other State he must be tried there for the same reason. That is the full answer to all the objections urged by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. CALL. The Senator from Mississippi says that I was making an objection to this bill that it creates a new offense. I might have used that language perhaps, but I think in the course of my remarks it was shown that there was some thought in what I said, and not a mere idle use of language. It would be a great folly to aver as against any law creating a crime for the first time that it was new. I do not do it. New laws, new offenses, must be developed in the course of things. It would be equal folly in me to have said by this act it was sought to create a jurisdiction outside the Constitution of the United States, and transfer the power to indict and punish for this offense to some locality denied by the Constitution.

What I meant to say was, that in the ordinary course of things, in the great majority of cases according to natural probabilities, a Senator or a member of Congress would be, within his own State, subject to the jurisdiction of its laws, and coming here in the performance of his official duty he would naturally and probably be here at the time when the offense would be committed, and the inquiry, the charge would be made here in the District of Columbia. Of course the locality for the trial of the offense would have to be where the proof showed the offense to be committed, and this would be the place where it would, in the majority of cases, be committed.

But we are talking of a policy which will subject a man to false charges; we are talking about a law which is open to the objection that possibilities may come in which power will use this machinery to destroy the independence of the legislative body, which is the great sovereign protector of the people of this country. We are speaking of a law which even if by possibility it may be used to destroy the independence of the legislature, is for that reason objectionable. We are speaking of a law which is shown to be unnecessary as respects the exercise of powers of legislation in a manner which may have these hurtful effects; unnecessary because of the acts sought to be punished and prevented. A full and complete remedy is already provided, one which is not open to these objections.

The argument is that the independence, the integrity, the freedom from arrest of the members of this great legislative body is absolutely essential to the life of this people's Government, and that when you unnecessarily create offenses, not whether they are new or whether they are old, but when you unnecessarily create them and give jurisdiction to inquire as to the manner in which legislative duties are performed here to an extraneous power, corrupt or incorrupt, you impair the independence of this body, you render possible that great centralization of power. It does not matter what, I do not say what the corporations will do or what the Executive will do, but I do say that in a Government of sixty millions of people, with its vast revenues, with the immense temptations to the abuse of power, to put the independence of this legislative body unnecessarily in the charge of the Executive or judge, is a fatal blow at the security of the people of the country and at its Constitution.

This bill authorizing every justice of the peace in the District of Columbia, every judge, bad or good, corrupt or incorrupt, to inquire whether the Senator from Mississippi is or has been the attorney of a railroad corporation and to threaten him with imprisonment upon such testimony as bad motives may bring out for that purpose, and to select twelve men, good or bad, to try him, is as a public policy utterly violative of the Constitution of the United States and the great policy contained in the organic law of security, except for felony, treason, or breaches of the peace, from arrest.

Mr. BECK. Allow me to ask the Senator a question: Suppose a member of either House of Congress were to take a fee for practicing in the Court of Claims, what would happen?

Mr. CALL. I will tell you what happens. If it were I, the Legislature of the State of Florida would pass laws by which I could be prosecuted before this body and deprived of my office; and the question whether I should thereafter be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary is nothing considered in contrast with the security of the people of Florida and their representatives here.

Mr. BECK. I am asking what would happen under existing law.

Mr. CALL. I will answer that the same objection can be made to that existing law as is made to this.

Mr. BECK. Exactly.

Mr. CALL. It was improvident and unwise legislation. It was as subversive of the Government as this. It was the commencement of a system which is to destroy the independence of this legislative body and its members, and it was an assertion, and a false assertion, that the judge and the justice were more honest than the seventy-six men selected by the people of thirty-eight great States. It was a slander upon the Constitution and the American people.

Mr. BECK. Then I understand the Senator to assert that when a member of either House of Congress takes a bribe from a railroad corporation or anybody else for his vote, it is a slander on the people of Florida or the people of any other State that he should be tried and convicted for it.

Mr. CALL. No; I have not said that. The Senator from Florida says the assertion that the House of Representatives or the Senate of the United States would not purge itself of that man immediately was a slander, and I say that all that concerns legislation is that the bad man shall be gotten out of place. We are dealing with legislators and legislation, and not with men as citizens.

Mr. BECK. Now allow me a single word.

Mr. CALL. Certainly.

Mr. BECK. As early as December 14, 1853, when the law was passed prohibiting members of Congress from acting as attorneys in the Court of Claims, Mr. Stephens, of Georgia, in the course of his remarks——

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Eighteen hundred and fifty-three, was that?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There can but one Senator address the Chair at a time.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I ask pardon of the gentleman for interrupting, but the Government had existed sixty years before that act was passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The business of the Senate will proceed more regularly if, when a Senator desires to ask a question, he will wait until he finds whether the Senator who has the floor gives way, and then rise to his feet.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. But that was before I was born, seventeen years before, and I have a right to ask whether it was seventeen years before I was born.

Mr. BECK. Eighteen hundred and fifty-three was the date, and if it was seventeen years before the Senator was born he is not eligible to-day under the Constitution to a seat in this body. [Laughter.]

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I was born after the Senator from Kentucky came into the Senate Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia will suspend his remarks until the Senator from Kentucky concludes or gives way to him.

Mr. BECK. I do not desire to enter into any wrangle about this. In 1853, on December 14, Mr. Stephens, of Georgia, in arguing the question of whether members of Congress should be prohibited from practicing law before the Court of Claims, presented this case:

Now, Mr. Speaker, these facts are, that Mr. Corwin, while he was a Senator of the United States, was employed as an attorney before the board of commissioners—

That was the practice then—to adjudicate claims against Mexico in behalf of Gardiver, a claimant, and that he also took an interest by assignment in his claim. These facts are admitted.

And then he went on to argue that a law ought to be passed prohibiting that and other things, and Congress saw fit to pass that law.

Mr. CALL. I ask why could not each House have by its rules provided that no member of its body should practice law, either with or without compensation, before any Department or tribunal considering matters affecting the United States?

Mr. BECK. We have passed a law prohibiting it because the Galphin claim, the Gardiner claim, and others had got through, in order to remove a scandal that necessarily attached to men occupying inconsistent positions, representing the United States and representing a corporation or claimant dealing with the United States. All I sought in the bill I presented was to prevent men who were the representatives of the States and the people from being at the same time the attorneys of the corporations with whom we had important business relations.

Mr. CALL. I agree entirely with the Senator from Kentucky, but I may ask him to look at the constitutional power here to make rules prohibiting members doing that. Would not that be as effective as a law? Why transfer the power which is given us to prevent Mr. Corwin or anybody else practicing before a court against the United States, to an extraneous tribunal outside? Why create an unnecessary jurisdiction to do that which the law has already, and as I think for the wisest reasons of public policy which inhere in the very existence of this Republic, confided to each of the two Houses? We are not here to punish men outside in the performance of their duty. We are here to consider in this bill what instrumentalities will preserve the purity and disinterestedness of legislation in these two bodies. The Constitution says, by your own power, in yourselves, as the highest of all the sources of power in the country, except the people—by that power you shall keep your legislature pure in each House, neither House having control over the other, to the end that we may be perfectly independent.

Now, as respects the purity of legislation with that power here, why go outside to another power that does not come from the people and which is extraneous to the representation of the States here, and give it jurisdiction to deprive the States in this body of their representatives?

Mr. BECK. Now, if the Senator will allow me one word more, the right to expel a member of either House is not interfered with and no extraneous power is called into exercise by the bill I propose. The courts of the United States, forming one of the three co-ordinate branches of the Government, are simply required to try each individual offender whether he is a member of the House, a member of the Senate, a layman, or anything else, if he violates his known duty as prescribed by the body of which he is a member.

Mr. CALL. As interpreted by the judge.

Mr. BECK As interpreted by the judge, of course, because he is appointed for the purpose of interpreting the laws.

Mr. CALL. Now I will ask the Senator from Kentucky a question. I will ask him how far the judiciary is a co-ordinate tribunal when it has the power in respect to the powers of legislation here to arrest and take from the performance of their duties all the members of Congress upon a false charge?

Mr. BECK. I will answer that question by saying that we are all liable to false charges. Men may be charged with being guilty of murder, arson, rape, or any other offense known to the calendar. There is no way of avoiding false accusations; but that the courts of the country must finally determine the guilt or innocence of any man who is charged with any crime I hope no man will dispute. These matters have to be determined, when they come up, on their merits.

I hope the Senator will not contend that because a man is a member of the House of Representatives or a member of the Senate he has a right to take a bribe and put money in his pocket for his vote, that he has a right to burn the house of his fellow-citizen, or commit any of the offenses which have been prohibited, without being subject to the punishment that every other citizen is liable to.

Mr. CALL. The Senator from Kentucky will readily find himself answered in respect to the Government, whose powers our Constitution has disposed of and separated, making all the departments strictly co-ordinate. You can not have a co-ordinate government if you give one department power over the others.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senate and House of Representatives have the power to impeach the judges.

Mr. CALL. That is because, as I said, they are co-ordinate simply to this extent, that the legislative power of the people is in the legislature, in the two Houses of Congress, who are paramount to a certain extent over the executive and the judicial departments. But you propose to destroy that co-ordination, and to subject this sovereign power of the people to a power which has been subordinated, subjected in these respects to us.

That is just where I complain of your bill, that the people are here, and if this body has any right or any power it is as the representatives of the people, and you are subordinating it to the possible creatures of corporation or executive power not amenable to the people, and doing it in the interest of purifying legislators, the servants of the people, in their highest form of power.

Mr. BECK. Now, if the Senator will allow me one word more I shall be done.

The Constitution of the United States provides that no man shall be a Senator unless he is thirty years of age, nine years a citizen of the United States, and an inhabitant of the State from which he is chosen. That is the only limitation on the right of selection. Beyond that he is responsible and ought to be responsible to the law for every offense that he as an individual man may commit. If he is guilty of murder, guilty of arson, guilty of any offense known to the law that other men are punished for, he ought to be punished like other men; and if we make it an offense that he shall be the attorney for great railroad companies to whom we have given land grants or subsidies in the form of money, while he is sitting here as a representative of the people, and he persists in occupying both relations—if we make a law to punish him if he does that, he ought to be no more exempt from that law than he ought to be exempt from the law against murder, robbery, arson, or any other criminal offense.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, the Senator from Kentucky does not state the bill. That is not it. Nobody claims that he shall be exempt from prosecution and trial for any offense. The Senator's bill does not deal with citizens; the Senator's bill deals with Senators and Members of the House in the discharge of their Senatorial duties here. It is a bill to purify legislation in this and the other House respecting Senators and declaring an offense to be committed by Senators and by Congressmen in the discharge of their Senatorial and public duties. To be either a Senator or Member of Congress is the necessary ingredient of the offense.

If you want to punish a citizen for taking a bribe, everybody is amenable to that. If you want to punish a citizen for murder, every Senator here is amenable to it. He is a citizen, he is a resident, he is subject to the jurisdiction of your laws. But that is not what you are doing here. What you are doing is to give to a judge, a subordinate power to these servants of the people in some respects, power to control the sovereign people in their legislation here, and you prescribe that their servants, sent here by virtue of being their servants, shall be punished for an offense which otherwise is not an offense and for which, if an offense, you have a perfect remedy in yourselves.

Mr. BECK. Now, Mr. President, one word more. How can a private citizen, not intrusted with public authority, take a bribe for performing a public duty when he has no public function? The Senator says he will not punish Senators, because of the public duty they perform, for taking fees on both sides—a salary from the people and a fee from the railroad corporation when a railroad case is up. Why is not one as bad as the other?

Mr. CALL. I will tell you why. It is because the taking of the bribe is in the performance of an official duty.

Mr. BECK. And is by a Senator or Representative in Congress and not by a private citizen.

Mr. CALL. If you undertake to say that a member of Congress shall not be a lawyer——

Mr. BECK. Oh, no.

Mr. CALL. I suppose you do not want to say that; but if you did want to say that and have a law punishing that——

Mr. BECK. The Judiciary Committee proposes to say that; I do not.

Mr. CALL. Then the inquiry arises at once, what is the object of that law? What is the offense that a member of Congress shall be restrained by the judgment of an extraneous power as to what he shall do, and what shall be the judgment of the judiciary as to whether he should be punished or not? It has no force if it does not relate to purifying this body.

But, Mr. President, I go further. What is the Constitution of the United States? Let us see; and let us see how utterly this bill is a violation of it. The Constitution of the United States prescribes certain enumerated grants of power. It prescribes them by enumeration—tells what they are. It leaves other matters to the domain of State legislation, under the supposition that the member of Congress will be subject to the jurisdiction of his State, and that while here he will be subject to the jurisdiction of the body to which he belongs. It leaves without any declaration of crime or offense his conduct in respect of his public duty in these bodies. Nowhere will you find one word or line in the letter of the Constitution indicating two authorities or a power conferred upon the Federal Government to punish as a crime the conduct of men in the performance of their legislative duties here; but you find the exclusion of it. You can draw it from the general declaration as to the acts which Congress has power to make a crime.

But I again call the Senator's attention to the proposition that those who oppose this bill are willing to vote the most stringent rule this body can provide to prohibit any man here from having any interest in or connection whatever with, the prosecution of any cause anywhere, in any court or any tribunal, against the United States; but it is as to the instrumentality which this bill provides, which is a declaration that this body can not be trusted to preserve the purity of its own members, that I especially object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] to strike out a portion of the amendment reported by the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. EVARTS. Let the amendment to the amendment be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the proposed amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary, in line 11, after the word "Congress," it is proposed to strike out all down to and including the words "act of Congress," at the end of line 27 of section 1, and also section 2, as follows:

Or from or against any bank or corporation, or other officer or agent thereof, which obtained its charter or any pecuniary aid from the United States; or from or against any corporation or company, its officer or agent, engaged in the business of interstate commerce by land or water, or in the business of any interstate transportation, or in the transportation of United States mails; or from or against any corporation, company, firm, or person, or officer or agent thereof, engaged in the production, manufacture, or sale in the United States, or in the business of importing into the United States from any foreign country, any article whatsoever upon the importation of which any customs duty is now levied, or shall at any time hereafter be levied; or from or against any manufacturer of any article on which an excise-tax is now levied, or shall at any time hereafter be levied by any act of Congress.

SEC. 2. That any person who violates the provisions of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and may be punished by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by fine not exceeding $500, or by both, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the gentleman who prepared this bill is an experienced legislator and an able lawyer, and he knew precisely what he was putting into his bill, and what would meet the case of public necessity that I suppose rested in his mind to justify a resort to criminal law to correct some abuses or evils. I say the necessity that rested in the mind of the Senator, for I must say that after having been ten years in this body I have never suspected any member of the Senate of having been corruptly or improperly engaged in casting his vote for the United States or against the United States in any matter whatever.

No bill of particulars, no specification of the facts which show a public necessity for the public criminal law we are asked to enact here, has been stated; and I think it is due to the Senate of the United State before it shall act upon a matter of this kind, of this grave importance, that somebody should arise on the floor of the Senate and specify that at least some Senator had been guilty of some conduct of a character that was not reached by law in the present state of the law, which required that our criminal laws should be amended by the introduction of this statute into them for its punishment. But nothing of that kind seems to have occurred; at all events it has not been named.

If it could be shown here that some Senator had cast a corrupt vote for a land-grant railroad corporation there would be no difficulty in the exercise of the conceded constitutional right of the Senate to expel him from this body, for that right is expressly found in the Constitution, two-thirds of the Senate concurring therein. If there was anything more than an outside suspicion to agitate the mind of this body to make an inquiry and an enactment of this kind based upon that inquiry it ought to be stated, so that the Senate would have a chance to expurgate itself by the ordinary methods known to parliamentary bodies, by the method secured in the Constitution of the United States, and not by going outside of this body and asking a court of justice in the District of Columbia, or wherever it may be, to impose penalties upon that Senator, penalties which may be exactly contrary to his duties in this body.

The learned Senator who prepared this bill went further, and he declared that the act which is denounced in this proposed statute is a misdemeanor, not a felony. If he had declared that it was a felony, he could not have made anybody believe that it was a felony at common law, for it has been conceded on all hands that the offense is entirely new, and if we should attach to it a punishment by imprisonment in the penitentiary it would not make it a felony within the meaning of the Constitution of the United States.

I will suppose a case, if this law is passed, for the purpose of testing its practical value. Some Senator before leaving home accepts a fee and goes before a court in some matter or other in which a land-grant railroad is concerned. He leaves his home unindicted by any law of Alabama. He comes here. If the Federal court in Alabama should see proper to formulate an indictment against him through the agency of a grand jury or on information, as the case may be, it could not send here and arrest him while Congress was in session and take him home for trial, for the Constitution expressly says that the members of the two Houses shall be exempt from arrest except for breaches of the peace and felonies—that means felonies known at common law—while they are traveling to or attending upon Congress, or returning home, after they have been here in the discharge of this public duty.

Now, suppose the offense is committed in the Supreme Court of the United States and you desire to get hold of this Senator who has gone into that body and filed a brief or made an argument in a land-grant railroad case—it does not make any difference what kind of a case it is—how are you going to make your statute work? Here he is in this body or in the other House exempt from arrest except for a breach of the peace or a felony, and this act calls it a misdemeanor. I am surprised that when the Senator from Kentucky felt that he was wrestling with this giant outrage against decency and law and order in this country, it never occurred to him to write down this grave offense as of a higher grade than misdemeanor. It looks as if this bill had been gotten up in a hurry. It looks more as if it were born of heat and indignation, or perhaps the pressure of public clamor, than the deliberate act of a great lawyer to prescribe against these men in these two Houses an offense and call it a misdemeanor, when the Senator from Kentucky, who knows the Constitution so well, perfectly understood that no man could ever be arrested in the District of Columbia while he was here attending as a Senator or member of the House and put upon his trial.

Mr. BECK. Now, will the Senator from Alabama point out anything in the bill that I presented which indicates that it authorizes arrests in the District of Columbia that were not authorized before?

Mr. MORGAN. Then, if it does not authorize arrest here, where will it authorize arrest?

Mr. BECK. The Senator has argued for fifteen minutes that it was going outside of the constitutional limitation to authorize arrests not previously authorized.

Mr. MORGAN. Not by any means. I am arguing that the Senator from Kentucky brought in a bill here that can not be executed if put in the form of a law, and therefore I argue that the Senator's bill is a response to mere clamor, and not the result of the deliberation of his own cool, quiet, and able mind.

He calls the act denounced a misdemeanor; and yet, if any lawyer of this body should go into the Supreme Court of the United States and argue a cause there in favor of a land-grant railroad company, that lawyer could not be arrested during all the time he spent in Washington city, or while he was coming here, or going away from the city. It is a mere tub to the whale. It is something that can not be carried into practice, after you have put it on the statute-book.

Mr. CALL. Will the Senator allow me to remind him that he could not be arrested at home?

Mr. MORGAN. Of course he could not. I was coming to that branch of the subject. The offense having been committed in the District of Columbia, you can not arrest him at home, unless you get up some treaty of extradition between the Government of the United States and the government of Alabama, it may be.

So, then, this bill, over which so much hue and cry has been made, is a bill that comes to point-no-point. It is a bill evidently intended to gratify the public clamor; not to reform the criminal laws of the United States. I do not want to legislate in that way. If there is any occasion here for calling Senators and Representatives to account in the courts of this country, let us have a bill that will do it; not one that pretends to do it, and has no possible chance of operating to do it.

Mr. BECK. Will the Senator allow me to ask what he thinks of the bill so carefully prepared as a substitute by the distinguished Committee on the Judiciary? Does he think they have improved the original bill by their deliberations?

Mr. MORGAN. I am not on the Judiciary Committee, and therefore not responsible for a word of the committee's amendment. I can see that the Judiciary Committee, following the same vein of power, has fallen into the same mistake and reached the same impotent result as the Senator from Kentucky has reached in his bill, if he reaches any at all. I am arguing against the original bill, and not upon the amendment. I want to make an analysis of this bill as expressed by a great lawyer and brought here, and see what it means; what public evil it is going to correct. I will call attention to the language of it a little more:

That it shall be unlawful for any member of either House of Congress to accept employment as attorney-at-law, or payment for services of any kind, from any railroad company, or any officer or agent thereof, which obtained its charter, or any grant of lands, or pecuniary aid from the United States.

A man who is the officer or agent of a land-grant railroad company under this bill could not employ the Senator from Kentucky to defend him for his life. If he was an agent of the company, a ticket agent or what not, he could not employ the Senator from Kentucky to assist him in putting a mortgage on his property or to try title to any species of personal property at all. If the man is tainted with being an agent or officer of or in any way connected with a land-grant railroad company he is so far under the ban of the law as it is proposed to enact it that he is not entitled to the services of a lawyer in any case of that kind where the lawyer happens to be a member of the Senate or House of Representatives. I will read it again:

For services of any kind, from any railroad company, or any officer or agent thereof, which obtained its charter, or any grant of lands, or pecuniary aid from the United States.

I have read severe bills in my life, but I have never read one before that had the reach which this thing has or is intended to have. Before I came to the Senate I was employed by a land-grant railroad company. That railroad company had been obstructed just at the edge of a bridge by the putting of steel bars across the track where a bridge was at a span higher than this Capitol. Upon that railroad train was the very dearest friend I had in the world who was not related to me. He was an ex-judge of the supreme court of my State and had been formerly my partner. He with other men and women and children, in consequence of this obstruction, were thrown into that gulf and destroyed. That railroad company tendered compensation to all the sufferers who would receive it, and then did me the honor to employ me to prosecute the miscreants who had inflicted this evil upon this land-grant railroad company and my friend and former partner. I took the employment and succeeded after a very hard struggle, covering six months of time, in getting the evidence together and having those miscreants tried and convicted and carried into the penitentiary of the State for very long terms, some for life.

There was a case that would be covered by this bill. If it had occurred since I have been a Senator of the United States, the Senator from Kentucky would have forbidden me to go into that cause and prosecute those criminals, because the road that I was working for was a land-grant railroad. I can conceive of hardly anything more cruel than a law of that kind, and I am very glad to believe that the Congress of the United States has no power to impose any such restrictions upon me because I am a Senator of the United States.

Suppose I had made that engagement, and it was pending to-day with that railroad company, and those men were still untried, what would be the effect of this act upon my contract? To destroy it, of course, for this bill makes no exception in favor of existing employments; and it makes no difference what may be the motive of the lawyer, the Senator, or the member of the House who takes a fee, however charitable and good it may be, or however it may address itself to the desire of every man to preserve peace and order and law in the land—if I had that contract to-day to try that cause with that railroad company, and you pass this bill, and I should leave the Senate Chamber and go to try it, I would do it at the risk of incurring this enormous penalty, not exceeding $5,000 fine and imprisonment not more than one year, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It would not be a very large risk in a constitutional point of view.

Mr. MORGAN. Not much, and I am very glad to know that it is not a risk at all in a constitutional point of view, for although this law addresses itself to the cutting up of contracts of that sort, it fails no more in affecting the validity of a contract such as I have mentioned than it fails in other particulars to destroy the rights of men who have the honor of practicing at the bar of this country.

I value my honors as a Senator of the United States, but I do not put them above the honors that I have enjoyed at the hands of the courts of this country from its highest Supreme Court down to its lowest. Neither do I put them above the honor of association with that splendid body of men, the lawyers of this land, who have controlled its destiny in respect of the preservation of human liberty from the time this Government was ordained and for many and many ages before in the history of the Anglo-Saxon race.

What honors a man wins at the bar in controversy with his brethren of the bar are not conferred upon him by the favoritism of his friends. He wins every inch that he gains of reputation at the bar, under the criticism of a great body of lawyers and judges, with the world looking in upon his conduct, and his talents, and his learning, and his abilities, and well may he prize as the chief crown-jewel of the noblest life that can be led the approbation of the country which places him in a distinguished and honored position in the grand profession of the law. I have no taunts and jeers to fling at that body of men, for I would know that should I do such a thing the sentiment of the present age, and all ages to come, as well as those which have preceded us, would fall back upon me and crush me with the disgrace I sought to inflict upon the cloth.

No, sir, I am not ashamed to be a lawyer. I am proud of my position as a lawyer; and if I have a reasonably good reputation among that distinguished and glorious band of men, I have nothing to which I can point in life that I esteem to be so creditable to myself. If in my conduct I pass muster with the bar of the United States as a man of worth and a gentleman, I need not fear the criticisms that may come from the mob or from any interested source whatever; I am safe, panoplied in their good opinion, against the touch of any malicious hand or tongue in this world.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] evidently forgot the glory which belonged to his State when Garland made his way into the capital city of the United States, disbarred of his privileges as an attorney. He came the pioneer of the old liberty which had been covered up in the débris of the great conflict of the civil war, and addressed himself before the bar of the Supreme Court, and asked the question whether or not the laws that disbarred him were constitutional. The Supreme Court took that important question, which was really the very first dawn of light upon the South after the war was over; they considered it; they weighed it; and they put words of gold into their opinion in respect of what belongs to a lawyer who has been admitted to a bar, not by an act of a legislature or a Congress, but by the judgment of a court. The man who holds a license to practice law in the Supreme Court of the United States, or any other court, by the judgment of that court holds a right of property of which nobody can deprive him except the court itself. No other co-ordinate tribunal of equal jurisdiction perhaps could do it. If any tribunal could do it outside of the one that granted the license, it would be such a one; but no legislature can repeal a lawyer's license to practice law, no legislature can disbar him; Congress can not do it; no legislative power, and no executive power can do it.

To prove that I am correct about this, I will read you the foundation of Garland's right to practice law to show you that it did not rest upon the consent of Congress or anybody else except the Supreme Court of the United States. The opinion in this case was delivered by Mr. Justice Field:

> The profession of an attorney and counselor is not like an office created by an act of Congress, which depends for its continuance, its powers, and its emoluments upon the will of its creator, and the possession of which may be burdened with any conditions not prohibited by the Constitution. Attorneys and counselors are not officers of the United States; they are not elected or appointed in the manner prescribed by the Constitution for the election and appointment of such officers. They are officers of the court admitted as such by its order, upon evidence of their possessing sufficient legal learning and fair private character. It has been the general practice of this country to obtain this evidence by an examination of the parties. In this court the fact of the admission of such officers in the highest court of the States to which they respectively belong, for three years preceding their application, is regarded as sufficient evidence of the possession of the requisite legal learning, and the statement of counsel moving their admission sufficient evidence that their private and professional character is fair.
> The order of admission is the judgment of the court that the parties possess the requisite qualifications as attorneys and counselors, and are entitled to appear as such and conduct causes therein. From its entry the parties become officers of the court, and are responsible to it for professional misconduct. They hold their office during good behavior, and can only be deprived of it for misconduct ascertained and declared by the judgment of the court after opportunity to be heard has been afforded. Their admission or their exclusion is not the exercise of a mere ministerial power. It is the exercise of judicial power, and has been so held in numerous cases. It was so held by the court of appeals of New York in the matter of the application of Cooper for admission. "Attorneys and counselors," said the court, "are not only officers of the court, but officers whose duties relate almost exclusively to proceedings of a judicial nature. And hence their appointment may, with propriety, be intrusted to the courts, and the latter in performing this duty may very justly be considered as engaged in the exercise of their appropriate judicial functions."

And so the court goes on to argue the case still further.

Mr. BECK. What has that to do with this bill?

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator from Kentucky asks what that has got to do with it. I will answer the Senator, for it will give a more conspicuous point perhaps to the remarks I was about to make.

When the Senator from Kentucky received his license to practice in the Supreme Court of the United States he received a right equivalent to a right of property. The Senator never owned a tract of land in the blue-grass region of Kentucky, or a splended blood horse in which his heart may have been fully wrapped up, he never had any possession anywhere, even his beautiful possessions in the west of Washington, for which we sometimes vote taxes and the like—the Senator never had a possession in his life which was more sedately fixed and further beyond the reach of legislative enactment than his right to practice law in the Supreme Court of the United States, and his responsibility to that tribunal and only to that tribunal fixed by the law.

Mr. BECK. Now, Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BECK. I did ask what has that to do with it, and I did it for this reason: While my right to practice law is absolute and I have a right to take a fee from any client who thinks that I can present his case well, if I accept the position of a judge to decide a case between my client and some other contesting party and retain a fee from my original client, payable provided the case is won while I am acting as a judge, the law says I shall not be both judge and lawyer. I do not see that such a law is inconsistent with my right to practice law.

Mr. MORGAN. The fault in the Senator's argument is, that when he accepts the position of judge he gives up his position as a lawyer entirely.

Mr. BECK. So I do as a Senator.

Mr. MORGAN. Not by any means.

Mr. BECK. If this proposed law passes I do as to the cases which it covers.

Mr. MORGAN. Not by any means. Your proposed law is to operate upon you and me the moment it passes. If it did not what would be the use of passing it? Are we passing laws here for the purpose of keeping the Government of the United States from under the control of corrupt men hereafter to be elected? No, sir; if this measure means anything at all, it means that the men here now are corrupt and can not be trusted.

Hence it is that you put no word in your law to say that it shall have future application. You make it apply to me and to yourself and to every lawyer in this body from the present moment. Though I might have a case pending in court, and engagements of a most important character there in connection with land-grant railroads as clients, as pure as any act that ever characterized the conduct of a human being in the world, you cut that in two. If you do not cut it in two what does your proposed law mean? It can not possibly be contemplated that the generations of men hereafter to come in the United States intend to send a set of boodlers and swindlers into this body, but you mean to say they are here now and they must be denounced by the laws of the land, or else you do not mean anything.

I could go into the Supreme Court of the United States with my brief, if you please (I do not have any of them; I have not got them; I am very sorry I have not; I would be very much better off if I had them), and I could conduct myself just as decently and as honestly with a land-grant railroad company as my client as I could in the Senate of the United States. If I intended to do wrong your law on the statute-book could not keep me, or any other man who had half sense, from doing wrong, for after you put your law on the statute-book you have nothing to do but to step outside and make your contract and agreement a little dark and a little secret to cover it up; that is all. A man who will do a mean thing on the floor of the Senate of the United States will do it in the Supreme Court or anywhere else. He is a corrupt man and not to be trusted, and you can not put him in harness enough by the criminal laws of this country to make an honest or a decent man out of him. When you are manufacturing harness for the purpose of keeping a corrupt man in the right track in the Senate of the United States you are throwing away your work. Turn your man out, or let the people turn him out; purify your body in that way; but never take it for granted, if you find a thief or member offending in this body that you can make thongs enough and harness enough to hold him; he will beat you at it. When he finds he has a law in his way he will turn around and make a little secret contract and get out of your reach; that is all.

The reformers are doing a tremendous work in this country now, a wonderful work; they are at work everywhere, and I am glad that some persons who think reformation is needed have at last commenced upon themselves, for I have always understood that the reformer who begins his work upon himself is most apt to have a good job of it when he gets through with his reformation.

I do not feel the need of it myself. I do not know who does, or whether anybody does; but instead of feeling that I ought to be reformed by this act of Congress, I feel a little resentful and indignant that anybody should suppose that it was necessary. I can not help it. I am just like all the rest of the gentlemen of the bar in this body.

The other day this body by a tremendous majority passed a bill in which it was said that these railroad companies, which are made the butt of this proposed act, were to be controlled, that you were putting a hook in the nose of behemoth and going to lead that marine animal, or beast, or whatever it is, around through the waves at your will and pleasure. I noticed then that there was a vote of 43 to 15. I think the railroads of this country were probably as much interested in the defeat of that bill as they have ever been interested in the defeat of any bill that came into this body; and I am afraid that the people themselves were as much or perhaps more interested in it than they have been interested in any bill that has been here for a long time. Forty-three votes were cast for it, and 15 against it. Out of the 43 votes cast for that bill 35 were the votes of lawyers. Out of the 15 votes cast against the bill only six were cast by lawyers. The rest were the votes of laymen, gentlemen engaged in manufactures, commerce, &c.

I plead that in answer to this bill, for I consider that this bill is an attack upon the reputation of this body. It originated here. It must have had some motive. It is connected with land-grant railroads, and no other kinds of railroads, and the connection of course, in the public mind, will be natural and necessary that the framers and promoters of this bill had found some scandalous evil in this body which it was necessary to correct by the enactment of a vigorous penal statute.

In the face of that vote let me appeal to the people of this country, to their generous honesty and magnanimity, and ask them the question, "Do you believe that the thirty-five lawyers who voted for that bill are men who can be corrupted by railroads, or do you believe that the six lawyers who voted against the bill are men who can be corrupted by railroads and have been corrupted by railroads? Is that your judgment?"

I shall not promote by anything I have to do or say, nor by my indifference nor my inattention to what is going on in this body, any unjust accusation against members of the bar who have been honored with seats in this great body. The people of the United States, if it were left to them to pass through this body and purge it, would not take the lawyers out of it. They put them here.

So far as I am concerned, sir, I have been a railroad lawyer for the most part of my professional life, and yet I have been twice sent to this august body. I can say what perhaps very few gentlemen can say: I never even mentioned to a member of the Legislature the fact that I was a candidate for the Senate on either occasion; not that I did not have conversations with them about it when they came to see me, but I can state in my place in the Senate, being a railroad lawyer, that I never spoke to a member of either house of the General Assembly of Alabama, on either occasion about my election, nor did I ask anybody else to do it. So the people of the State who sent me here understood whether I had made a sufficient character at the bar and among my fellow-citizens to be intrusted in this body with legislative power, notwithstanding it had been my fortune in the course of my practice to have had some important engagements for land-grant railroads. I dare say many Senators here have had much the same experience.

Until it was suggested by this bill I believe nobody in the United States had made an accusation against any gentleman in this body that because he had fees and retainers as a land-grant railroad lawyer, therefore he was not only not fit to be in the Senate of the United States, but if he persisted on carrying out his contracts and doing what his engagements required him to do as a lawyer, he ought to be fined and put in jail, snatched out of this body and beyond its power, carried to the dungeons of the country and there immured for the crime of having done that which the Supreme Court of the United States would never question him about.

Suppose after you have passed this measure I should take my brief into the Supreme Court of the United States for a land-grant railway and say to the court, "Before I proceed to argue this cause it is my duty to state to this court that my employment brings me with a client here that is a land-grant railway company, and the controversy between that railway company and the other party is with the United States Government. I controvert the constitutionality of a law by which the grant has been taken away from it and I am here to prosecute my case. In view of this statute, in view of the judgment of the court admitting me to practice at this bar, in view of what I have said about the character of the question in issue, as I am here to attack the validity of an act of Congress upon constitutional grounds by which this land-grant was broken down, I ask this honorable court before I proceed, am I in my line of duty or not? This act has been declared unlawful by the Congress of the United States and made penal and punishable. Am I in my duty or not?" They would say to me, "Sir, you are an American citizen; you are one of the counselors of this court, admitted to its bar by its judgment. That judgment has not been reversed; it stands as the guarantee of your right here to appear and to prosecute this plea. Do your duty to your client as a lawyer ought, and as lawyers often have to do, take the risk of your position. Proceed, sir; you are not out of order."

There is not a court in the United States that would disbar such a man or prevent him from appearing for a land-grant railroad case, even though the controversy were directly with the United States. When he could come and show that he had the judgment of that court of his right to appear, the court would never question him about the character of the case which he was proceeding in. It could not do it; for in the case of a thief, of a criminal of the deepest dye possible, even the anarchists now under condemnation of death in Chicago, against whom there is not merely a public impression of inexpressible guilt but a sentence of conviction and condemnation of the same, would a court, looking into that record when it was presented, ask the attorney who had the manhood and the intrepidity to stand there in defense of his client, "Do you dare to appear here in defense of a set of men who are under condemnation of the law, who have committed these great outrages against the people of Chicago?" No, sir; no judge who ever sat on the bench would put such a question. He would say, "Mr. Attorney, proceed to state to the court the grounds why you think a reversal of this cause ought to take place; why these parties are not guilty upon the evidence."

So it would be after you pass your law. No court would prevent you from standing up in that court and proceeding with your plea against the United States in favor of a land-grant railroad, because they would be obliged to say, "You have the right as a counselor of this court to argue this cause, and we can not see that we have a right to discriminate in respect of the class of causes in which you shall appear." That is precisely this act. Pass it and you do not control the court; you affect nobody. Pass it in the language in which it was brought in by the Senator from Kentucky and you can not even make an arrest under it.

Mr. PLATT. I desire to submit at this time a proposed amendment to the bill and ask that it may be printed.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment will be read, if there be no objection.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That it shall be unlawful for any member of either House of Congress to accept employment as an attorney-at-law, or receive compensation for services rendered in opposition to the interests of the United States in any suit, action, or other matter in the result of which the United States is directly or indirectly interested, or in respect to which any question is pending before Congress, or in respect to which such member has reasonable cause to believe legislation by Congress may be asked.

SEC. 2. That any person who violates the provisions of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and may be punished by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by a fine not exceeding $500, or by both, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. HOAR. Before having the question put upon the substitute reported from the committee, I desire to move an amendment to the text of the bill. I move to amend by striking out after the word "kind," in the fifth line, and by inserting the words beginning with the words "in opposition" in the printed matter which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 5 of the original bill, after the word "kind," strike out all down to and including the word "court," in line 11, in the following words:

From any railroad company, or any officer or agent thereof, which obtained its charter, or any grant of lands, or pecuniary aid from the United States; and any person who violates this provision shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction, be fined in any sum not exceeding $5,000, and imprisonment not more than one year, in the discretion of the court.

And insert in lieu thereof:

In opposition to the United States, in any case to which the United States may be a party, or in which its interests may be concerned, or from any railroad company which obtained its charter, or any grant of lands, or pecuniary aid from the United States, if such members shall have reasonable cause to believe that measures specially affecting the interests of such railroad are pending before Congress, or are about to be so pending during his term of office. Any person who violates the provisions of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and may be punished by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by a fine not exceeding $500, or by both, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I voted against this bill as it was originally proposed to the Senate, and I wish to state, in two or three minutes only, my reasons.

My relation to this subject is as absolutely impersonal as it can possibly be to any question which can come before the Senate. There are no land-grant railroads in Massachusetts, or in any of the States which border upon Massachusetts. It never has been, and it never will be likely to be my fortune to be employed or applied to for employment by that class of clients. I live in a city where there are five or six railroads converging, and it has of course happened to me occasionally to be employed by one or the other of those roads in times past, as it has a good deal more frequently to be employed against them.

The principle which lies at the bottom of this legislation is a question which affects the legislative policy not only in the National Legislature but in all the States. We do not make our legislators or members of Congress of monks. The theory of our Government, as of the English Government, from which we take most of our institutions, is that that is the best legislative body which contains the representatives of all the great interests of the country; that men are fitter to legislate who have by personal experience and the course of their lives that intimate knowledge which comes only from close interest of the things in which the people of the country or of the States they represent are interested. And it is especially the policy of this country, as of all free countries, to employ largely and chiefly in the framing of laws men whose life has been devoted to the study and to the administration of law.

As has been said so eloquently by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], the liberties of the Anglo-Saxon race in this country and in England have been won and vindicated and maintained through law, and through the instrumentality of men who are trained to administer law in the courts. Of about forty signers of the Declaration of Independence in this country over thirty were lawyers; of about the same number of men who framed the Constitution of the United States thirty-three, I think, had been practicing lawyers in their several States; and the great names, at the mention of which the heart of the American people is stirred, would nearly all disappear from our historical roll if the names of the great lawyers of the country were stricken from it.

I suppose also it is true that no reasonable man expects that men who come to this body or to the State legislative bodies will at once and forever abandon all the lucrative occupations and employments of life. The salary which we receive is not graduated by any such principle. It may be that a decent and moderate and frugal living can be had upon the salary which we provide for ourselves, and which the people of the country leave to us to fix for ourselves. But that is not all that we have a right to expect. Men expect to be able to leave something to their children; to make a provision for their old age. It is not to be demanded of a man who accepts the place of Senator or Representative that he shall condemn his wife and children to step down from the condition in life to which they have been accustomed. We have a right to do our share in the charities of the community to which we belong; and we are expected, more than any other class of men, as the experience of every one here shows, to contribute our full share. We have a right, and are expected to take a lead, not merely by labor and by influence, but by contributions, in building up those thousand institutions of education, of charity, of ornament to the public which are built up by governments in other lands, but which it is the pride and glory of the American people are due to private charity and contribution and effort here. Twelve years ago the statistics of the Commissioner of Education showed that for educational purposes alone in this country there had been, I think, more than $11,000,000 contributed in a single year by private contribution. Is the member of Congress to condemn himself never to take a part or do a share in the things which all other good citizens so delight to do for the benefit of their generation and their race?

Mr. President, if that be true, you can not look in any single direction of employment or occupation from which the State or national legislator ought not to be excluded if the principle and the policy of this bill is to prevail. In my Commonwealth there are $290,000,000, according to the statistics published a week or two ago, owned in the savings-banks. The question of the taxation of those banks is an important one always, and their administration and their management. Is it to be prohibited to a member of the Massachusetts Legislature or to a member of Congress, which has had to deal with the same subject within recent years, to be counsel for a savings-bank? Here is the whole national-banking system coming constantly before this body; there is the question of the taxation of the banks. Does the Senator from Kentucky propose to exclude every member of Congress from the opportunity to give advice as counsel to a national banking corporation in his State? Here are the great manufacturing interests. Must every manufacturer in the United States lay down his occupation so long as he remains in Congress, from the fear that he will be charged with bias when he comes to perform the duty of dealing with the tariff or the tax on the manufacture of tobacco? Here is the commerce of the country. Are men engaged in the commerce of the country to be excluded also from legislation?

Mr. BECK. Does the Senator understand that I propose that?

Mr. HOAR. I say that the policy, the principle, the ground on which this bill proceeds, involves by its effect logically that result. That is my argument.

Mr. BECK. Now, to carry that into practical effect would result from the wisdom of the Judiciary Committee, to which I object.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator was not listening to what I said or he would not have made the interruption. Senators who did me the honor to listen understood the proposition.

What I say is this: That unless our National Legislature is to be made up of monks, or men condemned to withdraw themselves from all the occupations and employments of life, it is impossible that the principle on which this bill rests can be carried into practice. It applies equally to the same lines in the States; it applies equally to men engaged in manufactures; it applies equally to men engaged in commerce; it applies equally to the national bankers of the country. Whenever one of those vast interests comes before us for regulation, or for legislation, the man who has been engaged as counsel for any of the persons connected with any of these institutions, and the man whose own business is connected with any of those interests of manufacture or commerce has the same bias and a still larger bias than that which rests upon the mind of a counsel who happens to be employed for a particular class of railroads.

Why, Mr. President, one thing infinitely stronger in principle than that of this bill is the regulation of real estate in the District of Columbia. Here is this little ten-mile square District in which Congress, by the voluntary act of our legislature, relieves the holders of real estate altogether from one-half their tax. We lay out the roads; we pave the streets; we bring in the water; we regulate the gas, and the sewers, and the sidewalks on which these values depend. If any one thing ought, on the principle of this bill, to be punished, and to condemn a man to be sent to the State prison, it would be the holding of real estate within the limits of the District of Columbia; but nobody has ever yet thought of prohibiting that to the members of the Senate or the House of Representatives.

Mr. President, the one thing that we can do is exactly what my amendment proposes; and that is, where there is a personal interest distinct from that of the general public, to prohibit by the general parliamentary rule the Senator so interested from voting on the particular question; and where there is an interest so constant, so weighty, like that of being at the time the employed counsel of a particular client, to exclude his dealing with a question in which that client is concerned, and to leave the rest to the sense of propriety of the individual Senator and his regard for public opinion. There is not a suggestion that any member of either House of Congress at this moment anywhere is likely to undertake, ever has undertaken, ever will undertake an obligation which will be in violation of his duty or will put him under a condition of bias in regard to his legislative duty.

This bill is aimed wholly at a non-existent state of things, a state of things not existing and not likely to exist, and I object to it. I think it is an affront to the Senate of the United States and to the House of Representatives of the United States to pass a law which implies that there is a public evil of this kind which, if it exists, dishonors the individual Senator and dishonors the body to which that Senator belongs.

The Senator from Kentucky quoted the other day certain legislation on our statute-book prohibiting the bribery of voters and the other offenses which are the great temptation of legislation and political life. Unquestionably those legislative provisions are entirely proper, but what would be thought of it if some Senator should get up here and introduce a bill setting forth that if any Senator of the United States should pick the pocket of another Senator he should be sent to the penitentiary? The answer would be that you leave those things to the regulation of the general law of the land, and that the picking out, the singling out for infamous punishment members of the highest legislative body in the world is of itself an affront. Supposing such legislation to be necessary is an affront not only to that body but to the people who elect them and the nation whom they represent.

Mr. President, I am willing to go as far as to provide, with a moderate penalty, that when a land-grant railroad has legislation before this body the Senator who passes on that legislation shall not at that time hold to that particular road the relation of counsel and client. I think that is entirely unnecessary; I think that may be left with absolute safety to the sense of propriety of the members of this body, and to public opinion, and to the expulsive power of the Senate; but the question has been mooted, and as there has got abroad in consequence of what has been said here a feeling that there may be some such instances as that, I am perfectly willing to join with the Senator from Connecticut in passing an amendment like his or one like that I have myself proposed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 8976) to incorporate the Washington Cable Railway Company of the District of Columbia, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

BENJAMIN OBEKIAH—VETO MESSAGE.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will lay before the Senate some executive messages, if the Senator from South Carolina will yield.

Mr. BUTLER. Certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 27, 1887.

To the Senate:

I hereby return without approval Senate bill No. 2173, entitled "An act granting a pension to Benjamin Obekiah."

This bill directs that the beneficiary named therein be placed upon the pension-roll subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

In July, 1886, the person named in this bill was placed upon the pension-roll at a rate determined upon by the Pension Bureau pursuant to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws; and it is entirely certain that the special act now presented to me would give the claimant no new rights or additional benefits.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the message will be printed and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

H. K. BELDING—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 27, 1887.

To the Senate:

I herewith return without approval Senate bill No. 127, entitled "An act for the relief of H. K. Belding."

This bill directs the sum of $1,566 to be paid to the said H. K. Belding "for carrying the mails of the United States between the years 1858 and 1862."

In April, 1858, a contract was awarded to the said Belding for carrying the mails from Brownsville, Minn., to Carimona, in the same State, a distance of 63 miles, and return three times a week, for the sum of $1,800 per annum, said service to begin on the 1st day of July, 1858, and to terminate on the 30th day of June, 1862. This contract contained a provision that the Post-Office Department might discontinue the service in whole or in part, allowing to the contractor one month's extra pay therefor.

On May 9, 1859, in consequence of a failure on the part of the Congress to make the necessary appropriation, a general reduction of mail service was ordered and the service under the contract with the claimant was reduced to two trips per week from May 10, 1859, instead of three as stipulated in the contract, and a deduction of one-third of the annual sum to be paid by the contract was made for such reduced service, and thereupon one month's extra pay was allowed and paid the contractor on account of said reduction.

It is conceded that payment was made in full according to the terms of the contract up to the 10th day of May, 1859, but it is claimed that notwithstanding the reduction of the service to two trips per week and the receipt by the contractor of one month's extra pay by reason thereof, he continued to perform the full service of three trips per week from the 10th day of May, 1859, to the 30th day of September, 1860, being seventeen months. Of the sum directed to be paid to him in the bill under consideration $850 is allowed him on account of this service, he having been paid for the period stated at the rate of $1,200 per annum. The contractor claims that this full service was performed after the reduction by the Post-Office Department because he had received an intimation from the Postmaster-General that if the full service was continued after such reduction there was no doubt that the Congress would at its next session make provision for the payment of the sum deducted.

Of course no legal claim in favor of the contractor can be predicated upon the facts which he alleges; and if he did continue full service under the circumstances stated, it must be conceded that his conduct was hardly in accordance with the rules which regulate transactions of this kind.

But a thorough search of the correspondence and records in the Post-Office Department fails to disclose any letter, document, or record giving the least support to the allegation that any such intimation or assurance as is claimed was given; nor is there the least evidence in the Department that the full service was actually performed. There is, however, on the files of the Department a letter from the claimant, dated August 25, 1860, containing the following statement: "When I received official information of the curtailing service, the reasons why, I wrote to the Department that I would, if allowed, continue service three times a week, and take certificates if I could be allowed to connect with La Crosse at pro rata rates. That letter was never answered, and I continued service three times a week till 3d of September following, then run twice a week."

Thus it appears that this contractor who in August, 1860, claimed that he continued full service upon the invitation of his own unanswered letter for less than four months, insists, twenty-seven years after the date of the alleged service, that he performed such service for seventeen months and up to October, 1860. Not only has he himself in this manner almost conclusively shown that the claim now made and allowed is exorbitant, but the evidence gives rise to a strong presumption that it is entirely fictitious.

The remainder of the amount allowed to the claimant in this bill is based upon an alleged performance by the contractor of the same mail service which has been referred to, from October 1, 1860, to February 14, 1861, a period of four months and fourteen days. Prior to October 1, 1860, the claimant's contract was annulled, and a new or more extended route established entirely covering that upon which he had carried the mails. Thereupon a month's extra pay was allowed to him, and new contractors undertook the service, and were paid therefor by the Government for the period covered by the claimant's alleged service. From the 14th day of February, 1861, Mr. Belding's contract with the Government was reinstated, but if he performed the service alleged during the period of four months and fourteen days immediately prior to that date it is quite clear that he did so under an arrangement with the new contractors and not under circumstances creating any legal or equitable claim against the Government.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. BUTLER. Now, Mr. President——

Mr. BLAIR. I wish to make a motion in regard to the veto message on the pension bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish to say with reference to it that the ground of that veto message——

Mr. BUTLER. I ask what right the Senator from New Hampshire has to take me off the floor without permission? If he asked my permission very likely he would get it.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not understand the position of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BUTLER. I object to the Senator's proceeding.

Mr. BLAIR. I inquire the ground of objection, and ask for order so that I can hear.

Mr. BUTLER. On the ground that I had the floor and the Senator from New Hampshire interposed without asking permission to proceed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina was recognized.

Mr. BLAIR. I did not understand any such statement by the Chair. I do not wish to trespass on any of the rights of the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask permission at this time to introduce a bill with a view of having it referred.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Pending that question the Senator from New Hampshire——

Mr. BLAIR. I desire to make a statement with reference to the veto message, which I move to have referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order has already been made.

Mr. BLAIR. I did not understand it so. I rose to make the motion, but nobody did make the motion that I am aware of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair, as is customary, when the message was read, said, "If there be no objection the message will be printed and referred to the Committee on Pensions." The order has been made. The Senator from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to do what?

Mr. BUTLER. To introduce a bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will receive it.

Mr. BUTLER introduced a bill (S. 3239) for the relief of the heirs of Thomas Black; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

BENJAMIN OBEKIAH—VETO MESSAGE.

Mr. BLAIR. I move to reconsider the vote by which the veto message in the Obekiah case was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is in order.

Mr. BLAIR. And on that motion I desire to be heard.

It will be observed that the ground of the veto of this pension bill is that some time in the month of July last, the bill being pending in Congress, the Pension Office allowed the claim, and that consequently as the claim has been allowed by the Pension Office there is no occasion for the passage of this bill, which very recently has been passed and has reached the Executive. This is the ground upon which several special acts that have been passed by Congress have been vetoed. I desire to say that these cases thus allowed by the Pension Office are cases which once have been disallowed by the Pension Office, and which having been disallowed by the Pension Office the claimant was obliged to come to Congress for relief. Whereupon the committees of Congress called upon the Pension Office for the papers and for the ground of the rejection; and it has been found that the attention of the Pension Office thus being called to the cases—which in many instances have been most grossly and absurdly rejected upon the evidence in the possession of the Pension Office—their attention having been called to these cases, and to the fact that the legislative power was overhauling their past work, have proceeded to allow the claims after bills have been pending in the two Houses. And then, after action by the two Houses or by one of the Houses, the bills being pending, the Pension Office having corrected its work and allowed these claims, has failed to give notice of its subsequent action.

The action of Congress in the first place being made necessary by the misconduct of the office, or of those who have dealt with the evidence on file there, the office confessing its error by reviewing and allowing the claim which had already been rejected, is then lacking in the ordinary courtesy of giving official information to Congress of the allowance of the claim. Thus these bills proceed to the Executive, who in several instances has veteod the bills, alleging the subsequent allowance by the Pension Office, and somewhat glorying in the fact that a large amount of money is saved by the action of the Pension Office and the Executive Department, and these claimants get that which they would fail to receive should the special acts become laws.

I call attention to this because it is a common practice, and I desire in this public way to call the attention of the Pension Office, of the Commissioner of Pensions particularly, to the propriety of his giving information to Congress of his own action in allowing these claims when his attention has been called to them by the endeavor to obtain special legislation, in order that it may not proceed to the extent of making it necessary for the Executive to veto these bills to the extent that he does. If we received notice of the allowance of these claims immediately after their allowance of course these bills would be dropped from the Calendar.

I now withdraw my motion to reconsider.

Mr. COCKRELL. Before that motion is withdrawn I wish to ask one question of the Senator.

Mr. HOAR. I have been claiming the floor for some time.

Mr. COCKRELL. Well; go on.

PENSIONS OF DISABLED SOLDIERS AND DEPENDENT PARENTS.

Mr. HOAR. Last night I entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed the bill (H. R. 10457) for the relief of dependent parents and honorably discharged soldiers and sailors who are now disabled and dependent upon their own labor for support.

The reason for entering that motion was this: That pension bill contains a clause providing a pension to the dependent parent of a deceased soldier provided such parent receives no contribution for his or her support from persons other than those bound by law to contribute thereto. In the New England States every lineal descendant and every lineal ancestor being of sufficient ability is bound to contribute to the support of the descendant or the parent or other ancestor—not necessarily bound to provide for the entire support, but bound to contribute according to his or her ability.

Mr. EDMUNDS. To the extent of his or her capacity.

Mr. HOAR. To the extent of his or her capacity by legal process in the courts. In many of the States in the West and South there is no such law. The result is that the dependent Massachusetts mother or father who was formerly dependent on a deceased soldier to whose support a son who may be poor and illiterate contributes $10 a year, or $5, can not get a pension, while the mother of a millionaire in Iowa——

Mr. ALLISON. We do not have any millionaires in Iowa.

Mr. HOAR. May receive a pension although that son is furnishing an abundant and ample support and is able to do it. It is a great injustice therefore to those States, and I had proposed to move to amend the bill in that respect; but after consulting with my colleague and some other Senators it has been thought best at this late period of the session not to imperil the passage of this bill, which was passed by almost a unanimous vote through the Senate, by sending it back to the House amended. I desire, however, to have it appear that the representatives of the community that is interested did not overlook their interests in this respect. I therefore will withdraw the motion and look to some subsequent legislation to remedy this evil.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to reconsider is withdrawn.

Mr. HARRIS. Does not the withdrawal require unanimous consent?

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. COCKRELL. I wish to ask the Senator from New Hampshire a question about the veto.

Mr. ALLISON. I will yield to a single question for a single minute.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will not take advantage of anything like that. I will reply in the morning.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I move an adjournment.

Mr. COCKRELL. If we are to have a slur cast on the President and the administration——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair asks the Senator from Iowa to yield a moment, till he lays before the Senate——

Mr. COCKRELL. If the motion to adjourn is pending, let it be put.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Chair can lay that House bill before the Senate to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. One veto message of the President has not been disposed of; it will lie on the table. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] moves that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 21 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, January 29, at 12 o'clock m.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, January 29, 1887.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. PLATT presented the credentials of JOSEPH R. HAWLEY, chosen by the Legislature of Connecticut a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1887; which were read, and ordered to be placed on file.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of State, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of the Navy relative to the acceptance by Capt. Edward P. Lull, United States Navy, of a diploma presented to him by the President of the State of Panama; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to a resolution of January 21, 1887, a report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office as to the withdrawal from settlement of certain public lands in Oregon and attaching them to the Warm Springs Indian reservation; which, on motion of Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, was, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 8976) to incorporate the Washington Cable Railway Company of the District of Columbia, received yesterday from the House of Representatives, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

PORT OF DELIVERY AT LEWES, DEL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2256) to create a port of delivery at Lewes, Del., which was, in line 4, before the word "clear," to strike out the words "enter and;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That Lewes, in the State of Delaware, shall be, and is hereby, constituted a port of delivery within the collection district of Delaware; and the deputy collector of customs stationed there shall have power to clear all vessels, whether foreign or domestic, coming to that port.

Mr. GRAY. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House of Representatives, and ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. GORMAN, Mr. MCMILLAN, and Mr. GRAY were appointed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented resolutions adopted by the National Board of Trade in favor of a world's exposition in 1892 in honor of the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America; which were referred to the Select Committee on the Centennial of the Constitution and the Discovery of America, and ordered to be printed.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Huron, Ohio, praying for the passage of the bill conferring upon the people of the District of Columbia the right to vote on the question as to whether liquor shall be manufactured and sold in the District; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented the petition of William McDaniel, late a private in Company F, Fifth Regiment United States Colored Troops, praying for an increase of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FARWELL presented the petition of George H. Blair and 20 citizens of Alsey, Ill.; the petition of Jasper Johnson and 17 citizens of Greenfield, Ill.; the petition of L. F. Houck and 7 citizens of Harristown, Ill.; the petition of Joseph Rea and 10 citizens of Carrollton, Ill.; and the petition of W. S. Wilkerson and 8 citizens of Medora, Ill., praying for the reduction of the special taxes on oleomargarine, and asking that the same may be equalized so that the wholesale dealers shall not pay $480 a year while wholesale tobacco dealers pay only $12 a year; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I present the petition of Mansfield Post, No. 75, Grand Army of the Republic, Red Bluff, Cal., praying for the passage of the so-called Edmunds-Tucker bill on the subject of polygamy. As the bill is in conference, I move that the petition lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PALMER presented the petition of Ralph Fluent and 54 other citizens of Cadillac, Mich., praying for a reduction of the special taxes and for the repeal of "the monopolistic and prohibitory features" of the oleomargarine bill; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. SABIN. I present a joint resolution of the Legislature of Minnesota, relating to the improvement of water-ways, &c., in which they ask that Congress, at the present session, shall make liberal allowances for the work on the upper reaches of the Mississippi, the reservoir system, the Minnesota River, the Red River of the North, the Saint Croix and Chippewa Rivers, the harbors of Lake Superior, the Sault Sainte Marie Canal, Hay Lake Channel, and Saint Clair Flats, together with such other works as shall tend to open up our water routes to and from the markets of the world. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES presented the petition of the J. C. Ayer Company, of Lowell, Mass., praying for the reduction and repeal, if possible, of all internal-revenue taxes; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PAYNE presented the petition of Rev. Walter Ross and 34 other citizens of Bolivar, Ohio; the petition of J. E. Hopkins and 28 other citizens of Cincinnati, Ohio; and the petition of C. B. Ramser and 19 other citizens of Youngstown, Ohio, praying for a reduction of the special taxes on oleomargarine, and that the same may be equalized so that wholesale dealers in oleomargarine shall not pay $480 a year while wholesale tobacco dealers pay only $12 a year; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented the petition of Rev. R. S. Ball and 24 other citizens of Huron, Ohio, praying for the passage of the bill introduced by Senator COLQUITT providing for local option in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CALL. I present a petition, with accompanying papers, from citizens of Key West and the Key West Board of Trade, praying for an additional appropriation for the construction of a public building provided for by act of Congress at that place.

The petition states, and has data showing the fact, that there was collected in 1886 $613,609.75 of customs dues, having increased from 1883 to 1886 nearly three times in amount. It also states that there is a large amount of public business done there in the admiralty courts and a large amount of shipping congregated there, having business at the custom-house, it being a place of stoppage for vessels navigating the Gulf of Mexico. It states that the present appropriation by reason of these facts, and for other reasons is entirely inadequate for the construction of a building suitable for the public business at that place.

I move the reference of the petition, with the accompanying documents, to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR presented a petition of presidents of banks, land companies, real-estate agents, capitalists, merchants, and business firms of Birmingham, Ala., praying that an appropriation be made in aid of the Colored People's Exposition, to be held at Birmingham, Ala., in 1887; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WHITTHORNE, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8597) for the relief of Henry Neal, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. VANCE, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3084) for the protection of the morals of minors in the District of Columbia, reported it with amendments.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, introduced a bill (S. 3240) making an appropriation for the establishment of a life-saving station and providing for a life-saving crew at Yaquina Bay, in the State of Oregon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BOWEN introduced a bill (S. 3241) granting to the Denver and Rio Grande Railway Company the right of way through the United States military reservation at Fort Crawford, in the Uncompahgre valley, in the State of Colorado; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. INGALLS introduced a bill (S. 3242) to increase the pension of Daniel Fike; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CALL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CONGER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 5190) to enlarge the powers and duties of the Department of Agriculture and to create an executive department to be known as the department of agriculture and labor; which was ordered to be printed, and lie on the table.

Mr. BOWEN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. CAMERON, it was Ordered, That Franklin Jordan have leave to withdraw his papers from the files of the Senate, subject to the rules.

On motion of Mr. HOAR, it was Ordered, That the petition of Henry J. White, with the accompanying papers, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

NAVY REGISTER FOR 1887.

Mr. MANDERSON submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That 1,000 additional copies of the Navy Register for 1887 be printed for the use of the Senate.

ARMY REGISTER FOR 1887.

Mr. MANDERSON submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That 1,000 additional copies of the Army Register for 1887 be printed for the use of the Senate.

CONSIDERATION OF HOUSE BILLS.

Mr. HARRIS. I offer a resolution and ask that it be printed and lie on the table, and I shall ask the Senate to consider it on Monday morning.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That at the conclusion of the morning business for each day the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bills and joint resolutions favorably reported on the Calendar, and continue such consideration until 2 o'clock, under the provisions of Rule VIII, until the Calendar of such bills and resolutions has been completed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be printed and lie on the table.

REJECTION OF PENSION CLAIMS.

Mr. CALL. If it be in order now, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution which I have discussed before the Senate on several different occasions, relating to a Florida land grant.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before that motion is put the Chair is required by the rules to lay before the Senate a resolution which comes over under objection. The resolution submitted yesterday by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to inform the Senate whether there is any rule of his Department applied in the Pension Bureau or any rule of said bureau existing and applied with his knowledge or consent whereby any applicant for pension is denied a hearing in said bureau concerning his claim by reason of said applicant having petitioned Congress for relief.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. HARRIS. I hope the Senator from Florida will not interpose his motion until 2 o'clock, and let us proceed with the Calendar.

Mr. CALL. I have no objection if it can be agreed to take up my resolution at that time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution now before the Senate is the one offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] yesterday.

Mr. HARRIS. I was addressing myself to the motion of the Senator from Florida.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution submitted by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. COCKRELL. I wish to suggest an amendment to the resolution. I should like the information to be a little more specific. The resolution reads:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to inform the Senate whether there is any rule of his Department applied in the Pension Bureau, or any rule of said bureau existing and applied with his knowledge or consent, whereby any applicant for pension is denied a hearing in said bureau concerning his claim by reason of said applicant having petitioned Congress for relief,

I move to amend the resolution by adding to it:

And if there be no such rule, then to inform the Senate who wrote the letter of January 24, 1887, touching the pension claim of David C. Canfield, and when such employé was appointed to a position in the Pension Office.

Mr. MCMILLAN. May I inquire if that letter is not signed by the Commissioner of Pensions?

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes, sir; it is signed by the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Is there any doubt about his signature?

Mr. COCKRELL. None in the world, sir.

Mr. MCMILLAN. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] is not in his seat, and I do not know why——

Mr. COCKRELL. But I would presume that the distinguished Senator from Minnesota knew enough about the business in the Pension Office to know that the Commissioner of Pensions does not write or personally read one out of a hundred of the letters which are sent out from that office; that they are prepared by subordinates in the office and go through the division, and when they have thus passed they are signed as a matter of course by the Commissioner.

Mr. MCMILLAN. My attention was called to the subject of these communications from the Bureau of Pensions by some remarks made in the Senate the other day by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR]. I thought from the tenor of those remarks that this letter was just in the same line, and I could see no reason why we might not presume that the letter was written by the Commissioner, or that he knew its contents at the time he signed it, as I suppose he did.

Mr. INGALLS. May I ask a question, having been out of the Chamber for a moment? Is this the resolution offered by my colleague yesterday?

Mr. COCKRELL. It is.

Mr. INGALLS. My colleague is unavoidably absent this morning, and requested me yesterday if this resolution came up in his absence to ask that it might go over until his return on Monday; and as an amendment is to be proposed, I ask that that course may be taken.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the resolution will go over without losing its right to be laid before the Senate on Monday.

Mr. BLAIR. Upon this point I will say to the Senator from Missouri, and suggest to the colleague of the Senator from Kansas, who is absent, that the resolution does not cover the real point at which the Senator from Kansas is aiming.

There is no regulation in the Pension Office which prevents the consideration of an application for a pension there by reason of the applicant having petitioned Congress for a hearing; but when a special act granting relief has been allowed, I understand by a new ruling, by new action instituted during the present Administration, the fact that a special act has been passed, taking effect from its passage, cuts off the applicant from any prosecution for his arrears under the application pending in the Pension Office. Hitherto it had always been the custom where a special act was passed giving relief from the date of its passage to still permit the prosecution of the original claim in the Pension Office, and if the proof was supplied them the claim for arrears as covered by the original application in the office was allowed. The real grievance is the introduction of this new rule, which works injustice in a great many cases.

Mr. TELLER. I think the Senator from New Hampshire has not looked into this resolution. This resolution is directed at a different thing from what the Senator is speaking of. The question is, is there a rule in the Department which will prohibit the Department from taking up and examining a case where the applicant has petitioned Congress; and nothing more.

Mr. BLAIR. I stated that——

Mr. TELLER. I should like to say, if the Senator will wait, that there is no such rule that I know of in the Department. There was none when I was engaged in that Department.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado has the floor.

Mr. BLAIR. I was suggesting that there was no such rule and no such practice when the Senator had charge of the Department; but the case is this——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado has the floor.

Mr. TELLER. I ask the Senator to wait until I get through. The Senator says there is no such practice, when a letter was read here yesterday, signed by the Commissioner, saying that because the party had petitioned Congress to have a special act passed he had forfeited his right to be heard in the office. The resolution is directed to that inquiry, to determine whether that is the result of some order in the office or some misadventure in the office.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not believe there is any such rule in the office as that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution is laid upon the table for the present.

BENJAMIN OBEKIAH—VETO MESSAGE.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the President's message vetoing the bill (S. 2173) granting a pension to Benjamin Obekiah was referred to the Committee on Pensions. I wish to have the motion entered that action may be had upon it hereafter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri enters a motion to reconsider the vote referred to, which he has a right to do under the rule.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CALL. I now move to proceed to the consideration of the resolution instructing the Attorney-General to bring suit for an injunction against the Florida Railway and Navigation Company.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business having closed, the Calendar is pending under the eighth rule, and the Senator from Florida moves——

Mr. VEST. What has become of the bill that was pending yesterday at the close of the morning hour?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that that is the first case on the Calendar to be called. Pending that question, the Senator from Florida makes a motion to proceed to the consideration of a resolution heretofore submitted by him.

Mr. HARRIS. I understood the Senator from Florida to say that if he could have an understanding that his resolution would be considered after 2 o'clock he would not insist upon his motion now. I should be very glad if the Senate would consent to consider the Senator's resolution after 2 o'clock, so that we may proceed with the Calendar until that time.

Mr. BERRY. In the absence of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] I shall have to object to any arrangement which would displace the railroad attorneys bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida withdraw his motion?

Mr. CALL. I do not, unless I can have such an understanding. I only desire to say that this is a resolution of great importance——

Mr. MANDERSON. It is utterly impossible to hear the Senator on this side of the Chamber. I desire to know with what bill he proposes to antagonize the bill that was under consideration during the morning hour yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will please come to order.

Mr. CALL. I am asking for the consideration of the resolution which I have discussed before the Senate, instructing the Attorney-General to bring suit to prevent the sale of the lands contained in the Florida Railroad land grant of 1856, pending the consideration of a forfeiture bill in Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion submitted by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to inquire whether the Senator from Florida simply wants to continue his remarks or whether he expects a vote on the resolution.

Mr. CALL. I should like to have a vote upon it.

Mr. TELLER. I understand that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], who is not in the Chamber at this time, desires to make some remarks on the resolution.

Mr. VEST. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] is part of the way through his speech. He was taken off the floor on this very resolution, and he claims the floor when the resolution comes up for the purpose of continuing the debate. That is the state of the case.

Mr. TELLER. Certainly. I understood that he was ready to go on, and it would not be fair to take up the resolution in his absence.

Mr. CALL. I withdraw the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is withdrawn, and the first bill on the Calendar under the eighth rule is before the Senate for consideration.

YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2436) to amend sections 2474 and 2475 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, setting apart a certain tract of land lying near the headwaters of the Yellowstone River as a public park.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If no amendment be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. BUTLER. Let it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill was read in full yesterday.

Mr. INGALLS. Are we now on the Calendar of General Orders?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill was taken up by a vote of the Senate, having been reached on the Calendar under the eighth rule. It was taken up by a vote of the Senate after objection, and has been read at length.

Mr. INGALLS. I thought it fell at 2 o'clock yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Still, it retained its place on the Calendar.

Mr. INGALLS. Certainly; but the fact of its having been taken up yesterday did not make it the unfinished business this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not at all, except that it is first on the Calendar. If no amendment be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on ordering the bill to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Mr. President, I did not understand from the consideration of the bill yesterday, for it was considered but a little while, to what extent this realignment affects the surface or the territory of the park—whether it increases or diminishes it. Do I understand that it diminishes or increases the quantity of land within the park?

Mr. MANDERSON. As was explained quite fully yesterday, I will say, in answer to my colleague's question, that the bill does extend the limits of the park about 30 miles to the eastward and about 20 miles to the southward, on the recommendations made by the Interior Department.

Mr. VAN WYCK. In the northern section does it increase or diminish it?

Mr. MANDERSON. It diminishes it in the northern section.

Mr. VAN WYCK. It increases it on two sides and diminishes it on the north?

Mr. MANDERSON. Yes; it diminishes it to a small extent on the north.

Mr. VAN WYCK. There was, perhaps, so much noise in the Chamber yesterday that I could not understand the reason or necessity for this diminution of territory upon the north. Why diminish it on the north? I do not understand the reason given.

Mr. MANDERSON. I shall be much pleased to explain my own view of the matter to the Senator, if he desires it.

Mr. VAN WYCK. But I thought there was some reason given for diminishing it. What was it?

Mr. MANDERSON. There is abundant reason, which can be readily suggested if desired.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I should like to know why the boundaries of the park have been interfered with. That I can not understand. We have been admonished time and again in this Chamber that there is something sacred, as there may be, about this park, either to enter it or to go out from it. If that be the case, and it was so important that it should not be invaded or attacked anywhere, I do not know why the proposition is now made to realign the park and make it larger on two sides and diminish it upon another. I do not understand what is the necessity for it. I might understand why it should be increased on the east and the south, as has been stated, but why the line should be withdrawn on the north I can not understand. I know there has been an effort made to obtain privileges for a railroad to enter the park. Is the line withdrawn on the north so as to give room there that the railroad may enter and not be compelled to come within the lines of the territory of the park? Has the Senator from Missouri a map?

Mr. VEST. Yes, sir; here is the map. [Exhibiting.]

Mr. VAN WYCK. Where is it on the map? [Examining.]

Mr. VEST. It is about 2 miles.

Mr. VAN WYCK. It is about 2 miles. There has been very much discussion on the subject of the Yellowstone Park; there has been very much legislation about it, and very much proposed legislation. When we supposed the legislation was complete, when there was a law to protect the territory, to protect the animals, and to protect the scenery placed under the control of the Secretary of the Interior, to protect the leasing of certain portions for hotel accommodations, and the attention of the nation time after time directed to it and legislation of Congress time after time, and when application was made, however justly I know not, I do not pretend to say, that railroads should enter there, we have been told that the park was so sacred that it must not be invaded or interfered with in any particular.

Now we have a revising of the line, and there must be some purpose and object in it. It was large before. Now it has been extended 30 miles, I understand, on one side and 20 miles upon another. If the park required additional size, why is it that the line has been drawn down 2 miles on the north? Why 2 miles? Why is it drawn down at all is the question that I certainly should like to understand. If the park was perfect before in all its proportions, perfect in size, with all the natural scenery that should be preserved, with territory for animals to roam in, why is it necessary upon two sides to enlarge it and upon another side to diminish its area?

I should like to know whether the purpose of this measure is that 2 miles are taken off from the north, and the park is to be diminished that much in territory in order that the proposed railroad which Congress thought ought not to enter the park may come in? If that be so, it certainly is as dangerous to the park to have it there without as within the limits of the park. If the railroad is calculated to burn the grasses, to burn the forest, and the whistle of its engine to scare off the wild animals from the territory, it is just as susceptible of that criticism whether these 2 miles are run down out of the park in order to enable the railroad to enter the territory. If 30 miles there are necessary upon the east and 20 miles more upon the south, why is it necessary to withdraw from the north 2 miles?

As I said before, an explanation may have been made but I did not so understand it, and I should like to know before voting on this proposition whether it is really to give this railroad what it could not get before, an entrance substantially into the park?

Mr. MANDERSON. I feel like responding to the very proper inquiry of my colleague in reference to this matter, although my response would be largely a repetition of what was suggested by me yesterday on the subject.

The Yellowstone Park was laid out by virtue of the act of March 1, 1872, and if my colleague will refer to sections 2474 and 2475 of the Revised Statutes he will see that when the act was passed there was a very indefinite description of the boundaries of the park—one so indefinite that it would be extremely difficult to decide in the event of a crime or misdemeanor committed whether it was within or outside the limits of the park. I will read the description which we seek to remedy. The statute says:

SEC. 2474. The tract of land in the Territories of Montana and Wyoming, lying near the headwaters of the Yellowstone River, and described as follows, to wit, commencing at the junction of Gardiner's River with the Yellowstone River, and running east to the meridian passing 10 miles to the eastward of the most eastern point of Yellowstone Lake; thence south along said meridian to the parallel of latitude passing 10 miles south of the most southern point of Yellowstone Lake; thence west along said parallel to the meridian passing 15 miles west of the most western point of Madison Lake; thence north along said meridian to the latitude of the junction of the Yellowstone and Gardiner's Rivers; thence east to the place of beginning.

That was the description, and because of its reference to the east and southern points of the Yellowstone Lake and the western point of Madison Lake, it described a movable boundary; one that might vary with the receding or the increase of the waters of those lakes, and it was, therefore, clearly objectionable. It was the best description perhaps that could then have been given, because of the fact that the boundary line of the Territories of Idaho, Wyoming, and Montana had not at that time been surveyed by the officers of the Government of the United States. Therefore it was that this indefinite description, being the best that could then be given, was supplied in the law. It was believed at the time that all of the park was contained within the limits of Wyoming, but it was not so.

This proposition to change and more clearly define the boundaries of the park is no new thing. The effort has been made for many Congresses, and I think in every one of the numerous bills relating to the park presented by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] this change of boundary, or one very similar, has been suggested.

The change has been considered advisable by the Interior Department, and I believe it to be very desirable that whatever is reserved from the public domain for the purposes of this park shall be within only one of the Territories of the United States. Under this indefinite description it was found that a small strip of land, about one and a half miles in width, was in the Territory of Montana, and a small strip of land, about half a mile in width, was between the eastern boundary line of the Territory of Idaho and the western boundary of the park; and my colleague, having a map before him, can readily see that here was this large body of land constituting the park with this small strip of half a mile between its western boundary and the boundary line between Wyoming and Idaho, and a piece of land, perhaps 20 miles in length by one and a half in width, in Montana. Therefore there came about a constant conflict of jurisdiction, and both Montana and Wyoming Territories have been seeking to extend their criminal laws and the jurisdiction of their courts over this park.

It certainly seemed well, by reason of this jurisdictional difficulty, that if it was possible to confine this excluded territory, this reserved portion of the public domain, within the limit of one Territory, it was desirable to do so.

I might further say that this strip of one and a half miles contains nothing of interest to the sight-seer or the tourist. There are none of the great natural curiosities of the park in this strip, and its cutting off has nothing whatever to do with railroad legislation, as suggested by my colleague, which railroad legislation I have heartily opposed. I do not see how it affects railroad construction in the least degree. The park is extended to the south and east because there is a body of land there which is the natural resort of the game, which is greatly increasing, if we are to believe the reports of the superintendent of the park and of the cavalry captain who has had the park in charge during the last year.

During the late fall and winter seasons of each year the game leaves the higher elevations, the broad plateaus 7,000 or 8,000 feet above the sea level, goes to this lower territory to the east and south, and there enters into the valleys and cañons of that wild region. This matter is very fully as well as succinctly explained in a letter I have in my hand, written by Mr. Arnold Hague, of the Geological Survey, a gentleman who has more detailed information with reference to this park and of the means proper for its preservation than any other man. He suggests that which, it seems to me, every settler upon the Missouri River will be interested in, that it is absolutely necessary, to protect those who live upon the banks of these great rivers of the West, that this park with its many square miles of forest should be retained; that if the sides of the mountains and the high plains shall be denuded of forest trees the result will be occasional floods by reason of the rapid melting of the snows that will work great destruction to the inhabitants along the Missouri River. I will read his letter, as it gives more particularly the reasons for the extension and the change in the boundary line of the park:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
UNITED STATES GEOLOGICAL SURVEY,
Washington, D. C., February 4, 1886.

YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK SURVEY.

SIR: A bill for the protection and better regulation of the Yellowstone National Park has recently been introduced by Senator VEST into the United States Senate. Knowing your keen appreciation of the value of the park, I desire to call your attention to one or two points which seem to be of the utmost consequence in carrying out the purposes for which the park was originally set apart and has since been maintained.

In order to accomplish these purposes the most essential features in the new bill are those which relate to the enlargement of the park and the sharper definition of its boundaries. In the original bill creating the park the boundaries are loosely stated. A better acquaintance with the country enables us to say more intelligently where the boundaries should be drawn, while experience shows that to avoid encroachments on the reservations they should be more sharply defined by law and the lines accurately run.

In this respect the present bill meets all the requirements of the park. For the purposes for which the park was set aside the present area is far too small.

In my opinion the object of first importance in maintaining the Yellowstone Park is the preservation of the forests. The question of timber preservation is one which is gradually attracting more and more attention in all the more settled parts of the country. The necessity for some proper restrictions rigidly enforced is now very generally admitted. In the far West, where such immense tracts of country are treeless areas, it is all the more necessary that some carefully-considered restrictions should be placed upon the indiscriminate cutting of timber from the public domain. It seems equally necessary that certain areas favorably situated for the growth of trees should be set aside forever as forest reservations. In the settled parts of the country, owing to the many conflicting interests, proper protection by legislation is a matter of great difficulty. It is sufficient to call your attention to the long struggle going on in New York State in the attempt to preserve by legislative enactment the forests of the Adirondacks. That there should be some additional restrictions in the cutting of timber has been very generally admitted, but to control the matter with due regard to the rights of all is by no means easy to accomplish. Commissioners appointed by the State of New York to investigate the present condition of these forests and the needs of the country urgently recommend immediate action placing the timber region under State control in order to maintain an equable supply of water for the Hudson River.

To-day no such difficulties exist against forever setting apart the country in the immediate vicinity of the park, while the reasons for so doing are manifest to all who have given the subject any attention.

The Yellowstone National Park is most admirably adapted for a forest reservation. It is a broad, undulating plateau, varying in altitude from 7,000 to 8,000 feet above sea-level; surrounded on nearly all sides by mountains rising from 2,000 to 4,000 feet above the general level of the country. Across this plateau the continental watershed runs with a very winding course from the southeast to the northwest. Two great rivers, the Yellowstone and the Snake, which ultimately drain into the Missouri and Columbia, have their sources here on the plateau; the former in Yellowstone Lake, and the latter in Shoshone Lake. Yellowstone Lake covers nearly 125 miles of surface, while Shoshone, with very irregular outlines, measures more than 6 miles in length.

Hundreds of smaller lakes lie scattered over the plateau and mountains, and innumerable springs feed these lakes and rivers. Over three thousand thermal springs are known within the park. No region in the Rocky Mountains is better favored in its supply of water, the rain and snow fall being unsurpassed in any area of equal extent. Nearly all precipitation between the middle of September and the first of May falls in the form of snow, which lies upon the ground well into the summer. This broad, elevated mountain mass is so situated as to gather the storms which center in the northern Rocky Mountains, and the topographical structure of the region enables it to retain the waters. For the storing up of this water and regulating its flow the forests are of immense value. It is unnecessary here to enter at length into a discussion of the influence of the forests upon the supply of water. In a few words, this great body of snow is largely protected from the direct rays of the sun and sheltered from the dry winds blowing from the westward. In consequence the snow melts gradually and the water percolates through the soil and vegetation, slowly finding its way to the springs and large reservoirs.

Remove the forests the snows would rapidly disappear. Damaging freshets would carry off the water in the early spring, leaving the country arid and parched. Dry westerly winds would take up the snow, precipitating the moisture farther to the eastward over country already supplied. Without the trees the soil would soon be washed away, leaving the country unfit for vegetation. The report of the recent forestry commission for the State of New York says "that the summer flow of the Adirondack rivers has decreased within the memory of men now living from 30 to 50 per cent. Many of the small streams, which a quarter of a century ago were abundantly supplied with water during the entire summer, are now usually dry during many months." In my opinion, owing to the extreme dryness of the atmosphere, the disafforesting of the country around the sources of the Missouri and Columbia would cause, relatively, a far greater diminution in the flow of water than observed near the sources of the Hudson.

Every precaution, then, should be taken to preserve the natural reservoirs of these great rivers sending their waters to the Atlantic and Pacific. If, in the future, the lower Yellowstone Valley is ever settled with any considerable population they will require all the water stored up in this favored region. It is not only necessary, then, that the forests within the limits of the park should be preserved, but that the area of the park should be enlarged so as to include the immediate country along the sources of all streams draining into Yellowstone Lake, the east fork of the Yellowstone River, and the headwaters of the numerous southern branches of Clark Fork and the Stinking Water.

The country to the eastward of the present boundary of the park, which, by the bill now before Congress, it is intended to add to the reservation, is one of the most Alpine and rugged regions of the West. It consists mainly of a single mountain range with peaks rising from 11,000 to 12,000 feet above sea-level. It is one of the principal ranges of the Rocky Mountain system. Snow lies on the higher summits all the year. It is a country of great natural beauty, but useless for agricultural purposes. Although the eastern foot-hills were among the frequented resorts of the earliest trappers and fur-hunters, the mountains, owing to their inaccessible nature, remain to-day one of the least visited regions of the Northwest. So far as known the mountains carry no minerals of economic importance, and, judging from the volcanic character of the country, the indications are against any discovery of valuable ore-bodies. These mountains are useless for settlement, and should be withdrawn from the public lands.

On the other hand, the slopes are densely covered with timber and forest vegetation on the west side, and large volumes of water pour into the Upper Yellowstone through Soda Butte, Cache, Calfee, and Miller Creeks and the East Fork. On the east side, Crandall, Sunlight, and Dead Indian Creeks contribute to Clark's Fork, while the Stinking Water drains a large area of country for the Big Horn, the water ultimately reaching the Lower Yellowstone River. Encroachments upon these forests will soon be made if not immediately protected by Congressional legislation.

According to the report of the special agent of the last census upon the forests of the country nearly 60,000,000 railway ties are annually consumed by the old and new lines of railway. In the far West they are usually dependent upon young trees, from ten to twelve inches in diameter. It is estimated that each tree furnishes, on an average, only two ties. In Montana and Wyoming the demand for railway ties is largely supplied by the tamarack or black pine (Pinus Murrayana), the variety most abundant in the country immediately adjoining the Yellowstone Park. In a year of active railway building in the West the destruction of vigorous young trees must be counted by millions. By the same authority it is estimated that the injury to woodlands destroyed by fire during the census year in Montana amounted to $1,128,000 and in Wyoming to $3,255,000. In this wholesale destruction it is not easy to calculate the permanent injury to the country.

Another source of injury to the forest near mining centers of the West is the enormous consumption of charcoal in smelting furnaces. A country devastated by the charcoal burner is a dreary waste. The number of large smelting furnaces, however, are so scattered over the country that permanent injury, except in a few cases, may not be considered as serious. Cooke City, a small, undeveloped mining camp just outside the northeast corner of the park, is already supplied with a furnace. If the place should ever develop into a prosperous mining district, the demand for charcoal may become an important industry. The need of forest conservation is so urgent in the region of the Yellowstone Park that every precaution should be taken at once to restrict the cutting of timber within the area proposed to be added to the park. As there are large tracts of timber to the north and east of Cooke City, this could be done without the slightest detriment to mining developments.

Another important object to be gained by the enlargement of the Yellowstone Park is the preservation of wild game. Any one familiar with the disappearance of the game of the Rocky Mountains during the last twenty years must be fully impressed with the necessity of rigidly enforcing the game laws in the park if we wish to preserve, in a state of nature, those animals which are rapidly becoming extinct.

What we want is not an artificial zoological garden, but a natural zoological reservation sufficiently large to allow all wild animals to run free without molestation. For this purpose the present area is too small. The country around the Hot Springs, the geyser basins, and the plateau between the geyser basins and the Yellowstone Lake affords insufficient grazing ground for any large number of game. This country never was an attractive haunt for game. On the other hand, such grand mountains as Mount Sheridan and Mount Washburne, rising out of the plateau, and the high country surrounding the park afford one of the finest game regions of the West. The Absaraka or Shoshone range, just to the east of the present park boundary, is a favorite resort for deer, elk, bear, and mountain sheep. The latter are rarely seen on the park plateau, but are abundant on the high peaks and crags to the eastward. A great deal of shooting has been done here within the last two or three years. Its protection is certainly very desirable.

The country immediately to the south of the present southern boundary abounds in sheep and elk. It seems to be a favorite breeding ground for elk. This past season a thousand or fifteen hundred cows and young elk were feeding there throughout the summer. Buffalo are rapidly disappearing from the northwest country. All trustworthy accounts agree that there still remain only a few small struggling herds. There are at present, and have been for several years, two or three herds of buffalo, of not more than sixty each, roaming in the park. They are probably remnants of much larger herds, driven from the plains and valleys below, seeking protection in less frequented resorts. They frequently cross the border, traveling short distances for grazing purposes, always returning to the park for protection. To protect them the country where they roam should be included within the park area. A few small bands of moose, although rarely seen, inhabit the marshes on the headwaters of Fall River, in the southwest corner of the park. They can easily be protected if the park is extended southward to the forty-fourth parallel of latitude, as contemplated by the new bill. By rigidly enforcing the game laws the park will, in a few years, become so densely stocked that the surplus, seeking new haunts, will run outside the limits for its own protection. In this way ample sport will be afforded the hunter shooting under Territorial game laws.

One of the objects in creating the Yellowstone Park is stated in the original law in these words, "dedicated and set apart as a public park or pleasure ground for the benefit and enjoyment of the people." To accomplish these purposes in their fullest extent it is necessary that the park should be enlarged to include the high mountain country to the east and south. The present park area, while including some very grand scenery, and containing all the phenomenal objects of interest to be found in this region, lacks that alpine character which is so desirable in a mountain country visited by tourists and lovers of nature seeking rest and recreation.

For these reasons it seems to me important that the bill now before the Senate, amending the original act setting apart the National Park, should receive the favorable action of Congress at an early date.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ARNOLD HAGUE.

Hon. CHARLES F. MANDERSON, United States Senate.

I will state to my colleague that this change of boundary is one that not only meets with the approval of the Committee on Territories, but it is urged by strong indorsing letters by the Interior Department. It was urged by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], formerly Secretary of the Interior, when he was at the head of that great Department, and I hope this very valuable section will be retained.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I understand my colleague to say that the Committee on Territories approve of this.

Mr. MANDERSON. Of this extension of the Yellowstone Park.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I should like to ask the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER], a member of the Committee on Territories, a question. My colleague has stated that the Committee on Territories approve this addition to the park.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President——

Mr. MANDERSON. If I may be allowed, with the permission of the Senator from South Carolina, to repeat my statement in my own way rather than as stated by my colleague, I will say that my statement was that all the Committee on Territories approved the extension of the area of the park as recommended by the Interior Department.

Mr. BUTLER. I was really not aware that this bill had been reported to the Senate. My last information in relation to it was a discussion which took place in the committee in regard to the power proposed to be conferred upon the commissioner provided for in this bill, and I made some objection to a certain provision in the bill as it then stood. I remember my friend from Mississippi, who was a member of the committee at that time, made some objection to the powers conferred on this commissioner; and the understanding was that the Senator from Nebraska was to perfect the measure. I have not seen it since in the committee, that I remember. It may have been reported in my absence.

I can not give my assent to this bill in its present form. I do not know that I care so particularly about changing the limits of the park, but powers are conferred on the commissioner created by the bill which I think he ought not to have. The second section provides—

That the said park shall hereafter be under the sole and exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, and that all of the laws applicable to places under the sole and exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, except so far as modified by this act, shall be in full force and effect in said park. That nothing in this act shall be construed to forbid the service of any civil or criminal process of any court having jurisdiction in the county or district in which said park is hereby located, or may hereafter be located, in the said Territory of Wyoming. If any offense shall be committed in said Yellowstone Park, which offense is not prohibited or the punishment thereof is not specially provided for by any law of the United States, or by any regulation of the Secretary of the Interior as provided by this act, the offender shall be liable to and receive the same punishment as the laws of the Territory of Wyoming in force at the time of the commission of the offense may provide for a like offense in the said Territory.

Let us see what powers the Secretary of the Interior has under this bill. Section 4 provides—

That the Secretary of the Interior shall make and publish such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary and proper for the management and care of the park, especially for the preservation from injury or spoliation of all timber, mineral deposits, natural curiosities, or wonderful objects within said park, and for the protection of the animals and birds found in the park, to prevent their capture or destruction. He shall cause all persons trespassing upon the park to be removed therefrom, and shall take all measures which he may think necessary to carry out the purposes of this act; and the Secretary of War is hereby directed to make such detail of troops as the Secretary of the Interior, with the approval of the President, may require for the purpose of preventing trespassers or intruders from entering the park with the object of destroying the animals and birds therein, or for other illegal purposes, and for removing such persons from the park.

In section 5 there is this provision among others which I think very objectionable:

Any person willfully violating the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction, shall be fined for each offense not less than twenty nor more than one hundred dollars, or by imprisonment for not more than three months, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

That is one of the penalties inflicted upon a person who, in the language of this act, willfully violates the provisions of the law. It goes on to provide further:

Possession within the said park of the dead bodies, or any part thereof, of any wild animal or bird shall be prima facie evidence that the person or persons having the same are guilty of violating this act. Any person or persons, or stage, express, or railroad company, receiving for transportation any of the said animals, birds, or fish, knowing, or having reasonable cause to believe, that such animals, birds, or fish were killed or captured in violation of this act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall forfeit and pay for every such offense the sum of $250, to be recovered by a proceeding in the nature of an information before any Territorial or United States district court within whose jurisdiction such offense was committed, &c.

Section 7 provides:

That the President shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a commissioner, learned in the law, who shall reside in said park, and who shall have jurisdiction to hear and act upon all complaints made of any and all violations of the law or of the rules and regulations made by the Secretary of the Interior for the government of the park and the protection of the game and objects of interest therein. He shall have the power, upon sworn information, to issue process, in the name of the United States, for the arrest of any person charged with the commission of any misdemeanor within the park, and to summarily try the person so charged, and, if found guilty, to fix the punishment as in the next section provided.

This commissioner will have the power under this act to arrest you, Mr. President, or arrest any Senator on this floor, and to summarily try the party arrested without the intervention of a jury, but upon his own motion, and to fine in a sum not more than $100, and to imprison not more than three months.

Mr. MANDERSON. I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. BUTLER. Very well.

Mr. MANDERSON. Does he not know of other magistrates who have that power?

Mr. BUTLER. I can not say that I do.

Mr. MANDERSON. Is not the Senator aware that in the District of Columbia a police judge has exactly the power to arrest on view or upon information, to try summarily and without the intervention of a jury those who are guilty of violations of the law of the District?

Mr. BUTLER. That may be so, and I believe it is, but the party so tried has a right to appeal to the circuit court of the District of Columbia, and so I believe in all other instances. Here the judgment of this commissioner trying the party without the intervention of a jury is absolutely final without the right of appeal; and that, in my judgment, is in the very teeth of that provision of the Constitution which guarantees to every citizen the right of trial by jury.

Mr. VEST. The constitutional provision, it has been decided over and over again, does not apply to such a case as this.

Mr. BUTLER. Here is the provision of the Constitution:

In all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed, which district shall have been previously ascertained by law, and to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation.

My friend from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] suggests that that applies to informations as well as indictments.

Mr. VEST. I beg the Senator from Alabama's pardon; but the question has been adjudicated. Here is the provision of the Constitution that settles this question, found in section 2 of Article III:

The trial of all crimes, except in cases of impeachment, shall be by jury.

Every lawyer knows the distinction between crimes and misdemeanors. In the Revised Statutes, section 4558, in regard to seamen, authorizes a justice of the peace to arrest a seaman and try him summarily and put him in jail for six months without any jury intervening, without any right of appeal.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, there is another provision of this bill that I should like the Senator from Missouri or the Senator from Nebraska to explain, and it is this:

SEC. 8. That all costs and expenses arising in cases under this act and properly chargeable to the United States shall be certified by the commissioner to the Department of Justice, and, if approved by the proper officers of that Department, shall be paid by the marshal of the United States for the Territory of Wyoming, as other such costs in the United States courts.

I desire to call the attention of the Senate, and of the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Nebraska, to this provision of the bill, to see if they can find any parallel for it:

The violation of any regulation made and published by the Secretary of the Interior in regard to the control and management of the park, and the protection of the animals, birds, fish, and property therein, is hereby declared to be a misdemeanor, and the party convicted shall be punished for each offense by a fine of not more than $100, and be committed until such fine is paid, or by imprisonment for not more than three months, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Now, sir, recurring to the provision of the bill which places this park under the jurisdiction of the Territory of Wyoming, we see this provision:

If any offense shall be committed in said Yellowstone Park, which offense is not prohibited or the punishment thereof is not specially provided for by any law of the United States, or by any regulation of the Secretary of the Interior as provided by this act—

Which I have just read in section 8—then he shall be liable to a fine of $100 and imprisonment for three months, or both fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the tribunal. In other words, the Secretary of the Interior is empowered by this act to declare pains and penalties, and he is to determine what shall be law and what shall not be law in the Yellowstone Park; and this bill declares any violation of whatever the Secretary of the Interior may determine shall be a misdemeanor, and punishable as I have indicated.

Now, sir, if there is any good reason, if there is any exigency why these extraordinary powers should be conferred upon a commissioner of the Yellowstone Park different from all other parks of the United States, where the jurisdiction of the United States Government is unquestioned, I should like to have it explained.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator from South Carolina allow me to read a part of the Constitution of the United States pertinent to that point?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. GEORGE. Article I, section 1, of the Constitution reads as follows:

All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives.

The making of a law or rule fixing a penalty for the commission of any crime is a legislative power.

Mr. BUTLER. Which this act undertakes to delegate to the Secretary of the Interior; and that we have no right to do, I submit.

In addition to the objections which I have pointed out, and which I might enlarge upon, the passage of this bill will entail an expense on this Government which, I undertake to say, none of its advocates have ever estimated. I shall be very much instructed, and very much obliged to the Senator from Nebraska, if he will inform me what additional cost the passage of this bill will entail upon the Government of the United States.

Mr. MANDERSON. I will answer the inquiry of the Senator from South Carolina, but first I desire to address myself to his criticism of that section of this bill which provides that the Commissioner, learned in the law, who is to act as a magistrate or judge, has the right to summarily try misdemeanors, violations of law under the grade of crimes, or violations of the rules and regulations made by the Interior Department. I submit that this provision is no infraction of the constitutional right guaranteed to every citizen of a trial by jury for a criminal offense, and, as was suggested by the Senator from Missouri, the courts of this country have repeatedly, in hundreds of instances, decided that there can be a trial of a misdemeanor by a jury of less than twelve men, which certainly is the jury contemplated by the Constitution of the United States, or without the intervention of a jury at all; and the courts have defined, so that it seems now quite clear, however it may have been in the early jurisprudence of the country, what is a crime or felony and what is a misdemeanor. A crime of felony means that which is punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary according to many decisions; and by the decisions of other courts a crime is an offense that is punishable under the laws by something in the nature of infamous punishment, as the deprivation of citizenship or of the right to vote.

Mr. BUTLER. Would the Senator from Nebraska hold that it would be incompetent for a judge to sentence a party convicted of a misdemeanor to a penitentiary?

Mr. MANDERSON. It certainly would be incompetent to sentence an accused person, found guilty of an offense, to the penitentiary if that was not the punishment inflicted upon the commission of the offense by law. What I suggest to the Senator is that the penalty fixes the nature of the offense as to whether it is a crime or a misdemeanor. If it is punishable simply by fine or by imprisonment in the common jail, it is, under the authorities, a misdemeanor. If it is an offense so grave that the legislative body has said it shall be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary, by deprivation of citizenship, a punishment that is infamous in its character, then it is a crime or felony. The distinction is clear and now well understood by the courts.

I have sent to the Library and obtained somewhat hurriedly a few references to the authorities on this question, which may be considered, I think, as fully settled. I read from Proffatt on Trial by Jury:

Not all crimes which were felonies at common law must be tried by a jury. Petit larceny was a felony at common law, yet it has been punished in England and here without a jury trial in a summary manner by a magistrate. (Proffatt, section 96; 2 Cowen, 815; 5 Wendell, 250.)

This law certainly goes no further than these cases, and I read the conclusion of an eminent legal writer treating of the subject of trials by jury. He cites the two well-known New York authorities in support of that proposition. I read further:

Not all misdemeanors require a jury trial.—Ib., § 97.
But in 20 Barbour it was held that a jury trial can be demanded in any case where an indictment may be presented.—2 Parker's Crim. Rep. 322.
"It is competent for a legislature to prescribe what shall be the mode of trial for a misdemeanor created by statute which was not indictable at common law, and for which no infamous punishment is provided. But the limit must be carefully observed."—Proffatt, § 97.

Further, he says:

Our constitutions, giving the right to trial by jury, expressly or impliedly refer to this antecedent practice; it is necessary to consider what that was in order to ascertain what grade or class of offenses was so punished.—Ib., id.
For an offense rendering a person liable to "infamous punishment," he is entitled to a jury. Then the question arises, What is "infamous?" Generally it is such as will entail, as a punitive consequence after sentence the forfeiture of certain political rights, such as the right to vote.
Not all crimes which were felonies at common law must be tried by a jury.

And he cites the case of petit larceny, which was a crime at common law, but is not so now by reason of the substitution in many States of the milder punishment by statute; and says "the crime of petit larceny does not require a jury, but may be punished by a magistrate."

I am no stickler for any provision of this bill. I think it is perfectly legitimate, within the limits of a strict construction of the Constitution for the Congress of the United States and good legislation to prescribe, as this bill prescribes, that these misdemeanors may be summarily punished by a magistrate, learned in the law, appointed by the President of the United States, and confirmed by the Senate. But if it is considered desirable that there should be an appeal from his decision to the district court, which by the second section of this act is charged with the jurisdiction of crimes or felonies committed in this park, I certainly shall not object to it; and that amendment could very readily be made to this bill. I would not prefer it surely, but I would not object to it.

Mr. ALLISON. May I ask the Senator a question? If I understand the second section, it really extends the laws of the District of Columbia over this park. Is there not likely to be some conflict between the laws of the Territory of Wyoming and the laws of the District of Columbia?

Mr. MANDERSON. I do not understand that it extends the laws of the District of Columbia over the park.

Mr. ALLISON. I made my inquiry more to know whether that is true or not.

Mr. MANDERSON. This is what I understand it to mean and what the language imports, that it extends such laws upon the statute-book of the United States as pertain to reserved public lands over the park, and that where there is not legislation in the general statutes with reference to crime, for instance petit larceny, or assault and battery, in those cases where our statutes are silent, the criminal laws of the Territory of Wyoming shall apply.

Mr. ALLISON. What does this phrase mean:

And that all of the laws applicable to places under the sole and exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, except so far as modified by this act, shall be in full force and effect in said park.

Mr. MANDERSON. I understand that language does not apply the laws of the District of Columbia. All laws pertaining to the District of Columbia are by express terms applied to it. The laws that I have referred to are those which extend over reservations of the United States.

Mr. ALLISON. I think the Senator should change the phraseology; otherwise it seems to me clear that the laws of the District of Columbia would apply to this park.

Mr. MANDERSON. I do not think that is so, any more than that the laws of the District of Columbia would apply to any of the Territories of the United States, or its reservations. I do not think the bill is indefinite or uncertain in that regard.

But, Mr. President, another objection made by the Senator from South Carolina to this bill is that it provides that for infractions of any of the rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior there shall be punishment by fine or by imprisonment.

Mr. BUTLER. Just on that point I should be very glad if the Senator from Nebraska would inform the Senate whether in his professional or legislative experience he has ever known that the violation of a rule or regulation of an executive officer has been made a misdemeanor. In other words, has he ever known anything made a misdemeanor which was not the violation of a statute?

Mr. MANDERSON. I think that is so in the internal-revenue laws and the rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue as to the conduct of breweries and distilleries. I think violations of those rules and regulations are declared to be misdemeanors under the law.

But I submit to the Senator from South Carolina that a provision unquestionably far more severe and objectionable is found in the original park act, passed in 1872. By the terms of that act it was provided that any visitor to the park who should violate any of the rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior for the park, might be summarily ejected from the park. That language meant all that it imports. He might be invited or ordered by the superintendent or one of the police officers of the park to leave, having violated one of the rules and regulations prescribed for the park by the Secretary; and if he refused to do it, I submit that he could be ejected from that park with violence, and if it was necessary to maim, cripple, or kill him to produce that result, it could be done. So in the interest of those who are to visit this park, and of those who violate the rules and regulations of the Interior Department, it seems to me that this is the milder and less objectionable legislation, and is a decided improvement in permitting a person to be taken before a magistrate and have an investigation before him as to whether there has been a violation of the rules and regulations applicable to the park; and I submit that there might be very much less punishment in the latter case than if he was to be thus summarily and violently ejected under the requirements of the act of 1872.

But it is suggested that this is objectionable because it entails considerable expense for the maintenance of the park. The increased expenditure over that which has been required for the government of the park prior to the last year since 1872 is for a small increase of the number of police officers and an increase of the salary of the commissioner who is to act as a magistrate. I have not figured it up, but it is by no means a large sum, and I really think the passing of this bill would not require beyond five to ten thousand dollars more per annum than has been required to be expended under the old manner of controlling the park.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator from Nebraska has overlooked a provision in section 10, which provides for the appointment of a superintendent of the park, with a salary of $2,500, and fifteen park police, with a salary, I believe, of $900 each. It also provides, in section 9:

That the Secretary of the Interior shall cause to be erected in the park a suitable building to be used as a jail, and also an office for the use of the commissioner, the cost of such buildings not to exceed $5,000.

This section 11 provides:

That the Secretary of War shall detail an officer from the Corps of Engineers, whose duty it shall be to survey and lay out suitable roads in said park and select the proper location for bridges therein, &c.

That would entail quite an additional expense.

Mr. MANDERSON. Over what we have expended heretofore? I think not.

Mr. VEST. May I say a word?

Mr. MANDERSON. Certainly.

Mr. VEST. An amendment which I had the honor to submit to the sundry civil bill increases the appropriation made for the Yellowstone National Park as it was made by the House of Representatives in the bill now pending before the Senate, reported yesterday, from $20,000 to $40,000, so that the whole amount of the increase under this amendment, which I made up on an estimate, the very lowest that could be made by consultation with the Secretary of the Interior, was $20,000.

Now, I hold in my hand the report of the military officer who was made the acting superintendent of the park by the amendment to the sundry civil bill passed against my opposition and the Senate's opposition at the last session of Congress, and here is his estimate. Captain Harris says under the present management $200,000 will be required. We have now a company of cavalry located in the park, stationed at different points in it. Instead of fifteen assistant superintendents and one superintendent there is a company of cavalry with its officers in different parts of the park, and doing no earthly good in regard to its preservation.

Mr. BUTLER. But this bill provides also for the sending of soldiers to the park upon a requisition by the Secretary of the Interior on the Secretary of War.

Mr. VEST. That has been in the law since 1872; it was in the original act. Whenever marauders upon the park defy the whole power of the superintendent and his assistants, and difficulties occur there, as they have time and again, then the Secretary of the Interior, who has charge exclusively of the park under the original act, can make a requisition on the Secretary of War for troops. That has always been the law in regard to it.

Mr. BUTLER. But that, I say, might be an additional expense. Then I would call the attention of the Senator from Nebraska to section 8, which provides:

SEC. 8. That all costs and expenses arising in cases under this act and properly chargeable to the United States shall be certified by the commissioner to the Department of Justice, and, if approved by the proper officers of that Department, shall be paid by the marshal of the United States for the Territory of Wyoming, as other such costs in the United States courts.

I should like to inquire if any estimate or calculation has been made by which we can arrive at what the probable costs in those cases will be.

Mr. MANDERSON. I have said to the Senator from South Carolina that I do not believe the running expenses of this park will be increased more than somewhere between five and ten thousand dollars per annum by the passage of this bill over what the expenses of the park have been each year since the year 1872.

The changes are these: We still maintain a superintendent at the park. We increase his salary $500 per annum. We increase the number of police from ten at $900 to fifteen at $900 each. We provide for a commissioner, who shall act as magistrate, with a salary of $2,000 a year. That is all the increase there is in force. The expenditure for a suitable building, to be used as a jail and an office for the use of this magistrate or commissioner, at an expense of not to exceed $5,000, is not an annual incident of expenditure, but when once spent it will be all, perhaps, that will be required so long as the park shall be maintained; and I suggest to the Senator from South Carolina that if we could get at the actual cost of maintaining during the last year the company of cavalry ordered there by the Secretary of War, at the request of the Secretary of the Interior, we should find, probably, computing the cost of maintaining these troops, the cost of their transportation, the cost of the erection of barracks for their protection, that the Yellowstone Park had cost far more during the present fiscal year than any year since it has been maintained as a reservation.

Now, as to what will be the costs or the expenses incident to trials that shall arise in cases under this act I do not see how it is possible for any one to make an estimate. I have no idea that it will be a very large sum. The number of those who depredate is not very great. Most of the violations or offenses will be of a minor character.

But this is the present difficulty: Here is a part of the public domain of this country in which a man to-day may commit any misdemeanor, or any crime even to the extent of murder, and there is not the power in any court in this country to punish him. He can not be arrested and placed on trial; there is no court before which he can be taken. I suggest to the Senator from South Carolina that in the presence of the fact that from six to ten thousand people every year go to visit this wonderful place—the most wonderful in the world—it is right that they should have protection, and that there should be that character of protection which comes from the speedy punishment of offenses committed. While I do not believe the cost would be much, yet however great it might be, I would be in favor of the Congress of the United States affording that protection to life and property, and not higgling over the few dollars it might cost.

Mr. BUTLER. If the Senator will pardon me for interrupting him just there, let me say that if he brought forward a measure which would establish a full-fledged government in the Yellowstone Park, protecting the rights of all the citizens, or inhabitants, or residents, or whatever you choose to call them within that park, properly guarded and protected, I do not know that I should object to it. What I do object to is that extraordinary powers, certainly unknown in our institutions, should be conferred upon any official in a part of the national territory which appears to be nondescript, as it is not a military reservation, or a Territorial government, or a State, but a parcel of land in those mountains which seems to have no very well defined position. I confess that I am not able to arrive at that point where I am willing to confer these powers on this commissioner and on this superintendent and on the Secretary of the Interior unless it becomes absolutely necessary. I do not believe it is necessary, and I now make this prediction: that in less than five years' time we shall be called upon to appropriate not less than $250,000 for the preservation of this national park, and perhaps a half million.

Mr. MANDERSON. Even if it should be so, I would consider it money exceedingly well expended. Not that this park shall be maintained as a pleasure ground——

Mr. BUTLER. That is a very expensive luxury.

Mr. MANDERSON. I say it is not for that purpose, but it is for the greater and broader purpose of the preservation of these great forests, the existence of which is an absolute necessity to the communities that live along the borders of the great rivers—the Yellowstone, the Missouri, and the Mississippi—that rise in the mountains of this reservation. I place it upon that ground. I might be willing to place it on the mere fact that this is the wonder-land of the world; that within its limits are those great geysers, those deep cañons, those lofty mountains that combine to make it the grandest picture that nature affords on the face of the earth. If the Senator from South Carolina would visit the Yellowstone Park and see them, I think he would come back here a convert to this bill and to the expenditure of even a greater amount of money than he predicts will be necessary to preserve it.

Mr. BUTLER. I have been informed up to this time that the object of these police regulations and of the occupation of the park has been to preserve the great game.

Mr. MANDERSON. That is part of it.

Mr. BUTLER. I am not aware of the fact that the mere presence of a commissioner, a superintendent, and fifteen park police is going to help these enormous cañons and high mountains remaining where they are, and I do not suppose that their being withdrawn from that park would cause these great curiosities to disappear, so that tourists coming from all parts of the world might not see them just as well without the presence of these officers as with it.

I must say that I have not much faith in the preservation of the game. If we would build an insurmountable wall around the Yellowstone Park perhaps we might manage to corral this game within the limits of the park. But I understand that the classes of game that frequent the park are migratory, and when once they cross the designated line I do not know that there is anything that would prevent my friend, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], going and taking a shot at one of them. Therefore I doubt very much if any legislation will enable the Government of the United States to preserve the game. So far as the natural curiosities are concerned, the geysers and mountains and cañons and rivers and glens, they have been there I will not undertake to say how long, and I suppose will remain there till the end of time; and we are expending a vast amount of money, it strikes me, simply to preserve the right of people to go there under certain restrictions.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator from South Carolina will allow me——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] has the floor.

Mr. MANDERSON. I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I simply wish to say to my honorable and distinguished friend from South Carolina, who alludes to game, as he alludes to me very properly as being about the only wild man left in the Senate, that it is a curious fact in natural history which is known everywhere that they have an instinct for finding an asylum where they are not to be harassed that is as strong, whether you call it instinct or intelligence or intellect, as that of human beings. You may take a square in this town or a garden where the birds are never allowed to be disturbed, and you will find a large number of birds there to-day carrying on the operations which their nature teaches them how to do. The same is true in respect to the great game in the Rocky Mountains. Wherever you can have a territory as large as this Yellowstone Park territory is that is safe against the hunting and pursuing and harrying of these creatures, there they will be, and they will be scarce everywhere else where there is free shooting.

Mr. BUTLER. But, while that may be true, the Senator will certainly not deny the fact that, within certain limits, with the full operation of that law, all the animals can not concentrate in this asylum.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not expect them all to concentrate there.

Mr. BUTLER. The result would be their own extermination.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But I expect that enough of them in that large and wild region where I have been, as I presume my friend has——

Mr. BUTLER. I have not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish he had been there, for then he would feel differently about this business. It is large enough, and has ample scope and verge enough to make an asylum for an indefinite number of years to come for this large game, which would otherwise be entirely extirpated. That is not a matter of profit; I admit the United States is not going to get anything into the Treasury out of it; but in respect to preserving some of those things that belong to the well-ordered consideration of mankind, relics of the past and so on, it is a good thing.

Now when you come to the other part of it in respect of protecting the woods, protecting the geysers, and the most wonderful formations that the water brings up, cooling and running down over the hill sides—formations, if the Senator had only been there he would know from his own personal observation and experience that unless conserved and controlled and watched just as this Capitol has to be watched, made of hard marble, against knocking out chips here and corners there, and so on, the whole beauty that nature builds up there would be entirely destroyed, because it is not adamant that comes out of the water and settles itself with these wonderful colors and wonderful forms. It is something fragile. And the same with the woods, unless you keep disreputable people—I mean vicious people, careless people—from building camp fires in dry times and then starting a fire that destroys all these woods, all of which are of the coniferous kind, and having pitch, &c., in them burn rapidly and are easily destroyed, you will only have a desolate waste there of bare ground, and when you have got that desolate waste of bare ground you will have neither forest nor grass nor anything other than an immeasurable torrent of mud, &c., that the rains and the snows and the thaws bring down into the rivers to go down into the lower regions to vex everybody there.

Therefore it is that it has seemed to me that the efforts of the gentlemen in charge of measures of this kind to conserve and protect that park, as well as the other great headwaters of these great continental streams, in regions where there is no need that farmers or anybody should go—there is room enough for them, but it is not suitable for farming—and keep them as nature has preserved them, to have the waters retained by the forests and going off slowly, and to leave the wonderful beauties of nature as they are, and take care of them, is a good expenditure of the public money.

Mr. MANDERSON. I do not know but that the suggestions of the Senator from South Carolina have been very properly and fully answered by the Senator from Vermont; but I desire to call his attention, as he is desirous of enlightenment on this subject, to the report lately made, printed but two or three days ago, by Captain Harris, of the First Cavalry, United States Army, who has been in charge of the park for the last year. As to whether the geysers can be destroyed by the vandalism of tourists, I commend my friend from South Carolina to this extract:

It may be said without exaggeration that not one of the notable geyser formations in the park has escaped mutilation or defacement in some form. Those that have been most fortunate are covered with lead-pencil inscriptions recording the names of those shallow-minded visitors to whom such a distinction is a pleasure. A lead-pencil mark seems to be a very harmless defacement, but names bearing date of 1880 are still discoverable through the thin deposit of silica, and if this marking should go on unchecked, in a very few years these once beautiful formations will have become unsightly and unattractive objects. At the Upper Geyser Basin names with date of June, 1886, have been chiseled in the solid geyserite so deep that, in the slow process of nature, many years must elapse before this mutilation will be obliterated. Not content with the defacement of the formations, efforts are constantly being made to destroy the geysers themselves by throwing into them sticks, logs of wood, and all sorts of obstructions. The eruptive force of several of the geysers has been totally destroyed by vandalism of this character. The footsteps of the throngs of visitors are wearing away the delicate and lace-like tracery of the silicious deposits, and in a few years the formations surrounding the geysers will present the appearance of the worn pavements of a city street. The willful defacement of these beautiful objects can only be prevented by watchful supervision, supported by the rigid enforcement of lawful penalties. A certain amount of wear and deterioration, incident to the multitude of visitors, is probably unavoidable.

It seems to me this very fully answers the suggestion, the guess rather, of the Senator from South Carolina. We have here an intelligent officer of the Army familiar with the facts who says to us that this vandalism is proceeding to the destruction of these great curiosities that attract the intelligent men of the world. I was greatly astonished when there two years ago to see the number of foreigners, intelligent Englishmen, Germans, and Frenchmen who visit the Yellowstone Park, and who having seen the rest of the world, give it the palm as being the greatest collection of wonders that there is anywhere in the world within the same extent of territory.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Mr. President, the letter which my colleague read from Mr. Hague, of the Yellowstone Park survey, seems to give his reasons fully why this park should be increased, but none why it should be diminished, in its area. That was one point to which I called the attention of my colleague, and which does not seem to have been satisfactorily answered.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask my colleague whether he did not hear me explain why?

Mr. VAN WYCK. I did hear, but the statement made was not satisfactory to me.

Mr. MANDERSON. It may not have been satisfactory, but I attempted to answer the inquiry. I feared that my colleague did not hear me on account of being at the time engaged in something else.

Mr. VAN WYCK. In the letter on this matter Mr. Hague says:

For the purposes for which the park was set aside the present area is far too small.

And then he mentions the reasons why this park should be increased as a home for the animals roaming there and as a protection to the timber. That is the argument. Now, it seems that while this park has been increased on the south and the east by this bill, it has been diminished on the north; and that point, even with the explanation of my colleague, I do not fully understand.

Mr. INGALLS. What is the enlarged area in square miles?

Mr. VAN WYCK. I ask my colleague to give an answer. What is the area in square miles, the Senator from Kansas asks?

Mr. MANDERSON. It extends east a distance of about 70 miles in width, and south a distance of about 20 miles in width.

Mr. INGALLS. What would be the area in square miles with the enlarged boundaries?

Mr. MANDERSON. I can not give the present area in square miles. It would be about 70 by 50, I think.

Mr. GEORGE. What is the area? I did not hear the Senator.

Mr. MANDERSON. With this addition it would be, I think, about 70 miles by 50.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Now, Mr. President, the Senator says that he deemed it advisable that this park should all be within the limits of one Territory. Certainly there can be no force in that proposition, for all these Territories are under the control of the Congress of the United States, and under the control of its laws passed by Congress, and it is competent for Congress to put that part of this park within the Territory of Montana under the control of the Territory of Idaho, or of Wyoming, where most of the territory of the park is located.

Mr. INGALLS. I understood that the scheme and design of this bill were to withdraw the park practically from Territorial control and make a separate government for it. That being the case, the idea that it is necessary to make its limits coextensive or commensurate with the boundaries of any existing Territory necessarily must be fallacious.

Mr. VAN WYCK. That is as I stated. That was the point I desired to make when I said that the position of my colleague was not satisfactory on that subject, because the reason given in substance, as explained by the Senator from Kansas, did not exist, and there was no obstacle or barrier in the way of the Government having full control of this country, whether it lies partly in one or partly in another of the Territories of the United States.

Mr. INGALLS. It can be withdrawn from both.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Yes; just as completely as if it were a military reservation, and I take it for granted there can be no reason such as that stated by my colleague, because the control of the United States is absolute, is complete, and by this bill with its extraordinary powers it is having absolute control as against any of the Territories, which are only dependencies of the United States. So there must be some other reason outside of the knowledge of this committee.

Therefore it was that I remembered the contest which has been here year after year to introduce a railroad into the Yellowstone Park. I remembered that it had been antagonized year after year, and it has been stated that all the railroad company asked was a short distance of this park upon the north; and, remarkable as it may appear, this reservation is not circumscribed except upon the north, where it has been claimed that a railroad ought to enter, against the wishes of Congress and in derogation of the rights and privileges supposed to be given to this park.

Mr. MANDERSON. Does not my colleague know, as a matter of fact, that as one of the Committee on Territories it became my duty to make a minority report protesting against the building of the proposed railroad? Does he not also know the fact that this projected road proposed to enter the park for a distance of about 12 miles from its northern limits?

Mr. VAN WYCK. I know the fact stated by my colleage, but I am fearing that even so vigilant a committee as this have been overreached by the designs of this railroad company, unwittingly, of course, and I desire to guard them as well as the Senate of the United States against this covert attack on the part of this railroad company. That is what I desire.

Evidently there was a reason for changing the northern line for some purpose. The lines of these Territories remain as now, and certainly there was some reason, at the inception, when the lines of this park were first established, why it should have been run north of the south line of Montana. It was deemed advisable that that strip, whether it is a mile and a half or three miles, lying in Montana, should belong to the Yellowstone Park. It has been sacred from that time until now. It was not placed there inadvertently. There was an object. It was believed that it required that much of Montana Territory to make this park perfect and complete, and now there should be some other reason for curtailing the northern boundary when this letter says the area is by far too small. There should be some other reason for diminishing it on the north than the fact that the park lies partly in one and partly in another of the Territories of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska will pause. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair will lay before the Senate the unfinished business of yesterday, being the bill (S. 2578) to prohibit members of Congress from acting as attorneys or employés for railroad companies holding charters or having received grant of lands or pecuniary aid from the United States. The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] to perfect the bill.

Mr. VEST. I move to lay that bill aside temporarily, to finish the consideration of the park bill.

Mr. BECK. I object to any postponement of the bill. I suppose the motion has to be put to a vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to lay aside informally can only be adopted by unanimous consent.

Mr. VEST. Then I move to postpone the unfinished business until Monday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on that motion.

Mr. BECK. I call for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], who is not in his seat, but understanding from his remarks a while ago that he is in favor of the park bill, I vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. HARRIS. I understood the yea-and-nay vote called was on the passage of the Yellowstone Park bill. I withdraw my vote and announce my pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS].

Mr. BERRY. My colleague [Mr. JONES, of Arkansas] is generally paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE]. If my colleague were here he would vote "nay."

Mr. FAIR. I am paired.

Mr. COKE. I announce that my colleague [Mr. MAXEY] is paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES].

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—24.

Bowen,	Cullom,	Jones of Nevada,	Pugh,
Brown,	Farwell,	McMillan,	Ransom,
Call,	Frye,	Manderson,	Sabin,
Cameron,	Gorman,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Sawyer,
Cockrell,	Gray,	Palmer,	Teller,
Conger,	Hampton,	Platt,	Vest.

NAYS—20.

Allison,	Coke,	Morgan,	Van Wyck,
Beck,	Dolph,	Morrill,	Walthall,
Berry,	George,	Saulsbury,	Whitthorne,
Blair,	Hawley,	Sherman,	Wilson of Iowa,
Butler,	Ingalls,	Spooner,	Wilson of Md.

ABSENT—32.

Aldrich,	Eustis,	Jones of Arkansas,	Payne,
Blackburn,	Evarts,	Jones of Florida,	Plumb,
Camden,	Fair,	Kenna,	Riddleberger,
Chace,	Gibson,	McPherson,	Sewell,
Cheney,	Hale,	Mahone,	Stanford,
Colquitt,	Harris,	Maxey,	Vance,
Dawes,	Harrison,	Miller,	Voorhees,
Edmunds,	Hoar,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Williams.

So the motion to postpone was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the motion to proceed to the consideration of the Yellowstone Park bill.

Mr. BECK. I call for the yeas and nays on that. I desire to ask a question. I understand the Senate by the vote just taken has displaced the railroad attorneys bill altogether, and that it now stands at the foot of the special orders instead of holding its place at the head. Am I correct in that?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that that is the effect of the vote. It places the bill on the Calendar subject to motion, like any other bill.

Mr. BECK. I now desire to give notice that on Monday and every other day until a fair vote is had I shall, whenever I can get the floor, make a motion to take it up. The Senate have seen fit to displace it and put it at the bottom of the Calendar, and now it shall be voted on.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from Kentucky will allow appropriation bills to intervene, as they are ready. On Monday I shall ask the Senate to proceed with the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. BECK. I have no doubt that this bill will be antagonized in every form and from every quarter. I shall move every day to take it up.

Mr. ALLISON. Do I understand the Senator from Kentucky to assume that because I suggest an appropriation bill, of which I gave notice several days ago, I mean to antagonize his bill?

Mr. BECK. I understand the Senator from Iowa agreed to see me through in regard to my bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not like to be quite committed to the extent the Senator from Kentucky supposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Yellowstone Park bill.

Mr. BECK. I desire the yeas and nays on that.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] generally. If he were present, I should vote "nay," and I suppose he would vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BERRY. My colleague [Mr. JONES, of Arkansas] informs me that he is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE]. My colleague, if present, would vote "nay."

Mr. CHACE. I was not aware that I was paired; but if that is the case I transfer my pair to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MITCHELL], and I vote "yea."

Mr. HOAR. I am paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES], as I was also on the previous vote postponing the attorneys bill until Monday. If I had been present and voted I should have voted "nay" on that test question to postpone.

The result was announced—yeas 35, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—35.

Aldrich,	Cullom,	Hawley,	Sabin,
Allison,	Eustis,	Ingalls,	Sherman,
Bowen,	Evarts,	Jones of Nevada,	Spooner,
Brown,	Farwell,	Manderson,	Stanford,
Call,	Frye,	Morrill,	Teller,
Cameron,	Gorman,	Palmer,	Vance,
Chace,	Gray,	Platt,	Vest,
Cockrell,	Hale,	Pugh,	Williams.
Conger,	Hampton,	Ransom,

NAYS—17.

Beck,	Coke,	Morgan,	Wilson of Iowa,
Berry,	Dolph,	Saulsbury,	Wilson of Md.
Blackburn,	George,	Van Wyck,
Blair,	McMillan,	Walthall,
Butler,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Whitthorne,

ABSENT—24.

Camden,	Gibson,	Kenna,	Payne,
Cheney,	Harris,	McPherson,	Plumb,
Colquitt,	Harrison,	Mahone,	Riddleberger,
Dawes,	Hoar,	Maxey,	Sawyer,
Edmunds,	Jones of Arkansas,	Miller,	Sewell,
Fair,	Jones of Florida,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Voorhees.

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2436) to amend sections 2474 and 2475 of the Revised Statutes of the United States setting apart a certain tract of land lying near the headwaters of the Yellowstone River as a public park.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Mr. President, I had stated all I desired on the question of the invasion of this territory by the withdrawal of the northern line of this park to the south, but I desire now to make a suggestion as to another branch of this case. I desire that Congress shall not repeat the injustice it did to some of its citizens in the establishment of the park in California when they were ruthlessly legislated out of their rights. I refer to the Yosemite Park. Therefore it is in case there should be any settlers now in the country proposed to be absorbed by this bill as a part of the Yellowstone Park, I desire that their rights shall be fully respected, and hence I propose this amendment:

Provided, That any settlers on the territory newly added to said park by this bill shall be entitled to all the rights and privileges now given by any of the present laws of the United States and Territories.

Mr. MANDERSON. That amendment meets with my hearty approval. There are no settlers in fact upon the territory proposed to be added, but in the event that there should be any I am heartily in accord with the proposed amendment; but I should like my colleague to fix a time, say the 1st of January of this year—January, 1887—because pending the bill in the two Houses parties not proper settlers might come in.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I will accept the suggestion, and say so on the passage of this bill.

Mr. MANDERSON. The trouble is, then, that pending the bill in the two Houses parties might enter.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Yes; but if an honest settler roaming through that country and looking for a home honestly settles, why should he not be protected? The date of the passage of the bill would be the proper time.

Mr. MANDERSON. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). At what point in the bill does the Senator propose that his amendment shall be inserted?

Mr. VAN WYCK. As a new section, instead of a proviso.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 12. That any settler on the territory newly added to said park by this bill shall be entitled to all the rights and privileges now given by any of the present laws of the United States and Territories.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I desire to call the attention of my colleague to another matter in this bill, which possibly was an oversight on the part of the committee. The purpose is that the timber shall be protected——

Mr. MANDERSON. Before my colleague passes to that point, I suggest to him that by the amendment as just passed by the Senate there is no limit of time, even the date of the passage of the act. I understood that to be his suggestion. So I ask unanimous consent to insert into the amendment already adopted, after the word "till," the words "who shall have settled upon the public domain before the passage of this act."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment just adopted will be so modified, if there be no objection. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Now, I desire to call the attention of my colleague to the words contained on page 10, section 10:

And provided also, That no growing timber in said park shall be cut—

That, of course, is plain, no timber shall be cut—

either for building purposes or for firewood, nor shall hay be cut, except by the permission, in writing, of the superintendent of said park, specifying the place at which said timber or hay may be cut, and the quantity thereof.

I propose to strike out the words "said timber" there, because it is the purpose of the bill that no timber shall be cut.

Mr. MANDERSON. It may be——

Mr. VAN WYCK. I think the word "timber" has been introduced without judgment in the last clause.

Mr. MANDERSON. Perhaps so.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator does not want to prevent the cutting of timber for firewood, does he?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Yes, sir. You specially provide—

No growing timber in said park shall be cut, either for building purposes or for firewood, nor shall hay be cut, except by the permission, in writing, of the superintendent of said park, specifying the place at which said timber or hay may be cut.

It means that hay may be cut by permission.

Mr. PLATT. Is it not the meaning that timber may be cut for firewood, and also hay?

Mr. TELLER. It seems to me that if we are to build a jail there and erect some other buildings for the use of the Government, the Government ought to be allowed to cut timber for that purpose at least. It will be practically impossible to carry timber in there. It could only be done at very great expense. Not much of a jail can be built for $5,000, as it is provided it shall be in section 9, if the timber is to be transported from abroad into the park. I think it should be limited.

Mr. DAWES. There is fallen timber enough in the park to last fifty years.

Mr. TELLER. The Government does not want to build a jail out of fallen timber.

Mr. DAWES. They can not get any better timber by cutting it down. The timber that falls there is by acres. There is a clean sweep of all the timber there is lying there, and it has lain there without decay for years. There is no more occasion to cut timber there than there is to carry coals to Newcastle.

Mr. TELLER. If the friends of this bill are satisfied to confine the timber to be used to dead timber, I have no objection; but it seems to me that would be a mistake.

Mr. MANDERSON. The timber referred to can hardly be called dead timber. There is hardly any timber in the park that comes under that designation. It is timber that because of fires has been so burned and scorched upon the outside that it is likely to be destroyed, and yet is available for building purposes; and many of the houses, I think all of the houses erected in the park for hotel purposes, are built of that sort of timber. So it is not necessary, I take it, to cut any of the growing timber in the park. I think the verbal suggestion made by my colleague a proper one.

Mr. VEST. I do not understand that amendment at all. The bill reads, as amended by the committee:

And provided also, That no growing timber in said park shall be cut—

That is very plain—

either for building purposes or for firewood, nor shall hay be cut, except by the permission, in writing, of the superintendent of said park, specifying the place at which said timber or hay may be cut, and the quantity thereof.

The meaning of the committee unquestionably was that no person for any purpose should cut any growing timber or any hay there without the express permission of the superintendent. There are hundreds of acres of fallen timber there, because when one of these forest fires starts it is almost irrepressible, and it destroys for miles and miles. This provision ought not to be amended or stricken out. It is one of the most important in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 10, line 24, after the word "which," strike out the words "said timber or;" so as to read:

Specifying the place at which hay may be cut, and the quantity thereof.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. BUTLER. Upon that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Mr. President, I desire to say, without entering into a discussion of the merits of this bill, that I can not vote for it. This reservation embraces certain natural curiosities and points of interest which will be visited from time to time by citizens of our own country from every State in the Union and every part of the continent. Strangers from other countries will visit this park. Under the regulations already established power enough is vested in the Secretary of the Interior to protect the reservation so far as the public interests are concerned.

The bill imposes restrictions and limitations and prescribes restraints and commits authority to individuals in provisions which I do not believe to be wholesome. I therefore shall vote against the bill.

Mr. GEORGE. I presume, Mr. President, this bill will be passed, as upon a test vote it had a majority. I do not propose to discuss it at any length, but merely to record my dissent and opposition to the bill.

I am opposed to setting aside 3,500 square miles of the public domain, almost twice the size of the State of Delaware, nearly as large as the State of Connecticut, about three times as large as the State of Rhode Island, as expressed in the bill—I read from it now—to be "dedicated and set apart as a park or pleasure ground for the benefit and enjoyment of the people of the United States."

I do not think, in fact I know, that ninety-nine one-hundredths of the people of the United States, I may say nine hundred and ninety-nine one-thousandths of the people of the United States, will never have the privilege, or rather the power, to enjoy this pleasure ground. It will cost more money to reach it and to enjoy the sights which are to be seen there than nine hundred and ninety-nine men in one thousand of our people will ever be able to have to spend in that way. I am opposed, therefore, to the end which the bill seeks to attain.

I am equally opposed to the means by which this end is sought to be attained. I believe that it is in violation of the plain provisions of our Constitution in one or two particulars. In the first place, the dangerous power is conferred upon the Secretary of the Interior to enact criminal laws for the infraction of which citizens of the United States are liable to be proceeded against criminally, fined, and imprisoned. I believe that all the legislative power which the United States possesses is vested in Congress. I do not believe that it is in the power of Congress to abdicate the performance of duties arising under that investiture of power and confer it upon an executive officer. If we had the power, I think it would be very unwise to exercise it. I am unwilling that any one single man in this country shall possess the royal prerogative of making laws for the infraction of which fine and imprisonment are imposed.

There is another objection, I think, to this bill upon constitutional grounds, the one urged by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER]. The bill declares that certain acts done in violation of the provisions of this measure shall be a misdemeanor. It has been stated here that misdemeanors are not crimes. The very first thing that the student learns in reading criminal law is that crimes are divided into felonies and misdemeanors. Felonies, under the old common-law definition, were such offenses as were punishable with death and the forfeiture of the goods of the party. Misdemeanors were all other crimes, all other violations of law for which a penal sanction was provided in the statute. At common law the very high crime of perjury was but a misdemeanor. Under the present legislation of the States of this Union and of Great Britain nine-tenths of the criminal offenses are those which are merely misdemeanors.

So the clause of the Constitution read by my friend from South Carolina, which guarantees to every party who is a defendant in a criminal prosecution the right of trial by jury, in my opinion, is violated by the provisions of this bill. There are many provisions in State laws allowing summary convictions without a jury, but which are held to be constitutional upon the ground suggested by the Senator from South Carolina, that although the party was subject in the first instance to a summary trial without a jury, yet he was entitled, if he saw fit to exercise that right, to an appeal to a court in which he was to be tried by a jury.

Mr. MANDERSON. I should like to interrupt the Senator from Mississippi long enough to call his attention to a bill which received his hearty support and his vote at this session of Congress. I submit to him that if the provision that permits the Secretary of the Interior to make rules and regulations which shall have the force of law, violations of which shall be punished, is an infraction of the constitutional provision he refers to, then certainly a provision in the interstate-commerce bill, that received his vote, is a similar infraction, for it provides that the commission appointed by the act may from time to time make general rules exempting "such designated common carrier" in special cases from the operation of the act; and when such exceptions shall have been made and published, they shall, until changed by the commission or by law, have like force and effect as though the same had been specified in the section. Then comes the penal part of the section, that any common carrier who shall violate the provisions of that section of the act which includes the rules shall be liable to the person or persons against whom such excessive charge was made for all damages occasioned by such violation.

It seems to me that if this case is an abrogation of the right of legislation that I admit is in the Congress of the United States, the other was equally a violation of that right.

Mr. GEORGE. If the Senator was right in supposing that the provision in the interstate-commerce bill was like the provision in this bill he would only convict me of an inconsistency, and not disprove the force of the argument which I am making. But the provisions are dissimilar. In this case there is an express provision declaring—and I call the attention of the Senate to that—the violation of a rule laid down by the Secretary of the Interior to be a misdemeanor, which is a crime, declaring that violation to be a misdemeanor and punishable by fine and imprisonment. In the interstate-commerce bill, while rules and regulations are authorized to be made by the commission, there is not a single provision which declares the violation of any of those rules to be a misdemeanor and punishable.

The Senate will observe that when the Senator from Nebraska undertook to convict me of an inconsistency in that behalf he had to rely upon the inference which he drew from words substantially such as these: "any violations of the provisions of this act;" and in order to make that fit the case he had to assert that "any violations of the provisions of this act" meant not only a violation of the provisions of the statute but also a violation of the rules and regulations which were to be framed by the commission. So I stand without the conviction of inconsistency, which would amount to nothing if it existed. The interstate-commerce bill is no precedent for this bill.

I did not intend to say so much, but since the Senator from Nebraska challenges me by interruption I shall read and comment a little upon that, I admit, somewhat antiquated instrument; but it possesses some interest, at least to the archæologist if it does not to the legislator, the Constitution of the United States:

> In all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed.

Is this a criminal prosecution? There are but two kinds of prosecutions which can occur in a court of justice; one is criminal and the other civil. A civil suit is an action brought by one citizen against another for the redress of a private wrong; and that is all there is in it. A criminal prosecution is a prosecution instituted on behalf and in the name of a State or government for the violation of a law imposed by that State.

I said when I first got up that the Senator was mistaken in supposing that misdemeanors were not crimes. Every prosecution for a misdemeanor is criminal prosecution, and the redress had is, as in all criminal cases, the punishment of the offender. The essential test between a criminal prosecution and a civil prosecution is that in the one the end of the suit is to get redress, to get damages, to get compensation for the wrong which the defendant, a private person, has done to the plaintiff, and when you get to the measure of that wrong you have got all you can get. In a criminal prosecution the object is not to get redress; the fine or other penalty is not inflicted with a view of compensating anybody; it is inflicted as a penalty to punish the party for doing the act. For instance, if under this bill a man shall in this park shoot a bird worth 5 cents or 10 cents he is to be fined $100 and imprisoned for three months. That shows the essential difference between the two. One is punitive; one is intended to punish what has been done, not gauged by the amount of damage done, but for the purpose of deterring others from acting in the same way.

So, if we are to read the Constitution of the United States in the plain language in which it is written, if we are to understand the English common-law and the American common law as everybody understands it, and interpret this bill as including crimes, among which is perjury, including among crimes the class of misdemeanors, and as this declares that all infractions of this act are misdemeanors, I think I have made it out beyond controversy that that provision of the bill is in violation of constitutional rights.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I am very anxious to secure a vote one way or the other on the bill. Therefore I shall not detain the Senate at any length. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] is opposed to the bill in any shape, as he very frankly states.

Mr. GEORGE. That is true; in any shape.

Mr. VEST. He is opposed to this park being retained there as a park in any form whatever.

Mr. GEORGE. Except for the preservation of natural curiosities.

Mr. VEST. If we are to take the unanimous opinion of all disinterested persons who have visited the park, and of the captain of cavalry sent there to take the place of the superintendent, we must believe that without some form of government as provided in this bill those curiosities can not be preserved at all. Captain Harris states in his report, which I have before me, that persons are going there now and mutilating the cones around the geysers, which are really beautiful and artistic works of nature, for the purpose of carrying off specimens to the different portions of the Union.

More than ten thousand persons visited the park during the last summer, and unless there is some surveillance over the movements of tourists all the objects of beauty in the park will inevitably be mutilated and destroyed. It is a singular fact, known to every one who has been in the Yellowstone Park, that by writing in a pencil mark, as Captain Harris says in his report, the name of any person, in an incredible space of time, as the silica is transparent which you can see is formed above it, in a day or two or a week afterwards the visitor comes back, and by cutting or chipping out that block he carries home a perpetuation of his own name for his family, done by nature itself. With the thirst for immortality and publicity on the part of the American people at large, we can very well see how it is manifestly impossible to prevent them from carrying away, if within their power, these rare and wonderful specimens, perpetuating, as I have said, their own autographs.

But the principal objection of the Senator from Mississippi is the constitutional one. I say that the law-writers and the courts as to State constitutions having identically the provision of the Constitution of the United States, using the terms "crimes" and "criminal proceedings," construe that provision not to apply to misdemeanors. In the last work upon the right of trial by jury, Proffatt on Trial by Jury, the author says:

> It is evident that a jury trial can not be demanded in every case where a person is punished for a criminal offense. Such was not the practice at any time at the common law and before the adoption of our Constitution.
>
> For an offense rendering a person liable to "infamous punishment" he is entitled to a jury. Then the question arises, what is "infamous?" Generally, it is such as will entail, as a primitive consequence after sentence, the forfeiture of certain political rights, such as the right to vote.
>
> Not all crimes—

He says—

> which were felonies at common law must be tried by a jury. Petit larceny was a felony at common law, yet it has been punished in England and here without a jury trial in a summary manner by a magistrate.

Mr. MANDERSON. And he cites two New York authorities in favor of that proposition.

Mr. VEST. Yes; a number of them. But the Senator from Mississippi says that this is a delegation of the legislative power by Congress to a commissioner. Under the internal-revenue law such power is delegated to a commissioner. I read a section of the statutes in which the power is given to a magistrate to have a seaman seized and punished in a summary manner.

Mr. GEORGE. For what?

Mr. VEST. For refusing to go on board his ship.

Mr. GEORGE. That was to carry out his contract.

Mr. VEST. I suppose it was in violation of his contract; it is a penalty, it is punitory. They have had the right to inflict a punishment upon him of six months' imprisonment in jail. That has been a clause of the Revised Statutes for fifteen years; yes, for twenty-five years.

Mr. BUTLER. May I ask the Senator from Missouri a question?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask him, if, in his experience as a lawyer, he has ever known an instance in any State in this Union where trial by jury has been denied unless the party tried in that way has had the right of appeal?

Mr. VEST. I undertake to say that there are not half a dozen States in this Union where a police judge does not inflict this punishment without a jury, and I challenge any contradiction of that statement.

Mr. MORGAN. Not without the right of appeal.

Mr. HOAR. Not without the right of appeal.

Mr. VEST. In New Yory city prisoners are taken before a police judge and punished by imprisonment in the jail for months, and even for a year at a time, without a trial by a jury.

Mr. BUTLER. Would not one of those prisoners be entitled to the right of appeal? That is the point.

Mr. VEST. What has that, logically, to do with trial by jury?

Mr. BUTLER. It has this to do with it: You not only deny the party accused in the Yellowstone Park trial by jury but you deny the right of appeal. I submit it has a great deal to do with the question; it is the very gist of it.

Mr. VEST. I can not see how, logically, the right of appeal to a superior court has anything in the world to do with trial by jury.

Mr. MANDERSON. If the Senator from Missouri will permit me, I will call his attention to the provisions of the statute pertaining to the police court of the District of Columbia. This is the provision as to jurisdiction:

The police court shall have original and exclusive jurisdiction of all offenses against the United States committed in the District not deemed capital or otherwise infamous crimes; that is to say, of all simple assaults and batteries, and all other misdemeanors not punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary; and of all offenses against the laws and ordinances of the District in force therein.

Then the law goes on to provide in section 1064 of the Revised Statutes for the District of Columbia:

Prosecutions in the police court shall be by information under oath, without indictment by grand jury or trial by petit jury.

It seems to me, if the Senator from Mississippi is correct, that is plainly an unconstitutional provision as he construes the Constitution.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me to call his attention to a high authority?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. VEST. Yes, sir.

Mr. GEORGE. In opposition to the statement made by the Senator from South Carolina, the Senator from Missouri has just said that the appeal has nothing to do with it. I read from Bishop on Criminal Procedure, section 893, as follows:

This constitutional right—

Referring to trial by jury—must necessarily, in some degree, be under legislative regulation and control, though the substance of it can not be impaired. Thus: Providing preliminary steps to a jury trial is not unconstitutional; as, if a statute directs a trial without jury, then permits to convicted defendants an unobstructed appeal to a court proceeding de novo by jury, it does not violate the Constitution by erecting this vestibule to pass through to the jury beyond. If, on the other hand, one does not choose to appeal, or to prosecute his appeal, after it is taken, he waives his right to a jury trial.

So the statement of the Senator from South Carolina is vindicated by the highest authority known in this country on criminal law.

Mr. VEST. Then the position of the Senator is that you can not appeal except to a court where you can have a jury?

Mr. GEORGE. Of course.

Mr. VEST. There are courts, and plenty of them, to which there are appeals taken where there is no jury trial. In the city of New York a police judge inflicts the punishment, and if he inflicts a fine below a certain amount there is no appellate jurisdiction.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. I wish to call the Senator's attention to a very important fact to which his attention has not been called, I presume. There is a difference between the language of the constitutions of the several States under which these decisions are made and the language of the Constitution of the United States. In most of the States the language is, "The right of trial by jury shall remain inviolate;" and the courts have held that the word "remain" refers to an antecedent and existing state of facts or law; or, in other words, that in determining the right of trial by jury under provisions of that sort they refer to England; and if it can be shown that in England the party was not entitled to the right of trial by jury, then as the word "remain" is used, guaranteeing simply the existence of a state of law which was already in existence, it did not apply. But the language which I read from the Constitution of the United States is very different from that.

Mr. VEST. I thought that the law had been read here from this elementary work sufficiently to show that this authority covers the very point now made by the Senator from Mississippi:

In the constitutions of other States there are no express provisions for the trial in criminal cases beyond the general provisions securing the trial forever inviolate, which, of course, gives it in all civil and criminal cases.

* * * * * * *

It is evident that a jury trial can not be demanded in every case where a person is punished for a criminal offense.

Nothing can be more distinct than that. The author proceeds:

It would be manifestly impracticable. There must be some speedy, summary way to deal with a large class of minor offenses.

Not long ago Chief-Justice Waite addressed a letter to Mr. W. A. Phillips, an attorney in this city, who has taken great interest in the Yellowstone Park, in which he expresses his opinion in regard to the identical bill now before the Senate. Chief-Justice Waite has been to that park and is familiar with it.

Mr. GEORGE. Whose opinion are you reading?

Mr. VEST. That of Chief-Justice Waite, of the Supreme Court of the United States. He says:

I have read the Yellowstone Park bill, and it seems to me to meet the requirements of the case. To accomplish what is needed there must be a government, and I do not see how any less than is provided for can be made sufficient. If it is worth while to have the park, it is worth while to see that it is preserved for the purposes for which it was intended. It should either be abolished altogether and be permitted to go into the hands of private owners for the purpose of extortion, or else it should be kept as a national institution and cared for as such.

This opinion does not come from Chief-Justice Waite upon the bench.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri what is the objection of the committee to providing that where the sentence is to an imprisonment there may be an appeal to the district court of the adjacent Territory?

Mr. VEST. I was about to say, in the very next sentence, that so far as an appeal was concerned, I had not the slightest objection to it. But the point of this whole discussion has been the jury trial, and that is equivalent to saying that there shall be no punishment there at all, because it is impossible to get a jury in that park. Nobody is permitted there except tourists and officers of the Government.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator will pardon me for suggesting that if the bill provided that when the sentence of the inferior magistrate was imprisonment there might be, at the discretion of the defendant, an appeal to the district court, that would answer the argument which has been made against the bill, because there they would have a jury trial.

Mr. VEST. I understand not. I understand we commenced the discussion with trial by jury, and now have got on to the appeal. I have no objection to anybody taking an appeal to the district court of Wyoming. If any gentleman opposed to the bill will offer such an amendment, so far as I am individually concerned I shall not oppose it.

Mr. GEORGE. I suppose the object of the Senator from Massachusetts in providing for an appeal is that there may be a jury trial in the court to which the appeal is taken.

Mr. VEST. I understood that the point made against the bill is that it does not provide for a trial by jury as to every misdemeanor in the park, and that is equivalent to having no jurisdiction to try any case summarily; it is equivalent to saying that nobody shall be punished for any misdemeanor in that park at all.

Mr. GEORGE. We agree that in the preliminary trial if an appeal be allowed to a court, the case to be tried de novo there with a jury, jury trial will be secured if there is no onerous or burdensome condition imposed upon the appeal.

Mr. VEST. Speaking for myself, I have not the slightest objection, and never have had, against any provision in the bill that would give the right of appeal on conviction for a misdemeanor; but what I do oppose is the contention that there must be a jury in every trial for a misdemeanor in the park, because in the very nature of things that does away with punishment altogether.

Under the act of 1872 the Secretary of the Interior was authorized to make such rules and regulations as he thought proper, but under that act if a man went in there with an axe and commenced knocking to pieces the cones around Old Faithful or the Queen geyser, all you could do with him was to take him and his axe and put him outside the park, and as soon as he was released he just took another cañon and came in and resumed his operations. That will not do.

As Chief-Justice Waite says, if you propose to have the park at all, you must have a government for it. You must either repeal the act of 1872 and all amendatory acts and throw this whole magnificent reservation, magnificent in the view of natural curiosities and the wonders of nature, back into the public lands, and let the first man who can grab Old Faithful take it for a laundry, and bring in a few Chinamen and commence washing out dirty clothes. It does wash all sorts of cotton in the most effectual manner, but it has a democratic disregard for linen; it tears it to pieces.

Mr. MANDERSON. There is a simple proposition I wish to suggest to the Senator from Missouri. I do not think he has any particular pride in this bill. He desires that which shall be most efficient for the government of the park.

Mr. VEST. That is all.

Mr. MANDERSON. To meet these views I suggest that an amendment be made by adding, in section 7, line 13, after the word "provided," this provision:

Provided, That whereas part of the sentence there shall be punishment by imprisonment, an appeal shall be allowed to the district court having jurisdiction under the second section of this act.

Mr. VEST. I have no objection in the world to that.

Mr. MANDERSON. That, it seems to me, will reach the objections which have been made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been ordered to a third reading and read the third time, before it can be amended the Senate will have to reconsider the vote by which it was ordered to a third reading.

Mr. MANDERSON. I think it can be done by unanimous consent. I do not think there will be any objection to the amendment I propose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to inserting the amendment read by the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will allow me, one I have just written is exactly like his, but I think contains a little more. I propose to insert, after the word "imprisonment," in the thirteenth line of section 5, the words:

Provided, That where the sentence is to imprisonment, the defendant may, if he see fit, appeal therefrom to the district court of Wyoming on recognizing with sufficient sureties to the satisfaction of said commissioner to prosecute said appeal.

Mr. MANDERSON. That is better. I withdraw my proposed amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to inserting the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts in the bill as indicated? The Chair hears none, and it is inserted.

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to hear that part of [the bill read as amended, so that we can understand it.

Mr. VEST. Let the section be read as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The section as amended will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That all hunting or the killing, wounding, or capturing, at any time, of any wild animal or bird, except dangerous animals when it is necessary to prevent them from destroying human life or inflicting an injury, is prohibited within the limits of said park; nor shall any fish be taken out of the waters of the park by means of seines, nets, traps, or by the use of drugs or any explosive substances or compounds, or in any other way than by hook and line. Any person willfully violating the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction, shall be fined for each offense not less than $20 nor more than $100, or by imprisonment for not more than three months, or by both such fine and imprisonment: Provided, That where the sentence is to imprisonment the defendant may, if he see fit, appeal therefrom to the district court of Wyoming on recognizing, with sufficient sureties, to the satisfaction of said commissioners to prosecute said appeal.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I am as anxious as anybody to come to a vote, but some things have been said about this park that I do not choose to allow to go into the RECORD without contradiction. I have not the slightest interest in the world in the park, except as a Senator here and as a citizen of the United States. I have visited it, and I have taken great interest in it, simply because it is the most wonderful region upon this continent.

It has been said here by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] that he was opposed to taking this enormous amount of the public domain out of the public territory. It must be understood that this enormous extent of country, nearly 3,400 square miles, under the provisions of this bill, is utterly useless except for the purposes of a park. I have traveled, not through the entire extent upon the east, but upon the south I have, and upon the south it is a volcanic country, covered everywhere with lava deposits. There are no minerals there, no agricultural resources, no grazing lands. It is simply fit for the purposes of a park and nothing else. Upon the eastern side is the habitat of the large game in the summer months, when they go even above the timber line to escape the flies. But in the winter time comes the great destruction of game, when the snows fall to the extent of 6 or 8 feet, and the skin-hunters and pot-hunters put on their snow-shoes and go in and find the elk and deer parked in the cañons unable to escape, and then they shoot them down at their own pleasure. In one instance of which I happen to know, a man found a band of elk in this condition and with a revolver and knife killed forty-six before he left them. He cached the meat; he put it in under the snow in a cache, and it was there found by one of the assistant superintendents, and all that they could do with the man was to take him outside of the park and turn him loose.

To-day there is no jurisdiction there to punish murder or robbery or any sort of felony. There have been a dozen murders committed in the park, and the criminals have gone unwhipped of justice and unpunished; for the simple reason that there was no power which could punish them. The Territory of Wyoming has claimed jurisdiction there, but in my judgment as a lawyer, without the shadow of a pretense to any such authority. As Chief-Justice Waite says, if we propose to keep the park let us put some law over it. If we propose to destroy it, to allow it to become a portion of the public lands, let us do that by a direct vote. All that is asked here now is simply to give it such government as will prevent crime and protect property, and that is the whole of this bill.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I do not propose to detain the Senate upon this bill. I only wish to say that I am heartily in favor of the general object of the bill. I think that we might very well reserve not only 3,400 square miles, but twice that number for the pleasure and the amusement of the American people now and in future generations. I look forward to the day when cheap transportation and wiser economies than now prevail will enable the great majority of the American people to visit this great natural curiosity, and I take pleasure in doing anything in my power to advance that object and preserve this park for their amusement and pleasure. It is a marvelous natural phenomenon and is doubtless intended by a kind Providence for the observation and the delight of mankind. Its animal life is equally wonderful and curious. We shall be false to our duty and the great trust reposed in us to use the public powers intrusted to us not only for the benefit of the present but also of future generations by preserving both for their delight and their study.

But it seems to me that the provisions in this bill which have been criticised are justly subject to condemnation. I know that the Constitution has been refined away until there is no intelligible rational interpretation to be put upon it if we follow the decisions of the courts. The Constitution says in very plain terms that the trial of all crimes shall be by jury. It is quite manifest that all punitive offenses are crimes. The reasoning which has been submitted here of courts deciding that an offense which was punishable, which confined a person and deprived him of property, was not a crime, has no force, and there is no reason in it. There can be no such distinction. Crime consists in the wrong and in the punishment, but when we go further and see how it is that the person who is to be tried for a crime shall be arrested and held for it, we find that—

No person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the militia.

But he may be arrested for anything that is not an infamous crime and held to answer. The crime must be tried and punished by a jury. The person may be arrested and held to answer.

I do not see why the authority of a magistrate in this park, and the authority of a judicial officer with power to punish, with power to hold answerable to the jurisdiction of the district court, and with special authority, might not have been inserted in the bill. I think that the liberty of the citizen should be guarded everywhere. The jurisdiction of the courts should be extended over this park, and there should be a committing magistrate there, and bail in a large amount should be required; and if necessary there should be an immediate trial and the person transported to such place as is convenient within the district for his trial.

I think the interstate-commerce bill is quite as much subject to this criticism as this bill. No legislative power can be delegated, no judicial power can be conferred on any person who is not a judicial person in the sense of the Constitution; and no judicial power can be exercised except subject to the guarantees of personal right contained in the Constitution. But why talk about the Constitution? It is a forgotten instrument. The Constitution and the law is the varying opinion of men clothed with judicial power. Whether capable of reasoning or not, whether ignorant or not, whether honest or not, their opinions and their actions are the constitution and the law under our present system and our present habits of thought. I only wished to present these thoughts as the impressions which occur to me. The interests of the public peace, the interests of the preservation of this park, might all be preserved by a provision of the character I have mentioned. I think it is a subterfuge to say that a man may be punished for a crime without a jury, and give him an appeal to some other court. What becomes of the Constitution, that he shall not be "deprived of his liberty without due process of law," and of the fact that due process of law is that process issued subject to the provisions of the organic law?

I shall vote for the bill, and should like to vote for it with such an amendment in it; but this is one of the refinements which take away the right of the citizen and authorize his punishment by tribunals which have no power, and ought not to have any power to deprive him of his life, his liberty, or his property. Still I shall vote for it, notwithstanding these objections, inasmuch as if courts do their duty they will protect the citizen against any abuse of power under it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. MCMILLAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been already ordered on the passage of the bill.

The Secretary called the roll.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Before the vote is announced, and contrary to all rule, I wish to ask unanimous consent that in section 10, in line 16, the phraseology may be changed so as to describe technically and properly the persons who are to exercise the power of arrest. It now reads:

And shall for that purpose have all the powers and duties conferred by law upon the marshals and deputy marshals of the district courts of the United States.

Technically, there is not any such office, and, therefore, I ask unanimous consent to make it read:

Upon the marshals and deputy marshals of the United States of the judicial districts of the United States.

Mr. VEST. Let those words be inserted by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont asks the unanimous consent of the Senate, pending the call of the roll, to submit the amendment which he has indicated to the bill now under consideration. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the amendment is made.

Mr. CONGER. My colleague [Mr. PALMER] was temporarily called away from the Chamber. If my colleague were present he would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 49, nays 8; as follows:

YEAS—49.

Aldrich,	Dolph,	Jones of Arkansas,	Sawyer,
Allison,	Edmunds,	Jones of Nevada,	Sherman,
Beck,	Eustis,	Kenna,	Spooner,

So the bill was passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1280) to authorize Frank W. Hunt to erect and maintain a ferry across the Missouri River at the military reservation of Fort Buford, Dakota.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7218) to amend an act entitled "An act for the erection of a public building at Chattanooga, Tenn.," approved February 25, 1885, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SNYDER, Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina, and Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania, managers on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 10203) to enable the Commissioner of Agriculture to make a special distribution of seeds in the drought-stricken counties of Texas, and making an appropriation therefor; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

INDEBTEDNESS OF PACIFIC RAILROADS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the next special order the title of which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 1200) to amend an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862; also to amend an act approved July 2, 1864, and also an act approved May 7, 1878, both in amendment of said first-mentioned act; and to provide for a settlement of claims growing out of the issue of bonds to aid in the construction of certain of said railroads, and to secure to the United States the payment of all indebtedness of certain of the companies therein mentioned.

Mr. TELLER. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to call up a bill that is general in its character.

Mr. BECK. I object to any consent.

Mr. TELLER. I do not believe it will create any discussion.

Mr. BECK. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky objects.

Mr. BECK. I do not know what it is, but I object.

Mr. CAMERON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves an executive session.

Mr. BECK. I call for the yeas and nays on that motion.

Mr. CULLOM. I suppose the Senator from Kentucky desires to get his bill before the Senate.

Mr. BECK. I desire that it be not displaced.

Mr. CULLOM. I think the Senator has a right to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania withdraw his motion?

Mr. CULLOM. I think the Senator from Kentucky ought to be allowed to get his bill before the Senate, at any rate, before we adjourn.

Mr. BECK. All I ask is that it may be taken up and left as the unfinished business, and then anything else may come up.

Mr. CAMERON. I shall not object to that if the Senator will consent to my motion immediately after that.

Mr. BECK. I desire to call up Senate bill 2578, so that it may be the unfinished business for Monday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania withdraw his motion?

Mr. CAMERON. Temporarily.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2578) to prohibit members of Congress from acting as attorneys or employés for railroad companies holding charters or having received grant of lands or pecuniary aid from the United States. The effect of this bill will be to postpone the special order. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Chair to repeat his statement about the special order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The special order being now before the Senate, if a new proposition be taken up it will displace the special order.

Mr. HOAR. What special order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senate bill 1200.

Mr. HOAR. Displaces it of its right as a special order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No; but displaces it for the moment.

Mr. HOAR. Let the Senator from Kentucky withdraw his motion for a moment, and I will then let this special order be postponed one week. That will take it out of the way. I do not wish his bill to displace the special order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kentucky withdraw his motion for the time being?

Mr. BECK. If my bill does not lose its place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the special order now before the Senate be postponed for one week.

Mr. HOAR. I will say until Monday, February 7, retaining its right as a special order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 10203) to enable the Commissioner of Agriculture to make a special distribution of seeds in the drought-stricken counties of Texas and making an appropriation therefor, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

RAILROAD ATTORNEYS.

Mr. BECK. Now I renew my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky moves that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2578) to prohibit members of Congress from acting as attorneys or employés for railroad companies holding charters or having received grant of lands or pecuniary aid from the United States.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Now I ask the Senator from Kentucky to yield to me that I may ask the Senate to pass a little bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No. I hope the Senator from Kentucky will stick to this bill and have it settled one way or the other.

Mr. BECK. I want to give a chance to the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] and other gentlemen to speak on Monday at 2 o'clock. The bill will be subject, of course, to appropriation bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] asks unanimous consent, pending the railroad attorneys bill, to proceed to the consideration of a bill.

Mr. ALLISON. It will take but a moment. It is Order of Business 1701, being the bill (H. R. 5877) for the relief of William H. Morhiser.

Mr. HARRIS. The unfinished business being informally laid aside.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object to anything but the regular business.

Mr. CAMERON. I renew my motion for an executive session.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania to withdraw his motion while I ask unanimous consent to allow the Senate resolution, which I have discussed on several occasions before the Senate, to be the special order after the bill of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. MORGAN. If that resolution were referred now to the Committee on Public Lands, it might be reported back on Monday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama objects to the proposition of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania to allow me to make that motion?

Mr. CAMERON. But the Senator from Alabama objects, as I understand.

Mr. CALL. I ask that the resolution be taken up.

Mr. CAMERON. I think I had better insist on my motion. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-eight minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, January 31, at 12 o'clock m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate the 29th day of January, 1887.

UNITED STATES CONSUL.

George L. Rice, to be postmaster at North Adams, Berkshire County, Massachusetts, in the place of John B. Tyler, whose commission expires February 5, 1887.

Charles H. Reynolds, to be postmaster at Swanton, Franklin County, Vermont, in the place of Jason P. Jewett, whose commission expires February 5, 1887.

The following messages were received from the President of the United States?

I nominated George G. Rodman to the Senate on the 15th December, 1886, to be postmaster at Washington, Washington County, Iowa, vice William B. Bell, suspended.

On the 16th January, 1887, the term of office for which said William B. Bell was originally appointed expired.

And I renew the nomination of George G. Rodman, heretofore communicated to the Senate, to be postmaster at Washington, Washington County, Iowa, vice said William B. Bell, whose term of office has expired as aforesaid.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

I nominated Richard Burke to the Senate on December 15, 1886, to be postmaster at What Cheer, Keokuk County, Iowa, vice Byron S. Brainard, suspended.

On January 16, 1887, the term of office for which said Byron S. Brainard was originally appointed expired.

And I renew the nomination of Richard Burke, heretofore communicated to the Senate, to be postmaster at What Cheer, Keokuk County, Iowa, vice said Byron S. Brainard, whose term has expired as aforesaid.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

I nominated John S. Preston to the Senate December 15, 1886, to be postmaster at Shelbina, Shelby County, Missouri, vice John S. Chandler, suspended.

On December 20, 1886, the term of office for which said John S. Chandler was originally appointed expired.

And I renew the nomination of John S. Preston, heretofore communicated to the Senate, to be postmaster at Shelbina, Shelby County, Missouri, vice the said John S. Chandler, whose term of office has so expired as aforesaid.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, January 29, 1887.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, returned to the House the bill (H. R. 10457) for the relief of dependent parents and honorably discharged soldiers and sailors who are now disabled and dependent upon their own labor for support.

CAPT. EDWARD P. LULL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, and recommending that permission be granted by Congress to Capt. Edward P. Lull, United States Navy, to accept a diploma tendered him by the President of the State of Panama; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PAY OF CUSTODIANS AND JANITORS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, recommending an appropriation from the unexpended balance for the year 1886 to meet the deficiency in the appropriation for pay of assistant custodians and janitors of certain public buildings for the fiscal year 1885; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

LIGHT-STATION KEEPERS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Light-House Board, recommending appropriations for the erection of structures for the comfort of light-house keepers at certain light-houses; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

SEA-OTTER HUNTING GROUNDS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a deficiency estimate of an appropriation for the protection of the sea-otter hunting grounds and the seal fisheries, and for enforcing laws in Alaska; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

FEES IN FOX AND WISCONSIN RIVER CASES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an account of the clerk of the circuit court of Columbia County, Wisconsin, for fees in the Wisconsin River damage cases; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

COMMERCE, SAINT MARY'S FALLS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Acting Secretary of War, transmitting a report upon the commerce passing through the Saint Mary's Falls Canal during the year 1886; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

RECORDS AND FILES OF UNITED STATES COURTS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Attorney-General, recommending that an appropriation be made for arranging and filing the records and files of United States courts; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ACCOUNTS OF WASHINGTON AND GEORGETOWN RAILROAD COMPANY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a report of the receipts and disbursements of the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company for the year ending December 31, 1886; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING, CHATTANOOGA, TENN.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 7218) to amend an act entitled "An act for the erection of a public building at Chattanooga, Tenn., approved February 25, 1885;" upon which a conference was requested by the Senate.

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House non-concur in the Senate amendment, and agree to the committee of conference asked for.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint the managers of the conference on the part of the House during the day.

AGRICULTURAL EXPERIMENT STATIONS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House an act (S. 372) to establish agricultural experiment-stations in connection with the colleges established in the several States under the provisions of an act approved July 2, 1863, and of the acts supplementary thereto; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

REAR-ADMIRAL CARTER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the act (S. 729) for the relief of Rear-Admiral Carter; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

FERRY ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER.

The SPEAKER. The Chair calls attention to the fact that the bill (H. R. 1280) to authorize Frank W. Hunt to erect a maintain a ferry across the Missouri River at the military reservation of Fort Buford, Dak., has been returned from the Senate with a verbal amendment to the title, inserting the word "and" in place of "a." If there be no objection, that amendment will be concurred in.

Mr. STRAIT. I hope that will be done.

There being no objection, the amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:
To Mr. BENNETT, for one day, on account of sickness.
To Mr. DINGLEY, for to-day, on account of sickness.
To Mr. OUTHWAITE, for two days, on account of sickness.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. WILLIS. At the request of a number of gentlemen, I ask unanimous consent that any member be permitted to print remarks in the RECORD on the river and harbor bill.

There being no objection, leave was granted.

MRS. LOU GOBRIGHT M'FALLS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] asks unanimous consent that the bill (S. 1267) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Lou Gobright McFalls be taken from the table with the accompanying report, and recommitted to the Committee of the Whole House. If there be no objection, that order will be made. The Chair hears none; and it is ordered accordingly.

DISTRIBUTION OF SEED IN TEXAS.

Mr. LANHAM. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill which I send to the desk, and that it be now considered.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10203) to enable the Commissioner of Agriculture to make a special distribution of seeds in the drought-stricken counties of Texas, and making an appropriation therefor.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, this bill was read on a previous day, and perhaps there is no necessity for reading it again. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas states that the bill has been heretofore read. Does any gentleman demand the reading of the bill again?

Mr. WILSON. I wish to ask the gentleman from Texas whether the Legislature of his State is not now in session.

Mr. LANHAM. That is true.

Mr. WILSON. What is the necessity for Federal appropriation?

Mr. LANHAM. I will state that heretofore, in two instances, appropriations of this sort have been made by Congress. In 1875, when Kansas had suffered from ravages of grasshoppers, an appropriation of $30,000 was made. In 1882, when there had been an overflow of the Mississippi and its tributaries, Congress made an appropriation of $20,000. The object of the present bill is simply to enable the Commissioner of Agriculture to make a special distribution of seed in a large section of country which has suffered from an unprecedented drought, and is in keeping with the precedents thus established.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Agriculture, to strike out "50" and insert "10," so as to make the appropriation $10,000, was read and agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. COWLES. I demand the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, only 13 voting in favor thereof.

The bill was passed.

Mr. LANHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT DENVER, COLO.

Mr. SYMES. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 1592) to change the limit of appropriation for the public building at Denver, Colo., and that the bill be now considered.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COWLES and Mr. BYNUM called for the regular order.

BUSINESS OF THE COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

Mr. MORRISON, from the Committee on Rules, to which was referred a resolution relative to the consideration of business reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported as a substitute for that resolution the following:

Resolved, That the order made by the House on the 19th day of April, 1886, setting apart a day for the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs be, and the same is hereby, rescinded; and that Thursday, February 3, 1887, after the hour for the consideration of bills, is hereby set apart for the consideration of such measures as may be presented by the said Committee on Foreign Affairs; no other business to be transacted on said day until the consideration of measures so presented is completed.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Is that a continuing order?

The SPEAKER. The resolution proposes to vacate an order heretofore made, and to substitute another day for the one previously fixed.

The substitute was agreed to, and the resolution as amended adopted.

Mr. MORRISON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BUSINESS OF COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS.

Mr. MORRISON, from the Committee on Rules, also reported the following resolution, with a recommendation that it be adopted:

Resolved, That on Tuesday, February 1, 1887, the House will take a recess at 5 o'clock p. m. until half past 7 p. m., and that the evening session shall be devoted exclusively to the consideration of such measures as may be presented by the Committee on Military Affairs.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. MORRISON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT CHATTANOOGA.

The SPEAKER announced as managers on the part of the House at a conference to be held on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 7218) for the erection of a public building at Chattanooga, Tenn., Mr. SNYDER, Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina, and Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania.

OATH OF OFFICE OF HON. D. WYATT AIKEN.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Speaker, I present at this time a privileged report from the Committee on the Judiciary. I am instructed by the committee to report back the resolution which I send to the desk, with amendments recommended by the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the original resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas D. WYATT AIKEN, a Representative for the State of South Carolina, from the third district thereof, has been unable from sickness to appear in person to be sworn as a member of the House, but has sworn to and subscribed the oath of office before an officer authorized by law to administer oaths, and the said oath of office has been presented in his behalf to the House: Therefore,

Resolved, That the said oath be accepted and received by the House as the oath of office of the said D. WYATT AIKEN as a member of this House.

Mr. HAMMOND. Unless some gentleman desires the reading of the report, I am not inclined to occupy the time of the House in regard to this matter.

The committee recommend that the preamble of the resolution be amended, and I ask the Clerk to read the amendments suggested by the committee, which appear in the concluding sentences of the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

We recommend that the preamble of the resolution be amended by adding after the words "has been," in the second line, the words "and in all probability will remain until the end of this Congress." And also by adding before the word "therefore," at the end of the preamble, the words "and there being no contest or question as to his election."

Mr. HAMMOND. With those amendments we recommend that the resolution do pass.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HAMMOND. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania desires to be heard in opposition, I will yield to him such time as he may wish.

Mr. BAYNE. I only wish to occupy four or five minutes.

Mr. HAMMOND. I yield to the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. BAYNE. I do not desire, Mr. Speaker, to antagonize the resolution exactly, and yet I think it is one that should not pass the House. I have always regarded the gentleman from South Carolina as a most faithful Representative of his constituency, and the misfortune which has befallen him by reason of this long-continued sickness, rendering it impossible for him to come here, is a reason why I am very loath to oppose in any way the adoption of this resolution. It is a matter over which he had, of course, no control; and I regret, therefore, that my sense of duty compels me to interpose my objection to this resolution.

I think that, owing to the peculiar circumstances attending this case, it should not perhaps be opposed so seriously or vigorously as would be appropriate on many other occasions; and yet the principle involved is identical. I think it an exceedingly dangerous precedent to set that a member of the Senate or a member of the House of Representatives may be sworn as a member of either body when not present as required by section 30 of the Revised Statutes. It is a precedent which would manifestly be susceptible of great abuse. Occasions may arise in the history of this Government when such a precedent would be abused.

I do not see, Mr. Speaker, that this resolution is necessary to enable the payment of the compensation of the member, because I believe the Committee on the Judiciary could have reported a resolution authorizing the Representative from South Carolina to be paid in full his compensation; and I do not see that the passage of this resolution requiring him to be sworn was necessary at all as a means of enabling him to receive his pay, mileage, and whatever may be due to him as a member of the House of Representatives.

Mr. HOPKINS. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BAYNE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOPKINS. Has not the Representative in question been drawing his pay regularly, the same as any other member of the House?

Mr. BAYNE. I know nothing of that personally, but presume of course that he has. I assume, however, that the object of this resolution was more to ratify and sanction the act of the disbursing officers of the Government in paying him—because he was not entitled to pay, as I understand it, until he had subscribed to the oath fixed by law—than for any other purpose. But the Committee on the Judiciary, I repeat, could have reported such a resolution authorizing his pay, and at the same time have kept the House free from establishing such a precedent.

I make this statement, Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of presenting a protest against the acceptance of this oath as one equivalent to that administered on the floor of the House to the members-elect when they appear in person to be sworn, so that it may appear on the RECORD that this motion did not go unchallenged in the House of Representatives.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HAMMOND. If the gentleman from Ohio desires time, I will yield the floor to him.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I only rose to ask that the report be read.

Mr. HAMMOND. I have no objection to that.

The report (by Mr. HAMMOND) was read, as follows:

The proposed resolution is in the following words:

"Whereas D. WYATT AIKEN, Representative for the State of South Carolina from the Third district thereof, has been unable from sickness to appear in person to be sworn as a member of this House, but has sworn to and subscribed the oath of office before an officer authorized by law to administer oaths, and the said oath of office has been presented in his behalf to the House: Therefore,

"Resolved, That the said oath may be accepted and received by the House as the oath of office of the said D. WYATT AIKEN as a member of this House."

The reasons given for it are that Mr. AIKEN was duly elected and returned as a member of this House from said district in South Carolina, but by reason of severe illness has been unable to appear and take the oath of office, and must remain so unable at his home, 600 miles away, during the remainder of this Congress.

The oath presented with the above resolution is the legal oath of office, duly taken and subscribed before a judicial officer of South Carolina, authorized to administer oaths, and whose judicial character is certified over the seal of that State.

The Constitution of the United States in Article VI, paragraph 3, requires that—

"The Senators and Representatives" [and all officers, State and Federal] "shall be bound by oath or affirmation to support this Constitution."

Under that requirement the Representatives in the First Congress took said oath, pursuant to a resolution of the House, administered by the chancellor of New York. (See House Journal, First Congress.)

Afterwards that Congress passed the act of 1st June, 1789, containing what is found in sections 28, 29, and 30 of the Revised Statutes, namely:

"The oath of office shall be administered by the President of the Senate to each Senator who shall hereafter be elected previous to his taking his seat. When a President of the Senate has not taken the oath of office, it shall be administered to him by any member of the Senate.

"SEC. 30. At the first session of Congress after every general election of Representatives, the oath of office shall be administered by any member of the House of Representatives to the Speaker and by the Speaker to all the Members and Delegates present, and to the Clerk previous to entering on any other business; and to the Members and Delegates who afterwards appear, previous to their taking their seats."

Two questions arise under that statute:

First, whether any officer but the Speaker can administer that oath; and second, whether it can be administered until the member is "present" or "appears" in the House or elsewhere than in the House. In England the oaths of office were administered by the clerk to the speaker first, and then to the members. (May's Par. Pr., 193, 194-201.) The "outdoor" oaths, now abolished, were taken and subscribed before the clerk in the lobby, before the members could go within the House. The oaths had to be repeated after the Speaker was elected and approved by the Crown, and this was "required by statute to be taken while a full House of Commons is there duly sitting with their Speaker in his chair." (Ib., 194.) As we derived our laws from England it is well to observe how our statute differed from theirs.

The Constitution, Article I, section 2, paragraph 5, declared: "The House of Representatives shall choose their Speaker and other officers." Their choice was absolute. Here the chief executive did not name a commission or other officer to admit and swear them. Our statute of 1789 empowered the Speaker to administer the oath, and made it his duty to do so, to all Representatives "present" at the organization, or who should afterwards "appear." Those words do not necessarily mean that no one else shall or may administer the oath of office. The Revised Statutes, in more than twenty sections, authorize certain officers to administer oaths. In a very few instances there seems to be an intention to exclude others not so authorized. Thus section 2617 allows the collector of customs to be sworn by any authorized officer, and adds that all other persons appointed under "this title" shall be sworn before the collector. This apposition may require such a construction as to these last. But more in point is the act of 1868, in Revised Statutes, section 1921. It says:

"The secretary of New Mexico Territory, upon the convening of the Legislature thereof, shall administer the oath of office to the members elect of the two houses and the officers thereof when chosen; and no other person shall be competent to administer such oath save in the absence of the secretary; in which case any one member of either house may administer the oath to the presiding officer elect and he shall administer the same to the members and other officers."

We find no other instance in this regard in our statutes of declaring incompetent all others than those specifically so authorized. Being upon the very subject of administering the oath of office to legislators the use of the excluding words seems a legislative construction that without them others would not be excluded.

A construction which would require that none but the Speaker can swear in a member might prove seriously inconvenient in case of his absence. It is a rule of the House only which authorizes him to temporarily appoint one to the chair. Such a construction would give the Speaker the dangerous power to refuse to administer the oath and thereby exclude members from the House. No such construction should be allowed.

It may be proper to call attention to an English case. Before 1853 the House of Commons could not sit at all in the absence of the Speaker. They passed a standing order that in his absence the chairman of the ways and means committee "perform the duties and exercise the authority of Speaker in relation to all proceedings of this House, as deputy speaker," &c. (May's Par. Pro., 239.) The Speaker was so absent from June 4 to June 11, 1855, and during his absence two members were sworn in with such deputy speaker in the chair. When the Speaker returned, he suggested whether any doubts as to the validity of the oaths (because not taken while the Speaker was in the chair) should not be removed. Whereupon it was deemed advisable to pass an act to declare these proceedings to be valid, &c. (Ib., 229, 230, 231, 203.) An act for that purpose was passed and approved 14th of August, 1855. It does not appear, in Hansard's Debates, to have called forth any observations.

This seems to have been done out of abundant caution. Caution was needed; for by statute any one then taking his seat and voting in the House of Commons without having duly taken the oath of office subjected himself to severe pains and penalties. So sitting and voting he could be fined £500, "and his seat is also vacated in the same manner as if he were dead." (May's Par. Pr., 199.) Even without that, one might well have feared that so positive a statute could be repealed only by a statute and that such standing order did not authorize the deputy speaker to swear in a member. But as our statute is not exclusive, as was England's, this case is no obstacle to passing such resolution. And it is well to observe that in England Parliament is hedged about everywhere by statutes, but not so here. Our proceedings and almost everything pertaining to our business rest on the constitutional declaration that "ea h House may determine the rules of its proceedings."

Next, must the oath be administered only in the House with the Speaker in the chair? The failure so to enact, in the light of the English statute, signifies that we did not wish to be so hampered. No words fix the place of swearing in Senators in the act of June 1, 1789, above quoted. The sections 28, 29, and 30 are all parts of that act. The reasons applicable to one House applied also to the other. Therefore the words "present" and "appear" in section 30 do not seem to fix any place as the only place for this work. Every citizen is bound by law to support the Constitution. The purpose, and sole purpose, was to add the solemn obligation of religious pledge where one became an officer. That was equally binding, without regard to the person before whom or the place where it was taken.

When William Rufus King was elected Vice-President in 1855, and was detained at Havana, a special act was passed to allow him to take the oath of office there. In that case a statute was necessary to authorize the officer abroad to administer that oath. It is a precedent for swearing in a member away from his House, but further has no weight. It does not appear what course would have been adopted had he been confined at home in this country. We have found no other precedent on the subject.

It does not require the oath to make one a Representative; that is determined by his election for the term. It is the election which disqualified him for holding certain offices under Article I, section 6, paragraph 2 of the Constitution. The President alone is required to take the oath of office "before he enter on the execution of his office." (Article II, section 1, paragraph 7.) Representatives perform the all-important duty of electing their Speaker before they are sworn. Indeed, neither the Constitution nor the statute of 1789 fixes any time for their taking the oath of office.

In England, while a member-elect of the House of Commons must be sworn in before he can "sit within the bar" or vote, that is only because of the statute before stated. He has all other privileges of a member. Thus, in 1715, the house resolved "that Sir Jos. Jekyl was capable of being chosen of a committee of secrecy, though he had not been sworn at the clerk's table." Acting on that precedent in 1858, Baron Rothschild was put on a committee as to the oaths bill, and afterwards as one of the managers of the conference, though for eleven years he had refused to take the oath because it required him to affirm "upon the faith of a Christian." (May's Par. Pro., 200.)

Mr. AIKEN has been appointed on the Committee on Agriculture and on that on Education in this House. This House has granted him leave of absence indefinitely because of his illness; he has his quota of documents, &c., and franks the same through the mails as a member of Congress. None would contend that he can practice in the Court of Claims, accept fees to procure offices, or be interested in Government contracts simply because he has not taken the oath of office. Yet sections 1055, 1780, and 3739, Revised Statutes, forbid those things being done by members of Congress only, and thus prohibit him, and he may not have a right to his salary because section 38, Revised Statutes, makes it payable "after he has taken and subscribed the required oath." We never "subscribe" the oath.

No provision has been made by statute for administering this oath of office by any but the Speaker, nor elsewhere than in the House. As to absent members it is casus omissus. Does it require a statute to make such provision? We think not. Our statute (section 47, Revised Statutes) requires the salaries and accounts of members to be certified by the Speaker. He must approve the employment of our reporters. (Ib., section 54.) Yet those things may be done by a "deputy speaker," named by him with the approval of the House. That deputy speaker swears in members also, not by statute, but only by our rule, which authorizes him to "perform the duties of the Chair."

The Constitution declares that when sitting to try impeachments Senators "shall be under oath or affirmation." No statute has prescribed the form and mode of taking that oath. In all impeachment trials the Senate has for itself determined those things. It may be well to call attention to an act of 18th April, 1876 (Suppl. Rev. Stats., 204). It simply authorized the presiding officer of the Senate for the time being, the Secretary and chief clerk thereof, to administer the oaths therein mentioned, and was doubtless passed expressly to allow the presiding officer to administer the oath on impeachment trials, but that it was not thought necessary except to empower those officers to administer the oath. Mr. EDMUNDS, who reported that bill at a later day, said on the 5th April, 1876, there was a "question about his authority" to administer the oath, because said act of 1st June, 1789, above quoted, did not cover the case of impeachments (15 Globe, 2212). And immediately, on that day, the Senate passed a resolution that they be sworn by the Chief-Justice of the United States to try Belknap.

Such statutes, authorizing certain officers to administer oaths in certain cases, are convenient and proper; but such statutes decrease not the constitutional powers of either House. The question of how the oath of office in each House shall be taken is so near akin to the "elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members," and so like one of the "rules of its own proceedings," which constitutionally belong to "each House" to "judge" and "determine" for itself, that we think no statute is necessary for that purpose.

We put these reasons fully because of the importance of the matter. We believe this House can, and under the circumstances should, accept the oath of office sent here by Mr. AIKEN.

We recommend that the preamble of the resolution be amended by adding after the words "has been," in the second line, the words "and in all probability will remain until the end of this Congress," so that his permanent disability may appear as the reason for this action; and also by adding before "therefore," at the end of the preamble, the words "and there being no contest or question as to his election."

And we recommend that when so amended the resolution do pass.

Mr. BAYNE. Will the gentleman from Georgia permit me to have a substitute, which I ask leave to offer, read for information?

Mr. HAMMOND. I shall not permit any substitute to be offered if I can help it. I intend to ask for the previous question.

Mr. BAYNE. Can I have it reported at this time for information?

Mr. HAMMOND. Certainly.

The Clerk read the proposed substitute, as follows:

Resolved, That the said D. WYATT AIKEN shall be entitled to the salary, mileage, commutation, and stationery of a member of the House of Representatives of the Forty-ninth Congress, as if he had appeared and the oath of office had been duly administered to him as required by section 30 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. HAMMOND. I would object to that resolution if it were an independent matter at any time. In the first place, we can not take money out of the Treasury by resolution. In the second place I would not vote to give Mr. AIKEN mileage when he has never been here to earn any mileage. In the third place, he has drawn his salary up to date. And the only person interested in the law as to the salary is the official who has paid it.

The Committee on the Judiciary very carefully looked into this matter. I devoted as much as eight or ten days of diligent study to it. There was no dissent in that committee of which I am aware, except that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BENNETT] reserved the right to make a minority report. He is detained from the House to-day, but sent me word to go on with this resolution.

It will be observed the resolution simply accepts an oath made elsewhere than here. It is perfectly plain from a reading of the statute that the right to swear in a member is not exclusively in the Speaker. He is simply authorized to do it, as the Speaker of the House, in the presence of the House when a man appears. This House might now authorize somebody else to do it by resolution even in the presence of the Speaker, as we believe. Certainly that statute does not cover the case.

The very fact that an English statute existed at the time that we passed this one, which declared that a member should not be sworn in except in full house in the presence of the speaker, and we declined to put those words in our act, is an argument very conclusive that we declined because we did not intend to have that law in force here. I do not think that there need be any further argument about the matter. We put all the argument we had in this report.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I wish to ask the gentleman from Georgia a question for information. The noise and confusion on the floor during the reading of the report were so great that I was only able to catch a few lines of it. I wish to ask whether the Committee on the Judiciary discovered any precedent directly in line.

Mr. HAMMOND. The Committee on the Judiciary did not. The nearest thing that we discovered was that William Rufus King, when elected Vice-President, was sick in Havana, and could not come here. Congress passed a statute, without discussion either in the Senate or the House, to empower the consul at Havana to swear him. There was no question about his being sworn away from the Senate. But there being no American officer authorized to administer the oath, by unanimous consent in the House and in the Senate a statute was passed to empower a consul to administer that oath.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Will the gentleman from Georgia permit me a question?

Mr. HAMMOND. Certainly.

Mr. CUTCHEON. What purpose is expected to be accomplished by this resolution, beyond giving Mr. AIKEN his salary and emoluments?

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. AIKEN has obtained his salary. So far as there is a legal purpose in the resolution, it is to protect the officer who has paid it to him. But beyond that we simply desire to do what Mr. AIKEN has a right to ask us to do, to accept his oath of office. Otherwise he is not a member of this House in the full sense of being a member.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Would not a resolution of indemnity answer the purpose?

Mr. HAMMOND. I do not know how the House by a resolution could indemnify any officer for paying out money contrary to a statute. I demand the previous question on the passage of the resolution and amendments.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. HAMMOND. I presume the first question is on the amendments.

The SPEAKER. The amendments have been agreed to.

Mr. BAYNE. I move that the resolution be recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary, with instructions to report back, in the form of a bill or joint resolution, the provision contained in the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the said D. WYATT AIKEN shall be entitled to the salary of a member of the House of Representatives of the Forty-ninth Congress as if he had appeared, and the oath of office had been duly administered to him, as required by section 30 of the Revised Statutes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit the resolution with the instructions as read.

The question being taken,

The SPEAKER stated that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. BAYNE. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 33, noes 84.

So (further count not being called for) the motion to recommit with instructions was not agreed to.

The resolution reported by the Committee on the Judiciary as amended was agreed to.

Mr. HAMMOND moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER TO PRINT.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Chair will order the bill (S. 372) to establish agricultural experiment-stations in connection with colleges established in the several States under the provisions of an act approved July 2, 1862, and of an act supplemental thereto, to be printed. There is no print of the bill as it passed the Senate.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. HOLMAN, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence for this day on account of sickness.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move to dispense with the morning hour for the call of committees.

Mr. TAULBEE. I ask the gentleman to modify his motion so as to allow gentlemen who have reports to make to-day to send them up informally.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will agree to that. I ask unanimous consent, then, that gentlemen having reports to make be allowed to do so.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, is it not a shorter process to call the committees?

The SPEAKER. The request is that gentlemen be permitted to file their reports, and the call of committees be dispensed with.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Under this order the following reports were filed:

SOLDIERS' HOME AT FORT RIPLEY MILITARY RESERVATION.

On motion of Mr. BRAGG, the Committee on Military Affairs was discharged from the further consideration of a bill (H. R. 10801) ceding to the State of Minnesota the Fort Ripley Military Reservation, for the purpose of erecting and maintaining a soldiers' home thereon, and the same was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. CRISP, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back favorably a bill (H. R. 10098) to authorize the construction of a railroad, wagon, and foot-passenger bridge across the Mississippi River at Fort Madison or Keokuk, or between those points; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER IN STATES OF IOWA AND ILLINOIS.

Mr. CRISP, from the Committee on Commerce, also reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 10412) to authorize the construction of a high wagon and foot-passenger bridge over the Mississippi River between the city of East Dubuque, in the State of Illinois, and the city of Dubuque, in the State of Iowa; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS EAST RIVER, NEW YORK.

Mr. CRISP, from the Committee on Commerce, also reported back the bill (H. R. 10044) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the East River between the city of New York and Long Island; which was laid on the table.

Mr. CRISP, from the Committee on Commerce, also reported, as a substitute for H. R. 10044, a bill (H. R. 10914) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the East River between the city of New York and Long Island; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER NEAR YANKTON, DAK.

Mr. BYNUM, from the Committee on Commerce, reported with amendment a bill (H. R. 10055) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at a point to be selected within 5 miles of the city of Yankton, Dak.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER AT PIERRE, DAK.

Mr. BYNUM, from the Committee on Commerce, also reported back favorably with amendment a bill (H. R. 10023) for the construction of a bridge by the Duluth, Pierre and Black Hills Railroad Company across the Missouri River at Pierre, Dak.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE RED RIVER OF THE NORTH.

Mr. BYNUM, from the Committee on Commerce, also reported back with amendment a bill (H. R. 10664) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

GENERAL SPEED S. FRY.

Mr. TAULBEE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably a bill (H. R. 6732) for the relief of General Speed S. Fry; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

INTERCHANGE OF JURIES.

Mr. OATES, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back favorably the bill (S. 12) to authorize the juries of the United States circuit and district courts to be used interchangeably, and to provide for drawing talesmen; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN P. HAGEMAN.

Mr. HITT, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported back the bill (H. R. 10545) for the relief of John P. Hageman; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT BINGHAMTON, N. Y.

Mr. WILKINS, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back the bill (H. R. 10731) for the erection of a public building in the city of Binghamton, N. Y.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT JACKSON, MICH.

Mr. WORTHINGTON, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back the bill (H. R. 1227) to provide for the construction of a public building at Jackson, in the State of Michigan; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ALLEGED VIOLATIONS OF RULE XXXIV.

Mr. RICHARDSON, as a matter of privilege, presented a report of the Select Committee on Admissions to the Floor in relation to alleged violations of Rule XXXIV; which, with the accompanying testimony, was referred to the Committee on Rules, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TUCKER. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill for reference.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order!

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded, and the gentleman's State will be called on Monday morning.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union—— [A pause.]

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the special order, House bill 7634——

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from Georgia to abandon his motion.

Mr. BLOUNT. I had not done so, but I was interrupted by several gentlemen around me who were making suggestions as to what I should do. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills.

The SPEAKER. That motion has precedence over the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE], and the question must be first taken on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT].

Mr. HATCH. I hope the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] will not make that motion at this time. I understood him to agree not to make it until we got through with the pleuro-pneumonia bill, but I may have misunderstood him.

Mr. BLOUNT. I prefer to let the House determine whether it will take up the appropriation bills or the bill which the gentleman from Missouri indicates.

Mr. HATCH. But I can not make a motion antagonizing the motion of the gentleman from Georgia until the close of the second hour.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I hope the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] will insist upon his motion. We are already unusually late with the appropriations of the session, and it is absolutely necessary that we take action upon them if an extra session is to be avoided.

Mr. STEELE. I suppose the House knows that war has been declared, and it is very necessary to increase the efficiency of the Army. [Laughter.] The bill I desire to call up is for that purpose.

Mr. HATCH. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HATCH. The special order reads:

That Thursday, the 13th day of May, 1886, after the second call of committees, be set apart for the consideration of such business as may be presented by the Committee on Agriculture; this order not to interfere with general appropriation or revenue bills, and whether so interfered with on that day or not, shall be a continuing order until the bills presented by said committee shall be disposed of.

I desire to ask whether the construction placed by the Speaker upon this order is that the words "not to interfere with general appropriation bills" applied only to the 13th day of May, or that they have a continuous application?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the latter part of the order just read continues the entire order.

Mr. HATCH. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] will see the attitude in which this places me; he will see that I can not in good faith interfere with his motion or raise the question of consideration at this time and keep faith with the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of general appropriation bills. If that motion is rejected the hour for the consideration of bills will be in order.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. BLOUNT, and it was agreed to—ayes 98, noes 46.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. MCMILLIN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of general appropriation bills. The Clerk will report the title of the first bill in order.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10396) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask that this bill be passed over for the present.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the bill will be passed over.

Mr. DUNHAM. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection being made to passing over this bill, the Committee of the Whole, in accordance with the rule, will rise and report the objection to the House.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MCMILLIN reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, having under consideration general appropriation bills, and having reached House bill 10396, objection was made to the proposition that the bill be passed over, and pursuant to the rule, the committee rose and now reported the objection to the House.

Mr. MCCREARY. The chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs [Mr. BELMONT] is absent at this time, and I think the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill had better be passed over for the present. I understand that it will not lose its place, but will come up after the Post-Office appropriation bill is disposed of.

The SPEAKER. The question is not debatable.

The question being taken on the motion that the Committee of the Whole be directed to pass over House bill 10396, it was agreed to.

The House again resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. MCMILLIN in the chair.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the title of the next general appropriation bill in order.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10793) making appropriations for the services of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of this bill.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, the change of the rules of the House narrowing the limits of legislation on general appropriation bills has left to the committee very little to do beyond a consideration of the wants of the service under existing laws. That is our situation to-day with respect to this bill. It embraces no legislation of any consequence upon which it will be necessary to take up the time of the House. It may be stated in general that the appropriations asked in this bill for the fiscal year 1888 are about equal to and in many instances less than the amounts appropriated for the current fiscal year. So close have the estimates of the Department approached its actual needs for the coming fiscal year that the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, taking up item after item, have come to the conclusion that no more has been asked for by the Department than the needs of the service absolutely require. Hence we have reported the amounts suggested in the estimates and in addition a sum made necessary by the act extending the free-delivery system to cities where the population is 10,000 or where the gross postal receipts reach the sum of $10,000.

In these estimates there are two or three propositions to which I deem it proper to call the attention of the Committee of the Whole. For the present fiscal year there was provided at the last session of Congress $200,000 "for mail depredations and post-office inspectors, and fees to United States marshals, attorneys, and the necessary incidental expenses connected therewith." The Postmaster-General has asked for an extraordinary increase in this item; that is to say, he has asked an appropriation of $300,000, an increase of one-third upon the usual expenditure for this service. Of course there must have been some unusual reason for this request, especially when we consider the exceedingly close estimates for all other items in the bill. It is proper, therefore, that I should in a brief way state the reasons which induced the request of the Department for this additional $100,000 and the reasons which actuated the committee in assenting to this recommendation.

It will be remembered by many gentlemen that prior to June 17, 1878, postmasters of the fourth class were compensated by allowances on the quantity of stamps sold. The result of that system is well known to the country. Stamps were hawked about in various places at rates below those fixed by the Government. Enormous frauds grew up; so that on the 17th day of June, 1878, a statute was passed changing the basis of compensation from the quantity of stamps sold to the number of stamps canceled. The very next year there appeared, by reason of this statute, a saving of $800,000. Yet frauds have been continuously practiced upon the Government under the present system. An inspection by the present Postmaster-General has disclosed to an alarming extent the evils now existing in this regard. With the small inspection force at his command the Postmaster-General has been able, from April 1, 1885, to December 29, 1886, to recover, in two hundred and thirty-seven cases, the sum of $102,255.81.

The recoveries from February 11, 1879, to January 30, 1885, in thirty-seven cases, were $19,380.45. It was naturally suggested to the Postmaster-General that with a larger force there might be a much greater recovery to the Government. In order to disclose the existing evils it is well, perhaps, I should give from a letter of the Postmaster-General a few illustrations of the frauds which have been practiced by fourth-class postmasters. In Exhibit A, attached to this report, case No. 1 discloses that at a small post-office in the State of Maryland the postmaster reported as the amount of stamps canceled by himself for the first quarter of 1884, $261.47; for the second quarter, $289.59; for the third quarter, $298.35; for the fourth quarter, $240.27; and for the first quarter of 1885, $297.35. An inspector was directed to investigate the affairs in that office. Upon investigation it was estimated that the legitimate cancellations for all these several quarters reached only the sum of $12.

For instance, for the first quarter of 1884, reported canceled by the postmaster in his returns, $261.47; estimated legitimate cancellations, $12.

Again, in the case of Utah upon the adjustment of the accounts of the postmaster on the estimated legitimate business of the office, it appears that he received for compensation from February 5, 1879, to December 31, 1885, $3,691.30, or $2,341.30 in excess of what he was lawfully entitled to.

In case No. 4, in the State of Minnesota, the compensation of the postmaster from July 1, 1878, to March 31, 1886, amounted to $2,715.72, while, reducing it to $25 per quarter, the sum to be refunded to the Government is $1,940.72.

I will call attention next to a case in my own State. It is case No. 8. The quarterly accounts from the newly-appointed postmaster at A———, Ga., being so much less than those of his predecessor in office that an inspector was directed to examine into the cause of decrease. The inspector informs the Department that the late postmaster resided in the city near A———, Ga., and in making up his reports of cancellation at his residence in the city he added to the amount of cancellations reported by his assistant all letters, postal cards, circulars, &c., mailed by himself at the L——— office (a Presidential office), in the railway post-office or elsewhere, and counted the same as if actually mailed at and canceled at the office where he was postmaster.

The inspector also states that the present postal business represents the probable amount done by the former postmaster, and that the accounts be adjusted on that basis. The late postmaster was arrested and held for trial. Upon adjustment of his compensation from July 1, 1878, to September 14, 1885, the sum of $1,510.50 was found to have been allowed the postmaster more than he was entitled to receive. This amount the postmaster has refunded to the Government.

Mr. Chairman, I might go on with case after case, and they disclose this state of things: That the Government in the compensation of these officers depends primarily on their own sworn returns, and human nature is such that, by reason of perjury, the Government is defrauded of hundreds of thousands of dollars.

In this connection I beg leave to say that, by reason of the unusual inspection of postmasters which have already taken place during the last fiscal year, there was not an increase of 1 per cent. in their compensation; and under the estimate for the year 1888 the calculation is there will not be an increase of more than 1 per cent.

It is not at all improbable if this item is allowed, and all fourth-class offices of the country understand the Postmaster-General has a force constantly to visit their offices, constantly to examine their business, there will be such a reform as perhaps will decrease the item of compensation of postmasters; and, so believing, the committee have unanimously recommended this increased allowance.

The next item to which I will call attention——

Mr. McRAE. If the gentleman will allow me, I would like to ask him to explain to the House how it can be possible for the Government to be defrauded upon the old plan, that is, in paying for stamps sold?

Mr. BLOUNT. Under the old system of compensation of certain percentage upon stamps sold stamps were sold all over the country, and offices which did not pay $250 a year you will find rose up to $3,000 a year, based upon the sales of stamps.

Mr. McRAE. These stamps were accounted for by the postmasters who sold them, were they not?

Mr. BLOUNT. Of course they were; and the postmaster was entitled to the first $200 of stamps sold. He was entitled to a percentage on all he sold.

Mr. McRAE. It seems to me it would be easier to detect fraud under the old than under the present system.

Mr. BLOUNT. We are not in the dark on the questions suggested by my friend. The Department is full of experience in reference to all of them. Frauds have been much greater under the system of allowances on stamps sold than stamps canceled.

I will call the attention of the committee to the following item in reference to inland transportation on railroad routes. After stating the sum allowed, this provision is appended:

> Of which sum not exceeding $20,000 may be employed to pay the freight on transportation of postal cards, stamped envelopes, and stamped paper from the manufactories to post-offices and depots of distribution.

It is now carried on postal cars at a great cost to the Government, and it is said with great inconvenience to the postal clerks who have to handle these enormous packages, sometimes resulting in disturbing the distribution of the mails. By allowing the payment of this sum and paying for the transportation of these packages as freight there is in the outset a saving of $55,000 and the relief of the Post-Office Department from the inconvenience to which I have referred, relieving the mails of the delays in the distribution. It will take $95,000 for two additional postal cars which will be needed to transport this matter unless this is done.

This matter is so patent that I do not think there is any occasion to make a further addition to the statement I have already made upon the subject.

I will reserve now what I have to say for the five-minutes' debate, when I will call attention to certain paragraphs of the bill as we proceed. Before taking my seat, however, I would like to ascertain, if possible, whether there is any disposition to prolong the general debate, and, if so, what length of time gentlemen would wish.

Mr. PETERS. I will state to the chairman of the committee that I should be glad myself to occupy fifteen or twenty minutes; possibly I shall not consume all of that time.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask unanimous consent that all general debate be closed in one hour.

Mr. PETERS. I do not know, of course, whether anybody else wants to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the general debate on this bill will be closed in one hour.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Chairman, my only object in taking the floor is to call attention to one or two features of the bill, not with the object of opposing the passage of the bill, or even for the purpose of offering any amendments to it, but simply to direct attention to the present condition of the postal laws with regard to certain offices throughout the country. The bill presented here by the committee is, in my opinion, a very fair one, and I think under all the circumstances quite a liberal bill. The appropriations asked for by the Post-Office Department have in the main been conceded as necessary, and the amounts recommended placed in the bill.

I regret very much that certain legislation in relation to third and fourth class post-offices has not been enacted by this House, so that provision for the money necessary might have been placed in the bill at this time. But the committee has not as yet been able to act upon a bill for the relief of these classes of officials, and hence whatever amendments might be suggested or requisite to the amounts allowed in the bill would be subject to the point of order, and perhaps ruled out if the point of order should be made.

I think there is no class of officials under the Post-Office Department who are so inadequately compensated as the third-class postmasters. The third-class postmasters are those in charge of offices where the gross receipts are $1,900, and not exceeding $8,000, and their salaries are regulated by the gross receipts. These third-class postmasters are allowed this salary based on the receipts, but are required to provide their own rooms in which to carry on the business of the Government, and are also required to provide post-office facilities, fuel, light, and any clerk-hire that may be necessary for the carrying on of the business of the office itself, unless it be a certain allowance for clerk-hire in offices where there are star routes, in which cases a small allowance is made by the Department for clerk-hire for the distribution of the mails under the star-route system.

It therefore frequently happens that a third-class postmaster having a salary of a thousand, fourteen hundred, fifteen hundred, or nineteen hundred dollars a year, is required, in order to render efficient service to the immediate locality in which the post-office is situated, as well as to the Government, to pay out a large proportion of his salary by way of clerk-hire, rent, and for lights and fuel. It should be borne in mind in this connection that there is not a third-class post-office in the United States that does not furnish to the Government a revenue from its receipts greater than the expenses incurred in conducting the office. In other words, there is not a third-class post-office in the United States but what the Government derives a net revenue from the business of the office; and therefore there is no great need for saying that it is unjust, that it is not right, to increase the compensation at those offices.

I do not remember the exact figures, but I think the net revenue from third-class offices in the United States amounts to the sum of between one and two millions of dollars annually.

But aside from this, as I have contended heretofore, there is no reason why a third-class postmaster should not be allowed his rent, his light, and fuel the same as a second and first class postmaster, provided it can be paid out of the revenues of the office. If it became necessary to draw upon the Treasury of the Government for the purpose of meeting the expenditures of such offices, then the objection might reasonably be urged that the Government could not afford to do this; but certainly where the revenues of the office itself are in excess of the expenditures it is nothing more than just and right that rent, fuel, and light, as well as the necessary clerk-hire, should be allowed to the third-class postmasters.

I had intended, Mr. Chairman, to press this matter vigorously before the Committee of the Whole when this bill was under consideration; but I am glad to state that a bill has been prepared, covering not only this question but also the question of fourth-class offices, which is now pending before the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and I think a day will be secured for the consideration of that bill. If it is considered and passed then a large amount of the complaints made by the people, and by third and fourth class postmasters themselves, will be done away with, because the bill that the committee now have under consideration meets the objection to which I have called attention. For this reason, therefore, I did not deem it important or necessary at this time to detain the Committee of the Whole in discussing at length the points I have briefly suggested.

I desire, however, before taking my seat to call the attention of the members on this floor (and large numbers have probably received letters from third and fourth class postmasters on the same subject) to the fact that this bill will be presented to their consideration, provided a day can be secured by the committee for that purpose; and when so presented I hope every man who feels an interest in the third and fourth class offices will take it upon himself to urge prompt action in reference to it.

Mr. OATES. Will the gentleman permit me to inquire if it is not the fourth-class postmasters whose offices are money-order offices from whom complaints of the meagerness of the salary comes as a well-founded complaint? It is that class, the fourth-class, which are money-order offices, is it not?

Mr. PETERS. A large portion of the complaint comes from that class of offices. But there is still another class of fourth-class postmasters who have a just right to complain, namely, the postmaster at the small country office at the farm-house, where the post-office is located for the convenience of the neighborhood, and where the inconvenience of the post-office to the family as well as to the person is very great; and yet there is not sufficient compensation allowed your fourth-class postmaster in such a case to even pay him for keeping the room clean in which he has his office.

Mr. OATES. I sympathize with the statement the gentleman from Kansas has made, and put the question merely to call distinct attention to it. Is there not this difference as to these small offices that a small office on a daily line is a great deal more trouble to the postmaster than one where the mail only comes once, twice, or thrice a week?

Mr. PETERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. OATES. And there ought to be a difference in compensation?

Mr. PETERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. And does the gentleman not think where the office pays its way that is all the Government ought to ask?

Mr. PETERS. I have taken that position all the while.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Otherwise it amounts to a tax on that office for the benefit of some other office.

Mr. PETERS. Certainly. The Government can not complain or the people can not complain if a third-class office pays its way. No one has a right to complain of an expenditure which will render to a community efficient service and to the third-class postmaster adequate compensation, provided the Government is not called upon to pay any portion of that compensation.

I might add, in relation to these money-order offices, what is probably pretty well known, that the Government only establishes money-order offices once a year, namely, on the 1st of July. There has not been, under the present law, proper compensation to postmasters for the money-order business in a large number of offices. But that difficulty is also to be remedied by the bill to which I have called attention, and which I hope will be brought up for consideration.

I might state, Mr. Chairman, by way of information, that on July 1, 1886, there were 1,769 third-class post-offices. The largest number of these was in the State of New York, namely, 163; the next largest number was in Illinois—145; the next in Pennsylvania—120; the next in Iowa—101; the next largest number was in Ohio—95; the next in Massachusetts—92; and the next in Kansas—83.

I simply call attention to these leading features so that it may be impressed upon the minds of members of the House that there is a very large class of these officers who have been rendering efficient service without an adequate compensation, and they have the right to demand of the Congress of the United States such compensation as will pay them reasonably for the services they render.

If any other gentleman of this side desires to speak any further in the general debate I yield to him, as I have said all I desire to say in relation to the matter.

I reserve, however, the balance of my time.

THE EDUCATION BILL.

Mr. JONES, of Texas. Mr. Chairman, the Blair educational bill proposes to distribute among the States, the Territories, and District of Columbia, according to the illiteracy of their inhabitants, $79,000,000 within eight years under the conditions defined in the bill. This, in my opinion, is the most important measure brought before this Congress, and one that deserves most careful and deliberate investigation. The first question to be determined is, whether Congress has the power, under the Constitution, to pass this bill? It can not be questioned that if the Federal Government have power to provide, by an appropriation of money from the Federal Treasury, for the education of the illiterates in the States, it has also, and it becomes its duty, to follow up the money and see that it is properly and legitimately used.

From the power to appropriate springs, necessarily, the power to direct how the appropriation shall be expended, and in this bill both the power to appropriate money and direct how it shall be used by the States is asserted. If the General Government have the power to provide for the education of the people of the States and education promotes the general welfare of the United States, then it becomes the duty of Congress to levy and collect taxes for educational purposes in the States, and adopt a system of enforced education, if necessary, as well as to pay the debts and provide for the common defense.

But the inquiry arises, has the Federal Government such power? I think not. The taxing power of the Federal Government is limited to the purposes of paying the debts and providing for the common defense, for the promotion of the general welfare of the United States. But it can not be exercised for the collection and distribution of money among the States for local benefits, nor for the general welfare, for that implies the power to compel the States to accept the trust and execute it under laws enacted by the taxing power. The general welfare-clause in the eighth section of the first article of the Constitution is not a substantive general power, but is a limitation on the grant of power to raise money by taxes, duties, imposts, and excises to pay debts and provide for the common defense.

> The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States, respectively, or to the people.

It therefore follows that the powers that the States may constitutionally exercise the Federal Government can not constitutionally exercise. It can not be said, with any legal propriety, that the States did not reserve to themselves the great mass of the business of government. The care and regulation of the social relations, the mental and moral culture of their inhabitants, the development of every local interest within their borders, the preservation of order and peace among their people, the right and duty to provide for the weak and unfortunate members of society are powers and duties thus reserved to the States. The Constitution does not expressly or by implication prohibit the States from exercising the fullest control over these matters. Nor are any of these powers or duties, by express or implied grant in the Constitution, transferred from the States to the General Government. No one of the enumerated powers in the Constitution touches the subject under discussion or has any relation to it.

The powers granted to the United States and the powers prohibited to the States were such as were necessary for the preservation of the harmony and friendly relations that should subsist between the States and for the protection of their common interests against a foreign enemy or insurrection at home. Mr. Madison, in the Federalist, said:

> The powers delegated by the proposed Constitution are few and defined. Those which are to remain in the State governments are numerous and indefinite. Its (the General Government's) jurisdiction extends to certain enumerated objects only and leaves to the several States a residuary and inviolable sovereignty over all other objects.

The States conferred no power in the Constitution on the General Government over local subjects. They did not intend that there should be a doubt about the powers conferred, but they "defined" the powers they intended to grant to the General Government. It is a violation of the rights of the States and a usurpation of power for Congress to legislate on local subjects. If the States were all consenting and asking for the passage of this bill, in the absence of constitutional power in Congress to make the appropriation, our votes should be "no." We should remember that this is a Government of law and that "consent can not give jurisdiction." It will produce friction and disturb the harmony of our dual system and weaken it.

President Jackson said:

> That our true strength and wisdom are not promoted by invasions of the rights and powers of the several States; but, on the contrary, that they consist not in binding the States more closely to the center but in leaving each more unobstructed in its proper orbit.

In the case of the United States vs. Cruikshanks (92 U. S. R., page 550) the court say:

"The people of the United States, resident within a State, are subject to two governments—one State, the other national. But there need be no conflict between the two. The powers which one possesses the other does not. They are established for different purposes.

The same power can not exist in both the General Government and the States at the same time. Will it be contended by the friends of the bill that the General Government, the mere creature of the States, acting under limited powers, at least without any express power in the Constitution, can distribute to the States, money raised by taxation to educate the people of the States, and thereby entirely reverse the relations that the States bear to the Union without injury to our system of government? It is a new and dangerous experiment.

It is contended that the general-welfare clause in the eighth section of the first article of the Constitution was inserted to authorize the Federal Government to provide for emergencies and purposes not enumerated in the Constitution, but which might arise in the future development of the country. This construction makes the will of the law-making power supreme, and totally destroys the autonomy of the States, and breaks down the barriers that have been hitherto relied on and deemed sufficient to protect the States in the exercise of the sovereignty they reserved to themselves. But it is now a grave question, What powers, if any, did the States reserve to themselves?

The bill prescribes what the States shall do to entitle them to a share of the bounty to be conferred. If the States make no appropriation or provision for public free schools they will get no money. It proposes that the General Government will help the States if they adopt a policy dictated by it. This bill puts the Federal Government in the attitude of a capricious ruler having authority over the States, his dependents, in which he has no confidence. It says to the States: If you do not comply with all the conditions I impose, I will withhold the appropriation from you and you can remain steeped in illiteracy, however dangerous that condition, although the general welfare of the United States be violated or endangered.

This bill authorizes and empowers the Secretary of the Interior to arraign and try a sovereign State for misapplying the money assigned to it. After unnecessarily and illegally taking more money from the people of the States than it should have done, it says: I will restore it, not to be used as you may choose, but as I will prescribe, and if you violate the conditions upon which I give it I will arraign and try you, and if I find you guilty I will withhold from you the residue of the appropriation. This is adding insult to injury.

If this bill should become a law, in view of the efforts that have been made to get rid of the surplus in the Treasury, and thereby conceal from the oppressed tax-payers of the Government that the burdens they have been carrying were really unnecessary for the legitimate purposes of Government economically administered, I fear that it will prove to be the extension of a policy of reckless and unwise expenditures of money that will in time destroy the symmetry and harmony of our dual system, obliterate State lines, ignore the functions of the State governments, and eventuate in centralism.

The advocates of this bill assert that the millions of dollars to be paid out to the States and Territories are intended to aid them in supporting the common schools that exist or that may be established, because the poverty of the people will not allow them to organize and sufficiently provide for the needs of education. But it is not proposed to relieve these same poor people from the heavy taxes they pay which have contributed to their poverty. It is not even proposed to distribute money that the United States do not need to pay their debts with, for which it was collected.

But the proposition is to collect more money from the people already so impoverished that they can not provide for the educational wants of their children, and then withhold it from them unless they tax themselves still further to raise an additional amount of money equal to the share that each State will be entitled to under the provisions of this bill. Are the people capable of self-government? Is it a fact that the poor people are really benefited pecuniarily by taxation? Are not the fathers and mothers of the children of this country as capable of providing for their educational wants as we are? They furnish the money. They elect us. They pay our salaries. We do not furnish the money. We extort it from them and then propose to give it back after deducting the expense of collection, on conditions that involve a surrender of every pretense that each man is a sovereign and capable of providing for himself and the wants of his children.

The bill is unconstitutional. It is un-American. It is inconsistent with, and is even at war with, the spirit and genius of our institutions. It assumes that local self-government is a failure. It exalts the creature, the Federal agency, above the creator, the States, and declares that the taxing power of the United States is limited only by the will of Congress. It can in no proper sense be called a benefaction. It is an oppression, and will be a hinderance to the educational interests that individuals, communities, and States are laboring to develop and permanently establish.

How can a Democrat vote for this bill and claim to be a strict constructionist of the Federal Constitution? How can a revenue reformer consistently vote for this bill, that diverts $79,000,000 from channels of legitimate expenditure to a new enterprise of at least doubtful constitutionality, and thereby create a necessity to continue the present ruinous system of taxation? How can the anti-national-bank advocate vote for so large an appropriation of money for local school purposes in the States when it is so much needed to pay the interest-bearing bonded debt of the United States that is now due, when he remembers that the payment of the bonds of the Government destroys the national banking system of the Government, a consummation infinitely desirable?

We (I mean Democrats) declare that Federal taxation should be for the public purposes of the Government exclusively, and not to exceed in amount the demands of the Government economically administered. Is the distribution of money among the States for educational purposes, under the provisions of this bill, for national or public purposes or for State or local purposes? Is there any power in Congress to divert from a public to a private use money acquired by taxation for any of the purposes enumerated in the Constitution? Has Congress the power under the Constitution to levy a tax except for Federal purposes? If so, is there any limit to its power to tax?

The Federal Government has no power except that which has been given it by the States by express grants in the Constitution. What powers, if any, did the States or people reserve to themselves when they created the General Government? Did the States, after enumerating the specific powers granted to the United States Government in the Constitution, and after declaring how and for what purposes the grants of power might be exercised by it, and after declaring in the tenth amendment to the Constitution "the powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively or to the people," mean that the General Government should have, under the "general-welfare" clause in the eighth section of the first article of the Constitution, additional powers to legislate for local interests whenever the States from any cause should fail to do so, the promotion of which might in the judgment of Congress mediately or immediately promote the general welfare of the country? We should hesitate long before we adopt so broad a construction of the Constitution.

But if the authority could be found in the Constitution to provide for the education of the people, as contemplated in this bill, would it be wise to do so in the present condition of the country? Why, if it be the fact, is illiteracy increasing? Did it increase before the late civil war? Where illiteracy abounds now it must continue till the negroes that were emancipated from slavery and their immediate descendants die, and until the oppressions and heavy burdens that are upon all the people from taxation are taken off and economy takes the place of wasteful extravagance in the administration of the Government. We have a legitimate use for all the money in the Treasury. Pay the debts we owe and stop the millions of dollars in interest these debts are bearing annually. Reduce taxes on the necessaries of life and make the luxuries bear the burden of taxation for the legitimate needs of the Government economically administered and leave the surplus millions with the people. Then hope and thrift will again inspire and comfort the poor and illiterate. Then they will have the means to provide for all their wants, whether mental, moral, or physical.

The danger to the stability of our Government does not arise from illiteracy, but from unwise and unjust revenue laws. Our fathers of revolutionary memory were not remarkable for their learning. They loved personal and local liberty, and hated unjust, oppressive revenue laws. They threw off the yoke of the oppressor. They were poor and generally illiterate. They were self-reliant, and grew in wealth and learning and in the arts and sciences under just and equal laws that commanded their observance and devotion. All of their grand achievements were the result of efforts unaided by contributions from the Government. Their growth, though rapid, was natural, the result of individual effort.

Illiteracy (except that which exists among the emancipated negroes and their immediate descendants) has resulted mainly from the heavy foreign pauper population that has immigrated into our country since the late war, and the poverty of the masses caused by the late war; and their poverty is aggravated, and will be continually aggravated, with all attendant woes and ills, until the taxes are reduced and class legislation is abandoned, and until just and constitutional laws are enacted and the Government is administered in the interest of all the people, and not in the interest of the favored few.

Unfetter the manhood of Americans and give them equal opportunities in the battle of life. Protect them in their lives, liberty, and pursuit of happiness, and they will, as their fathers did, demonstrate in their devotion to constitutional liberty, in their prosperity, and in their intellectual, moral, and social elevation, the Jeffersonian doctrine that the people are capable of self-government. Further protection or assistance is not needed, nor is it wise. The protection given to the capital invested in favored industries in our once happy country has cursed our land, impoverished millions of the people, and increased illiteracy.

Apply the millions of dollars proposed to be expended under this bill to the States that are too poor to educate their illiterates, and teach the people to look from themselves for the means to educate their children to the United States Government, and then withhold assistance, if it be possible, and the educational interests in the States will as certainly decline as the profits of protected industries will decline when they are deprived of protection. This result will be inevitable: "That government is best that governs least."

Let us return to the old constitutional methods that were observed in the earlier and happier years of the Republic, and perpetuate our dual system of government, and this can only be done by respecting the division of powers made between the States and their agent, the Federal Government, by our fathers in the Constitution of the United States. And if we are faithful to the old time-honored doctrine of "strict construction," our Government will be, what it was intended to be, a perpetual inheritance and blessing to the descendants of its authors. [Applause.]

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLOUNT. If no other gentleman desires the floor in general debate, I ask that the bill be read by paragraphs for amendment under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection the Clerk will proceed to read the bill by paragraphs for amendment.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Necessary and special facilities on trunk lines, $295,987.53.

Mr. WALLACE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the paragraph just read the following:

"Provided, That all sums expended for special facilities shall be expended within the discretion of the Postmaster-General, so as to confer the greatest benefit upon the business and postal interests, and when two or more trunk-lines are in operation having the same general direction and terminal points such facilities shall be extended to the lowest bidder after advertisement."

Mr. WALLACE. It might not appear at first blush that a proviso of that sort was necessary in a paragraph like this. But in the distribution of that money the Postmaster-General has found himself bound by such remarks and statements in debate here as indicated the carriage of the mail over certain lines and trunk roads; and it is with a desire to entirely unhamper him in the distribution of this appropriation that I have offered this amendment; so that in his discretion he can distribute this money for the specific purpose for which it is appropriated in such way as he may think for the general public good and public benefit.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Let the amendment be again read.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. BLOUNT. The sum for special facilities contained in this bill appears on the estimate of the Department. While general in its terms it is quite well known that it relates mainly to what is known as the fast-mail line on the Atlantic coast looking to a rapid connection with Havana. On page 84 of the report of the Postmaster-General is to be found the expenditure on account of this fund during the past fiscal year. Most of it, as I have said, relates to the Atlantic coast line. A small portion of the appropriation is used for the line from New York to Springfield, an another portion on the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad to Buffalo. The balance of it is used on what is known as the fast-mail line on the Atlantic coast, or rather the fast Cuban line.

The committee are well aware that the law provides, for carrying the mails, a compensation by weight, with the addition of an allowance for postal cars. It is not the policy of the Government to allow any special facility fund, because such a fund is well calculated to be abused. It has ranged from $45,000 in 1878, when it began, to $99,000 in 1879, $92,000 in 1880, $267,000 in 1881, $374,000 in 1882, $185,000 in 1883, $184,000 in 1884, $249,000 in 1885, $251,000 in 1886, and $291,000 in 1887. From which the House will see that the per cent. of money allowed in the discretion of the Postmaster-General for compensation of railroads for carrying the mails is exceedingly small. There has been great reluctance to make any allowance at all.

This appropriation for the coast line has been voted for years by the two Houses with a distinct understanding as to where it was to be used—so distinct that while, under the general law, the Postmaster-General had the right to exercise his discretion, he felt that such discretion was denied him in regard to this by the estimates, and by the understanding of the two Houses when the appropriation was passed. At this time, by virtue of this appropriation facilitating railroads, and by virtue of the general statute authorizing the Postmaster-General to make contracts out of the steamboat fund where the foreign office is within 200 miles of our coast, the Postmaster-General has made a contract for a tri-weekly mail from Tampa, Fla., to Cuba.

By virtue of that contract the contractor was induced to construct and has constructed (perhaps it is not quite completed) a vessel to ply between those points. That contract is absolutely useless unless this special facility fund is to be continued. Now, as to the advantages of it. Our immense trade with Cuba is well known; but, in the absence of this fund, under the mode of transporting the mails which has prevailed heretofore, a merchant in New Orleans desiring to communicate with Havana had to send his mail to New York and by sea to Cuba; and the same was true of the mail from all other parts of the country, it had to start at New York. Under the present system, instead of the mail from Arkansas or from Minnesota, or that section of the country, coming to New York, it goes southeast to the coast and is transmitted promptly. In this way celerity and certainty are secured by the use of this fund. Congress, having by repeated allowances of this fund recognized the necessity of it, I trust there will be no insertion here of language which will indicate to the Postmaster-General the abandonment of that service.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LONG. It also leads, I suppose, to the building of this vessel which the gentleman has mentioned?

Mr. BLOUNT. Yes, sir.

Mr. LONG. Do you not think it would be well to extend the principle?

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. Chairman, in offering this amendment I had no desire or expectation that it would change the ultimate intention of this appropriation. I understand that a large proportion of this fund is intended for facilitating the Cuban mail, and my object in offering this amendment is to leave it to the discretion of the Postmaster-General as to what route he shall select for carrying the mail to Tampa.

The present route is by the Atlantic Coast Line through a comparatively sparsely-settled country; whereas the same money could be appropriated to carrying the mails over trunk lines where the advantages of the service along the route would be enormously increased. For example, suppose this mail were carried over the Richmond and Danville road, there would be a saving of twenty-four hours in the distribution of the mail to Mobile, to New Orleans, and to the whole State of Texas, and at the same time all the present advantages in connection with the mail service to Cuba would be secured. In offering the amendment I simply desire to leave it to the Postmaster-General to select such route as he deems best for the public. I have no desire to interfere in any way with the transportation of the Cuban mail, but I do desire to get for the country intervening between Washington and Tampa as large a share of the benefits of the fast-mail service as I can.

As I have already said, this mail is carried now over a road, on one side of which there is nothing but water, and on the other a fairly-settled country, whereas on both sides of the line I have suggested there is a well-settled country with many towns rapidly increasing in population and importance. As I have understood from the Postmaster-General himself, he feels that the debate which has heretofore taken place on this appropriation has rather dictated to him the necessity of sending the mail by this particular line. I do not desire to have it taken from that line unless, in the opinion of the Postmaster-General, it can be carried to greater advantage over some other line at the same cost.

Certainly this House does not desire to tie down appropriations to any particular lines of railroad or to require that the mails shall be carried through any particular portion of country, provided the sections interested can be benefited by transportation over some other part of the great railroad arteries of the nation.

In the amendment which I have proposed there can certainly be nothing objectionable. No argument can be raised against its fairness. It leaves to the chief officer of the Post-Office Department the option to select at his discretion what may be considered the best route for the Government and the people. This amendment will not interfere with the facilities for the delivery of mail to Cuba. It extends the distribution of the mails into Georgia, Alabama, Louisiana, and Texas without interfering in any way with the accommodation of the people of South Carolina, North Carolina, and Florida, whose mails are at present facilitated by the appropriation of this money. The only object I have in view in this amendment is that the Postmaster-General may have this discretion, that he may be allowed some freedom in the exercise of this authority in the distribution of this large amount of money.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, up to a few months ago the Richmond and Danville road took the northern mail from this place. The mail facilities in that direction were satisfactory, so far as I am informed, to the sections of country interested. But the schedules were changed by the railroad authorities, making a break at the city of Washington, doubtless for the purpose of creating confusion and extorting from Congress an appropriation of $125,000 for facilitating mail transportation to New Orleans.

Therein lies the danger of this "special-facilities" fund. We are liable in this way to combinations of railroad companies all over this country, resulting in great embarrassment in the distribution of the mails, because under present legislation the administration is powerless to control the wantonness of the railroad companies in matters of this kind. I trust, sir, that as only a few days since the two Houses of Congress saw fit to adopt a measure of protection for the people in the matter of general transportation, the time will come when we shall silence such clamors as this by legislative provisions compelling railroad companies to do justice in the distribution of mails which tend to facilitate business along their own roads and out of which they receive profit. This I believe to be the key to the situation. If Congress shall fail to agree to any proposition compensating the line referred to, I believe it will not be sixty days after the adjournment of Congress before this difficulty will have been solved.

My friend from Louisiana [Mr. WALLACE] says that over the line referred to we shall have, under his amendment, a distribution of the Cuban mail as satisfactory as we are having under present arrangements. I submit to this Committee of the Whole whether it is not wiser to take the opinion of the Post-Office Department, which has seen fit to recommend this particular line than to adopt another provision which can only lead to the annoyance of the Department by creating controversy as to which is the proper line.

Mr. WALLACE. Can the gentleman tell me how the amendment will interfere in any manner with the discretion of the Postmaster-General in the selection of a line?

Mr. BLOUNT. I have not said that it did so; but the two Houses of Congress on these estimates have from year to year voted this appropriation with the understanding that it was to be used along the coast line, used for the purpose of transporting the mails to Cuba, used in connection with the enormous trade which we have with that country. I do not wish to see introduced into this bill a provision which, though seeming in terms to be harmless, may be calculated possibly to thwart the purposes of the Department. For this reason I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. WALLACE. Will the gentleman tell us in what way the purposes of the Postmaster-General will be thwarted by this amendment?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BLOUNT. I will take pleasure in doing so when I have an opportunity.

Mr. McCOMAS. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is objectionable, and very objectionable. It illustrates how a gentleman intending to do one thing which he may understand may interrupt the transaction of business which he does not properly apprehend. The amendment, as read, and as its purpose is avowed by the gentleman from Louisiana, seeks to change a small section of this general route of "fast-mail facilities." This system extends over fourteen different railways, and embraces in extent 1,400 miles. The gentleman may or may not be right (I do not know whether he is or not) about the little segment of the half circle extending southward in the manner he has indicated; but in the great system which from New York northward and westward expedites the transcontinental mail, and from New York southward, southeastward, and southwestward expedites the other great mails of the country, the gentleman selects one small gap and proposes to apply to it the star-route method. What does his proposition require? According to his amendment the only thing requisite is that there shall be two trunk lines connecting the same terminal points. That might do for a star route; but the proposition ignores the whole purpose of the provision for special mail facilities. Why, sir, perhaps the gentleman is aware, and perhaps he is not, that under this system, which has grown up in past years, the Postmaster-General has power to fix the schedule, to say when a train shall start, to fix the speed of that train, to require the making of certain connections. He may make general changes in the entire control of the train as a mail train. If this amendment should prevail the Postmaster-General would be to that extent deprived of the power to hasten these mails by special facilities, and would be required simply to give the transportation to the company making the lowest bid, although that road might not make the necessary connections, although it might not run on proper time, although it might not subserve the purpose of expediting the great mass of the fast mails. If between two terminal points there should be two railroads, the lowest bidder must do the work, although thereby there might be six or twelve hours' delay in the fast-mail schedule.

That is the trouble. The present system has grown up during the past ten years. It embraces, as I have said, a service of 1,400 miles over all these railroads. If gentlemen want to make a change let them go to the Postmaster-General, and if they can show that, as between two existing lines, "one should be taken and the other left," he will have power to adopt their suggestion. But it is vicious legislation to undertake in this way, without experience or knowledge, to disturb the whole system by a general amendment so badly worded, and calculated to affect so injuriously the existing arrangements.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Mr. Chairman, I apprehend every gentleman on this floor knows the object of Congress in making these appropriations, and will do justice to the Post-Office Department in believing its object is to have the mails of the United States, as well as foreign mails, carried to and fro between the points of destination as quickly as possible.

No matter what may be the object of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WALLACE], it is utterly impossible for him to get a mail from the city of New York to the city of Havana, by the way of New Orleans, within twelve hours as quickly as the mail now goes over the present route It is a great many miles farther, as there is no direct communication.

Mr. WALLACE. I did not say by way of New Orleans. I acknowledge the mail should go by way of Tampa.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. What is the object of the gentleman from Louisiana?

Mr. WALLACE. I have stated it already and do not wish to take up the gentleman's time repeating it.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. I will yield to the gentleman to state it.

Mr. WALLACE. The object I have in offering this amendment is to have the $223,000 of money which is now appropriated to facilitate a fast mail service to Havana spent in such a way that the mails will arrive at Tampa on time and with all the facilities for the Havana mail service, while at the same time extending such facilities to the balance of the country for that appropriation of money as will be tenfold what they are to-day going by coast line, on one side being the broad ocean and on the other a sparsely settled country.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Why, then, does the gentleman not attempt to make an increased appropriation in this bill?

I do not intend to take up the time of the House by any further discussion of the question. So far as the mail upon which the people of my country are dependent are concerned, it is run by a schedule as nearly perfect as time and space will permit. I hope the gentleman's amendment will not prevail.

Mr. WALLACE. I may say, Mr. Chairman, that the main feature of the amendment which I have offered seems to be ignored; that is, that the entire power and discretion in the distribution of this service and the expenditure of the money for this facility, that the whole discretion rests with the Postmaster-General. That amendment does not dictate how he shall spend the money, but simply gives him authority to disburse it as he may think best with the view of securing additional mail facilities. If in his judgment it is possible to secure mail service with the city of Havana in the expenditure of this $223,000 by another line of railway which will give the same time to Havana, and at the same time give fast mail service to the States of Alabama, Louisiana, and Texas with very large increase of service, why surely there can be no objection to the head of the Department doing so. It is left entirely within his discretion. He can select whatever railroad he chooses.

It seems to me to be extraordinary legislation to confine it to one little railroad, one special line, when we have so many competing lines which can offer better facilities. If they can not offer better facilities it is within the discretion of the Postmaster-General to continue the service over the present line of road. If there is no necessity for making a change the present service will not be interfered with; but if a better service can be offered, and the money here appropriated can be so used as to accommodate thirty or forty thousand more people, wealthier communities, larger business interests, and with an empire at one end like Texas, I do not see where the opposition comes from unless it be in behalf of this little line of railroad.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BURROWS. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads how much there is paid for carrying the mail from Tampa to Havana?

Mr. BLOUNT. It is paid out of the steamboat funds, some $30,000.

Mr. BURROWS. Is it not $29,000?

Mr. BLOUNT. About.

Mr. BURROWS. How far is it?

Mr. BLOUNT. What distance?

Mr. BURROWS. Yes.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not remember the exact distance.

Mr. BLANCHARD. The gentleman from Florida can tell.

Mr. BURROWS. Is not that foreign-mail service?

Mr. BLOUNT. It is impossible to hear what is going on, there is so much confusion on the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. BLOUNT. I am told by the gentleman from Florida that the distance is 240 miles from Tampa to Havana.

Mr. BURROWS. For which $29,000 is paid. Is not that foreign; and I should like to ask the gentleman upon what principle it is paid?

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman will remember when I call his attion to it that there is a general provision of law to the effect that when a foreign port is within 200 miles of our coast, that in such case the Postmaster-General may make contracts for the carriage of that mail under the law relating to contracts for steamboat service, and in that way this was done.

Mr. BURROWS. Then the shorter the distance the greater the pay.

Mr. BLOUNT. That may be the gentleman's argument based upon the facts; but I do not want to enter into a discussion of the reason for that provision of law with him now. I think the present Postmaster-General has demonstrated to the people of this country his capability, and that he has administered the postal affairs of the country with a degree of credit that may be envied by any one.

Mr. BURROWS. Nobody raises that question.

Mr. BLOUNT. I know; but I understood the gentleman to say that the shorter the distance the greater the pay, and the inference naturally was that there was some mismanagement on the part of the Post-Office Department, if not something worse.

Mr. BURROWS. I was only referring to this policy. Here is a service of only 200 miles, for which we pay $29,000, while for another service of 5,000 miles distance we pay less than $1,000. I was wondering upon what principle the pay was regulated.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will say to my friend from Michigan that that provision of law was passed during the last administration. Upon what principle it rests I am not able to state to him, but it is on the statute-books, and I am not responsible for it. It was a law of Congress, and in obedience to that law we have prepared this appropriation bill.

Mr. DUNHAM. I ask that the amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the amendment will be again read.

Mr. McCOMAS. I object.

Mr. DUNHAM. Then I take the floor to discuss the amendment, and will occupy the time by having the amendment again read from the desk.

Mr. McCOMAS. I withdraw the objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the word "cents," in line 57:

"Provided, That all sums expended for special facilities shall be expended within the discretion of the Postmaster-General so as to confer the greatest benefit upon the business and postal interests; and when two or more trunk lines are in operation, having the same general direction and terminal points, such facilities shall be extended to the lowest bidder after advertisement."

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. WALLACE.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 13, noes 90.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of the Superintendent of Foreign Mails:
For transportation of foreign mails, $450,000.
For balance due foreign countries, $75,000.

Mr. BURROWS. Under the head of "Transportation of foreign mails" an appropriation of $450,000 is made. I think that is an increase over last year's appropriation of $75,000. What is the reason for the increase?

Mr. BLOUNT. It grows in part out of the matter of compensation paid for the transportation of the foreign closed mails. Heretofore, notwithstanding the law authorized it, there has never been any compensation to vessels for carrying the foreign closed mails at all. During the current fiscal year the steamboat lines carrying the mails, say from New York to Panama, claimed to be entitled to compensation for the service. The Department undertook to examine into the question and found the law perfectly clear and that they were entitled to it. They were astounded that it was never allowed before, but were convinced that it was allowable under the terms of the law. Therefore there will be a deficiency this year of $25,000 from that source, accounting for twenty-five of the seventy-five thousand, and there is an increase in this bill of that amount where provision is made for this sum.

The residue of the seventy-five thousand grows out of an increase of the mail matter itself based on calculation; I mean calculation in part, because the gentleman from Michigan well knows that the percentage which is established in calculating the increase is adduced from considerations based upon averages taken from year to year, and there have been taken 6½ per cent. on the expenditures of 1886, to be added to the expenditures for 1887, and 6½ per cent. added to that for the coming year, in which way this amount has been reached.

There is a reduction, the gentleman will observe, in the matter of balances due to foreign countries to the extent of $25,000, the Postmaster-General disagreeing with the estimate of the Superintendent of Foreign Mails in that regard, based upon an examination of the reports of the Auditor for several years.

Mr. BURROWS. Can the chairman of the committee state—I have not the figures now in mind—how much of this sum of $450,000 is paid to foreign vessels for carrying the mails.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman will find it embodied in the report. I have not undertaken to carry the figures in mind, as it did not illustrate the debate; but in the report of the Superintendent of Foreign Mails it is itemized, and the name of every vessel paid under it has been given.

Mr. BURROWS. I did not know but that the gentleman had the exact figures at hand. It is somewhere over $300,000, is it not—$320,000 that went to foreign ships?

Mr. BLOUNT. I think it is.

Mr. DOCKERY. And for the reason that there were no American vessels to carry the mails.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the committee now rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. McMILLIN reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union having had under consideration the Post-Office appropriation bill, had directed him to report the same to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask the previous question on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the bill was passed.

Mr. BLOUNT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 10457) for the relief of dependent parents and honorably discharged soldiers and sailors who are now disabled and dependent upon their own labor for support.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. BLOUNT in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills. The Clerk will report the first bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10396) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

Mr. WILSON. I ask unanimous consent that that bill be laid over for the present.

Mr. RANDALL. The object being to take up the District appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to passing over for the present the bill the title of which has been read?

There was no objection.

DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Clerk read the title of the next general appropriation bill on the Calendar, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10802) making appropriations to provide for the expenses for the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to consume the time of the committee with any special statement explanatory of the provisions of this bill, but I shall endeavor to answer frankly and fully any questions that may be asked by any member of the committee pending the consideration of the bill.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I hope the gentleman will explain at the outset what increase there is in the bill, if any, over last year, and what for?

Mr. WILSON. In reply to the question which has been asked me by my friend from Ohio, I will state that the increase in this bill over the bill for the present year is, in the aggregate, $100,000. As the gentleman from Ohio is aware, one-half of this sum will be paid out of the general Treasury, and the other half will be paid from the proceeds of local taxes in the District of Columbia.

In the report of the committee which accompanies the bill will be found an accurate statement of the increase and decrease in the appropriations for the several departments of the District government in the bill now reported as compared with the bill for the current year.

The increase in the item of improvements and repairs to the streets and highways of the District, and the repairs, construction, and maintenance of bridges over the bill for the current year is between $58,000 and $59,000. The chief increase in the bill, however, I will state is an increase of $63,670 for the public schools of the District. That represents an increased appropriation for the maintenance of the public schools according to the average annual growth of the District, also an increased appropriation for the building of new school-houses in the District of Columbia.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Does the bill increase any salaries anywhere?

Mr. WILSON. There are no salaries increased in the bill at any point; but I believe in one or two cases the pay of laborers, where it was not supposed to be enough, has been slightly increased.

I yield now to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. O'FERRALL]. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. O'FERRALL. Forty minutes.

Mr. WILSON. I yield forty minutes to the gentleman from Virginia.

EDUCATION BILL.

Mr. O'FERRALL. Mr. Chairman, I shall avail myself of the rules of this House to present my views upon a bill not now before the committee, but which I sincerely hope will receive consideration before this session shall close.

The bill to which I refer is the bill "to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools," and which passed the Senate during the first session of this Congress, and is now sleeping in the Committee on Education of this House.

I believe the only safeguard of our rights and liberties is in a strict adherence to the Constitution. I believe that just as soon as we depart from the plain, written compact under which this union of States was formed we endanger the perpetuity of our institutions, now the admiration and wonder of the world. I am in every sense of the term a strict constructionist.

But, sir, I shall give this bill my earnest support as it came to us from the Senate, without any compunctions of my constitutional conscience.

Much has been said from time to time by the opponents of the bill calculated to create wrong impressions as to its scope, design, and effects. Its provisions have been held up by some as a curse in disguise, and not a blessing, and numerous calamities have been predicted to follow in the wake of its passage.

WHAT IS THE BILL?

Now, sir, what are the provisions of the bill? Permit me to state them in plain and simple language. It proposes to appropriate from the Treasury of the United States for a period of eight years the following sums:

First year, $7,000,000; second year, $10,000,000; third year, $15,000,000; fourth year, $13,000,000; fifth year, $11,000,000; sixth year, $9,000,000; seventh year, $7,000,000; and eighth year, $5,000,000, making in the aggregate $77,000,000 in aid of the establishment and temporary support of common schools in the States and Territories and District of Columbia, and to distribute the same year by year in the proportion that the number of persons of each State and Territory and District of Columbia who, being of the age of ten years and over, can not write may bear to the whole number of such persons in the United States, providing, however, that no more shall be paid to any one of them than she appropriates from her own revenues for common-school purposes. It provides that the money shall be expended to secure the benefits of common-school education to all children of school age, without distinction on account of race or color, but that separate schools for white and colored shall not be considered as a distinction. It provides that no State shall become a beneficiary under it until her Legislature, by bill or otherwise, accepts the provisions of the act. These are the main and important features of the bill in my opinion.

IS THE BILL CONSTITUTIONAL?

I have said in effect that I believe the bill to be constitutional, and I shall endeavor now to give the reasons for the faith that is in me.

The Constitution was intended by its immortal framers as an instrument carrying with it an inherent power to meet every demand that the mutations of time might bring for the peace, welfare, and prosperity of the land over which its benign blessings might extend. It was designed to be broad enough to preserve this Government and protect it against every danger, seen or unseen, immediate or remote, direct or contingent.

It was designed to be strong enough to guard this Government against all evils that might then or in the future tend to destroy or weaken its framework or mar the beauty of its perfect symmetry.

Then, if such were the designs of our fathers, my faith in their almost inspired wisdom leads me to the irresistible conclusion that somewhere within the wide and comprehensive scope of the Constitution authority can be found to stamp out an evil which, like a miserable cancer, is eating at the very vitals of the body-politic and poisoning every blood channel.

Consulting the census statistics of 1880, we find in a population at that time of 50,155,783 that there were 6,239,958 persons of the age of ten years and over who could not write; we find that in a total vote of 9,210,970 that year there were 1,872,017 illiterate voters, assuming that all the illiterate male adults voted. Of course all of them did not vote, but the percentage of those not voting was small.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Is it not a fact that a large proportion of those who were emancipated by the war and who are above the school age can never be reached by any education bill you may pass here or elsewhere?

Mr. O'FERRALL. If the gentleman will only have patience he will find I will refer to all those questions before I take my seat, if sufficient time is allowed me.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I know that to be the fact.

Mr. O'FERRALL. Now, Mr. Chairman, when we come to reflect that this is a representative Government, and that it is directed into the channels of weal or woe by the hands that hold the ballot, that they can preserve or destroy it, that they can carry it forward until it reaches the sublimest pinnacle of national power or they can carry it down, down until it sinks beneath the waters of abject degradation—are not these statistical facts alarming in the extreme, and do they not admonish us of threatening dangers and arouse our most latent energies in behalf of our land and country?

We have to-day a grand heritage. Well, indeed, can we say, "The lines have fallen unto us in pleasant places; yea, we have a goodly heritage." Our nation's flag now floats over a people settled from ocean to ocean. The hum of our industries is heard from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and from the Saint Lawrence to the Rio Grande. Within our borders science has unfolded her spacious volumes in which are written the secret laws of nature. Inventions and discoveries crowd upon each other and fill every space. Our country stands forth in its physical beauty, material greatness, military renown, and statesmanship the superior of any land upon which the sun shines in its meridian brightness.

All this has been the result of the strength of our institutions and of the theory of our federative system. It will not do, however, to assume that because we have attained to so high an eminence and accomplished so much there is no danger lurking in our system. It will not do to argue that because we have passed safely so many rounds in the ladder all above us are safe and sound.

It is our duty to look forward and ever be watchful lest some danger may suddenly appear and find us unable to avert it. It is our duty to test the strength of every round before planting our feet firmly upon it.

This is true statesmanship. Vigilance and watchfulness constitute our only safety, and no free people can be too vigilant and watchful.

No nation ever stood still, and our feet must go forward or slip backward. It should be, as it is, the high aim and purpose of every American patriot to lead his country on to higher national renown and dizzier summits of national glory. But, sir, to do this the hand that directs and controls the march must be guided by a mind-power of intelligence and virtue. That hand, as I have said, is the all-sovereign hand of the people, directing and controlling our destinies, and with its index-finger pointing forward and backward through the medium of the ballot-box. Intelligence at the ballot-box and virtue resulting from enlightenment is the cause I stand here to plead.

Education of the people, high and low, rich and poor, white and colored, as the only assurance we have that our Republic will stand the test of time, and not relapse into degradation and ruin like so many of which it is in its organism much of a prototype, is what I here now, surrounded on all sides by emblems of our national power and greatness, stand to advocate in my weakness. Sir, the views just advanced are not new. The ideas I have just expressed sprung not from my brain, but from the brain of men whose fame is coextensive with the domain of civilization, and is written upon the tablets of history with its pen of steel.

Washington, in his farewell address, declares that "in proportion as the structure of a government gives force to public opinion, it is essential public opinion should be enlightened."

Jefferson, in a letter written in 1816, says:

If a nation expects to be ignorant and free in a state of civilization it expects what never will be. The functionaries of every government have propensities to command at will the liberty and property of their constituents. There is no safeguard for them without information. Where the press is free and every man able to read all is safe.

Madison, in a letter written in 1826, says:

A popular government without popular information, or the means of acquiring it, is but a prologue to a farce or tragedy, or perhaps both. Knowledge will forever govern ignorance, and a people who mean to be their own governors must arm themselves with the power which knowledge gives.

In another letter he says:

The best service that can be rendered to a country, next to that of giving it liberty, is in diffusing the mental improvement essential to the preservation and enjoyment of the blessing.

Monroe, in his inaugural address, in 1817, after speaking of the dangers of ignorance, said:

Let us by all wise and constitutional measures promote intelligence among the people as the best means of preserving our liberties.

I do not quote these writings and expressions with a view of giving information to this House, but I quote them as warnings coming with sage-like force and with the solemnity of messages from the tombs of men who in life devoted all their splendid energies in working out a system of government which would stand the test of time and in growing older grow stronger. I quote them, too, in the pardonable pride of a son of the State that gave birth to these master-builders in the construction of this grand governmental edifice and whose venerated ashes are inurned within her borders and sacred keeping.

I quote them, too, to show that these illustrious men, never dreaming of the mighty events that transpired fifty years and more thereafter, which increased with the dash of the pen illiteracy at our ballot-box and in our citizenship to an extent unequaled in history, sounded a warning in most impressive terms against ignorance in the body-politic.

Not only have these immortal sages thus spoken and written, but also others distinguished in governmental science and historical learning have spoken.

Burke insisted that—

Education is the chief defense of a nation.

Horace Mann said:

Education is our only political safety; outside of this ark all is deluge.

Macaulay uses this language:

The education of the common people is a most effectual means of securing our persons and our property.

Kossuth considered that—

On instruction and education the future security and direction of the destiny of every nation chiefly and fundamentally rest.

Edward Everett declared that—

Education is a better safeguard of liberty than a standing army. If we retrench the wages of the school-master, we must raise those of the recruiting sergeant.

And thus I might continue to quote like expressions from others no less distinguished, but I shall assume as a maxim that the intelligence of a people is a national blessing and the ignorance of a people is a national calamity; that the one is a safeguard of republican institutions, the other an ever-threatening danger.

Is there authority in the Constitution to relieve us of a national calamity, an ever-abiding menace to our institutions? Is there authority to shed the halo of a national blessing over our land?

This brings me to the consideration of one particular clause in our Constitution, for it is under this clause I claim authority for the passage of this important measure. It is known as the "general-welfare" clause:

The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States; but all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States.

"Congress shall have power to provide for the general welfare of the United States."

I plant my feet upon that provision.

I care not whether the general welfare of the United States consists in stamping out human plagues and diseases like small-pox or yellow fever, or guarding against their inroads; meeting the calls of cold and hunger, coming up from a people upon whom the hand of God has been suddenly and heavily laid like those in the Mississippi Valley, when the flood-gates of heaven were recently opened upon them; arresting a cattle distemper which threatens to spread over the country; relieving the general business interest of the country of the oppression of railroad kings; acquiring territory to extend our domain and give greater scope to the enterprise of our people, or in enlightening a class of citizens too poor to acquire sufficient knowledge to enjoy the blessing of liberty, and who, as time rolls on, in their ignorance will be fit only for the stratagem of designing demagogues and thereby threaten the peace, prosperity, and happiness of this land, whose independence was secured through travail and blood. Yes for any and all of these purposes I find in this clause sufficient authority for me to give them my support, and in doing so thank God for such a provision.

Of course I know that the opponents of this bill deny that this clause is authority for this measure, but I will make a wager that the very gentlemen who have so suddenly been seized with constitutional cramps, voted for one or more bills in the nature of the measures I have just described.

But, sir, a simple denial is not argument.

Let them define the limits of this provision; let them tell as to what it applies or how far it reaches; what it includes and what it excludes.

This clause was inserted for a purpose, and that purpose was far-reaching; it did not get there by accident, nor was it mere surplusage.

After prescribing specific powers, the powers to lay and collect taxes, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense, the framers added, and "general welfare of the United States." They then proceeded further to confer the power to borrow money on the credit of the United States; to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the States, and with the Indian tribes; to establish an uniform rule of naturalization, and uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcy; to coin money, &c.; to provide for the punishment of counterfeiting the securities and current coin of the United States; to establish post-offices and post-roads; to promote science; to define and punish piracies and felonies committed on the high seas, &c.; to declare war, grant letters of marque and reprisal, &c.; to raise and support armies; to provide and maintain a navy; to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces; to provide for calling forth the militia; to provide for organizing armies and disciplining the militia, &c.; to exercise exclusive jurisdiction over such district as might become the seat of the Government of the United States, &c., and to make all laws necessary and proper for carrying into execution the powers just enumerated and all other powers vested by the Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any Department or officer therof.

The framers endeavored to provide in specific terms the powers of Congress over all questions which history and experience had taught them would necessarily arise in the organism of this Government and its administration. But these wise men were building a structure for generations unborn, and, as they hoped, for ages to come. They could provide specifically for what history and experience taught them was absolutely and plainly essential, but they knew not, nor could they conceive, what was beyond the reach of their view far down the vista of the future. The light they had was like the stern-light of a ship at sea; it illumined the track behind them, but penetrated not the darkness before them. With that acumen, yea, wisdom that seems to have been more than human, and marked their actions in all that pertained to the great structure they had in hand, and impressed with the idea that however well they might provide for its welfare and guard it against dangers and evils apparent at its building period, they could not foretell what might be lurking along down the future, and they inserted the general-welfare clause, and committed to Congress the power to provide for the general welfare. In my opinion, sir, that instrument, great and wise as it is in every line, and I revere it next to the writings of inspiration, would be imperfect indeed for this age and this people if it were not for this provision. The future to it has brought dangers and evils that were not and could not have been anticipated.

This land of the fathers has been bathed in the commingled blood of its sons, and while more than twenty years have come and gone since the last roll-call and last conflict, and all are again united under a common flag, and now sit together under their father's roof, in their father's house; though these once divided sons have clasped hands and buckled hearts and are stepping together to the music of our reunited Union in the march of progress, one resulting evil of that unfortunate period still exists.

That strife liberated with the quickness of the magician's wand from years of servitude a race of people numbering among us over six millions; it invested them with the rights and imposed upon them the duties of citizenship; it left them among those with whom they had been reared and whose substance had been expended in this lamentable internecine struggle, rendering them too poor to give to the young of this race the instruction necessary to enable them fully to enjoy their rights, comprehend their duties, or appreciate their responsibilities.

This I say was more than twenty years ago, and yet during all this time this Government has looked with careless eye upon these "wards of the nation," and never extended the helping hand to raise them up in the scale of humanity; it has allowed them to plod their way with only such aid as a weak and prostrate people could give them; it has suffered the children of this race to follow along in the same path of ignorance trodden by the parents; it has never sought in any substantial manner to improve them as citizens or enlighten them as voters. Millions upon millions have been expended in the acquirement of territory, the erection of public buildings, and in making a display of national greatness, and in every other conceivable way since emancipation, but not one dollar has been devoted to the discharge of the national obligation to these people.

I say national obligation, for in making them citizens and imposing duties on them this Government incurred an obligation to invest them with the power of discharging these duties, not after the fashion of a horse in a tread-mill or as dumb cattle, but as beings of intelligence.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman from Virginia permit me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. O'FERRALL. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I do not suppose the gentleman means to be understood as charging that any portion of the North desires the South should alone do this work.

Mr. O'FERRALL. Which work?

Mr. BUCHANAN. The education of the colored people. I thought that the gentleman's words might imply that, but I was confident he did not mean to assert it.

Mr. O'FERRALL. No, Mr. Chairman. But as the matter stands now the South is bearing the burden of the education of the colored people.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I understand that. But does not the cry for this bill come largely from the northern portion of this country, the father of it being the Senator from a Northern State, New Hampshire? Is it not a fact that the prevention hitherto of the consideration of this bill in the House has been by the efforts of the gentlemen not from the Northern States?

Mr. O'FERRALL. I can not agree with my friend in regard to the assertion that the consideration of this bill has been objected to only by gentlemen on this side of the House. I think in the last Congress, when opportunities presented themselves for the consideration of the measure, objection came not only from gentlemen on the Democratic side but from gentlemen on the Republican side.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I speak of the present Congress.

Mr. O'FERRALL. There has been no opportunity as yet, so far as I know, in this Congress to get a consideration of this bill. I hope, however, before the session shall close there will be a consideration of it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. And you will then find us on your side.

Mr. O'FERRALL. I am glad to hear that.

Mr. Chairman, every year Congress appropriates money to instruct and educate the Indian. Why? With the view of elevating him and making a better man out of him. I have heard much on this floor as to the hope indulged that the system inaugurated would lead to good results, and that our Indian educational policy would ultimately prove a success. But instead of looking to the wilds of the far West, where the foot of civilization has scarcely more than made its impress, I have but to look from the window of my own home in the heart of civilization, enlightenment, and Christianity, I have but to stand here in my place in these Halls, to see implied faith broken, implied obligations disregarded, and implied promises violated in the case of a class that fill our avenues and even gather about our door-sills.

Sir, it is no answer to the position I take to say, as I have heard it said, that these people were held in slavery for generations by the South, and that the South derived the profits of their labor, and should now bear the burden of their education. Slavery represented capital, but unprofitable capital. If the institution of slavery was wrong, which I shall not discuss, it was a national and not a sectional wrong. The Southern States were no more responsible for it than the Northern States. But suppose the South was not only responsible for slavery but for the war; emancipation came through the General Government, and the Government by emancipation incurred an original obligation to these people.

I simply repeat an historical fact when I say that the Southern States did not participate in any wise in the abolition of slavery. They ratified an accomplished fact when they ratified the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution. But while the hand of the Southern people did not give emancipation, I speak their sentiments when I declare that they would not return the colored man to slavery if they could, and that they have an earnest desire to see him happy and prosperous in his freedom.

Emancipation was the act of the Government, and it thereby incurred an obligation which, as a great and just Government, it must discharge, and in discharging it promote the general welfare. But while I insist the Government should perform this implied obligation to the colored race, I insist more strenuously it should perform its obligation to itself.

I insist it is under an obligation to itself to guard itself against the great evil of illiteracy, and to stamp it out as far as possible in the rising generation, both white and colored, and that nothing will excuse it unless it be found that the Constitution will not warrant it. I ask again, then, is the bill constitutional?

If education affords, as Burke says, "our chief defense," as Mann says, "our only political safety," as Macaulay declares, "our most effectual means of securing our persons and property," as Kossuth considered, "the future security and direction of the destiny of every nation," and as Everett insisted, "our safeguard, better than a standing army," need I ask, will education inure to the general welfare of this nation? An affirmative answer irresistibly forces itself upon every man.

Alexander Hamilton, in the early days of the Republic, said:

> It is, therefore, of necessity left to the discretion of the National Legislature to pronounce upon the objects which concern the general welfare, and for which, under that description, an appropriation of money is requisite and proper; and there seems to be no room for a doubt that whatever concerns the general interest of learning, of agriculture, of manufactures, and of commerce is within the sphere of the national councils as far as regards appropriations of money.

So much, then, upon the question of general welfare.

Now, let us go a step farther. Some gentlemen contend that it infringes upon the rights of the States. I defy any gentleman to refer to any provision of the bill which can be even tortured into an infringement upon any right reserved to the States.

The States are not interfered with in their right of self-government, in managing their local affairs, in levying as little or as much as they deem proper for educational purposes, or instructing their children as in their judgment may seem best. No books are prescribed, no system or course of study laid down, nor even a suggestion made as to the mode or manner of conducting the schools. All that is required in order to avail herself of the benefits of the bill is that the State shall have a free common-school system. She can receive no more from the national Treasury than she appropriates from her own revenues; but the amount received, whatever it may be, she will use with the same freedom that she uses the funds raised by her own system of taxation for school purposes. In a word, the national fund will be simply and purely supplemental to the State fund.

Now, sir, under this plain and correct statement of the provisions of the bill, pray tell me what State right will be infringed, what right will be lost to the States, what right will be acquired by the National Government should this bill become a law? Why, sir, so absolutely free of infringement is this bill that it leaves each State to determine for itself whether she will receive the money. It, in fact, recognizes the supremacy of the States over their schools, for no State is in any manner required to receive a single dollar of the fund. She can decline in terms or by mere inaction refuse to receive it. Mr. Madison, in his discussion of the Constitution, said:

> The powers reserved to the several States will extend to all the objects which, in the ordinary course of affairs, concern the lives, liberties, and properties of the people, and the internal order, improvement, and prosperity of the States.

Does this bill interfere with any of these reserved powers? Not one, directly or indirectly, remotely or contingently. I am now done with the constitutional question, and will consider other objections which have been presented.

WILL IT LEAD TO NATIONAL CONTROL OF THE SCHOOLS?

I have heard it urged that this bill is only the fore-runner of a national system of education, and that in time the Federal Government will assume control of the schools in the States.

Sir, while vigilance is well, and I would earnestly urge it, as I have urged it in all our affairs, we should take care also not to be timid, nor suspect some unseen danger in every bush. Constant forebodings of evil may prevent a people from taking advantage of opportunities for profit and gain, or of securing blessings which may lie at their doors.

I take this bill as I find it. I pass my judgment upon it as upon any other matter of legislation.

Why should any one conclude from the introduction of this bill that there is a preconcerted scheme to secure Federal control of the schools in the States, any more than that the passage of the cattle-disease bill in the last session was intended as a step in the direction of securing Federal control of all the cattle in the various States, or that the interstate-commerce bill was designed to bring about a system of Federal railways, or the establishment of the National Board of Health was a scheme to give the Federal Government hygienic supervision over all the States? Is there more reason for one conclusion than the other? I think not.

During the Forty-first Congress a bill was introduced to establish a national system of education. It was, however, defeated, as it ought to have been, for it was without even the color of authority. It would have been an usurpation of power, the destruction of local self-government, and centralization in its most dangerous form. It was intended to supersede all State systems of education, place the schools under Federal control, and educate the children according to the peculiar ideas, political or religious, or both, of the commissioner of education, an officer to be created by the bill.

Wise heads and patriotic hearts in that Congress secured its defeat. It had really few advocates. If this bill were similar in any respect to that; if it encroached in any manner upon the autonomy of the States; if it sought in anywise to put the plastic mind of the youth of this land in the Federal mold, no matter what party might be in power; if it proposed to inaugurate a system by which the children of a State were to be taught any particular rules of etchics or morals, or trained in any special line of thought; if it directly or indirectly, remotely or contingently, suggested even an interference with the sole, exclusive, and absolute jurisdiction of each State over its own schools, my voice should be raised in opposition to it, and my tongue should rest paralyzed in my mouth before it should give an affirmative response upon the roll-call of my name on its passage. But, sir, it is as free of any such objections as the most careful language can make it.

WILL IT PLACE THE STATES IN THE POSITION OF MENDICANTS?

I have read in some journals, and I have heard it stated by opponents of this measure, that the passage of this bill would place the States in the position of mendicants, beggars.

Sir, I stand here on behalf of Virginia, along with my colleagues, to plead at the bar of this House for aid in the great cause of education; but I spurn the charge that Virginia appears as a beggar. She comes rather like a queen, though not in royal robes, to raise her voice in these legislative halls of the nation in behalf of her children who are suffering with the blindness of illiteracy, and thereby threatening not only her weal, but the weal of the nation, and she asks that the obligation of educating them may be shared by the nation, who will at least be an equal beneficiary in the results. Whatever may affect the body-politic of Virginia will affect the body-politic of the nation, for they are indivisible, and one is a part of the whole.

Mendicant! No. Virginia never has been a beggar. She may have appeared in tattered garments, bedraggled in the mire, in rags in her recent years, but her step was as proud and her head was as erect as when her voice was the most potent in the councils of the land and throughout the borders of the land. In her prosperity she gave freely of her patrimony, and with a lavish hand showered her blessings into the lap of the nation. She contributed of her substance for the common defense, and permitted mighty States to be carved out of her side; and now, when she comes knocking at the door and seeking not alms, but simply asking that the nation will unite with her in enlightening her children, in whom the nation has a common interest, she is met with the rebuff from some, "Depart, ye mendicant, ye beggar!" I hurl back, in her name, the insult, and stamp under my feet the charge or insinuation.

NO TAXATION NECESSARY—MONEY NOW IN THE TREASURY.

Again, it is urged that Congress has no power to tax the people for the benefit of the States, and that this being a tax for their benefit Congress cannot impose it.

If education is for the general welfare Congress has the same power to tax for educational purposes as for the many other purposes for which for the general welfare it has assumed the power to tax. But, sir, the imposition of no tax is necessary; the money is now in the vaults of the Treasury, in amount, perhaps fivefold the amount, which will be appropriated during the period for which this bill will be enacted.

Whose money is it? It is the people's money; it belongs to them today, and ought to be in their pockets. If the people ask that their money shall be returned to them in educational blessings for their children, who has the right to object?

Will the Government collect from them hundreds of millions of dollars more than necessary to pay the expenses and meet the demands of Government, and when they ask that a portion, at least, shall be returned to them for the purposes of education, only tighten its grip upon the purse-strings or strengthen the bolts upon its vaults?

Sir, this is no demand for taxation; it is simply an appeal in behalf of as noble a purpose as could inspire a people, for a restoration of money unjustly collected, yes, extorted from them, and now hoarded up in the Treasury. But, sir, suppose the Treasury were empty instead of plethoric. I insist the taxing power for the purposes of this bill could be directly exercised.

I desire now, Mr. Chairman, to present in as forcible a manner as my ability will admit another phase of the important question involved in this bill.

INEQUALITY OF BURDEN IMPOSED BY THE ACT OF EMANCIPATION.

Discarding for the present the idea I have heretofore advanced, that the National Government is under an implied obligation to the colored race to educate its young, let us look at the subject in another light and from another standpoint.

At the threshold of the remarks I am about to submit, I desire to express my exceeding gratification at the spirit which has generally pervaded discussions on this floor during the four sessions I have had the honor of sitting here. Northern men and Southern men with rare exceptions have met each other in debate without an exhibition of the partisan spirit and sectional bias which at one time characterized the proceedings of this body.

Times have changed, and augur well for the peace and harmony, prosperity, and growth of our priceless heritage. Greater intercourse and intermingling, increased community of interests and comparison of opinions, have opened up the well-springs of the heart and directed them into the natural channels of fraternal feeling and brotherly love. We stand more closely allied than ever as one people, not only in name but in fact, not only in mind but in soul.

A new era has dawned; a brighter day has thrown wide open its gates. The season of crimination and recrimination has passed with patriots, I trust never to return; the spirit of that broad catholicism that teaches to forgive and forget, to anoint wounds with the oil of love, and to tread tenderly upon the graves of those who fell in defense of what each had been taught was right, is abroad in our land, shedding the warmth of its influence from center to circumference, and tending to melt any remaining iceberg in every heart.

Questions which may peculiarly affect any particular section of this Union can now be discussed here freely, frankly, and kindly, on their merits.

The most powerful agency in working this pleasant, happy, and fortunate change has been the soldier element of both sides. They had felt each other's steel and heard each other's shouts of victory, and knew they were foemen worthy of each other. When the confederate surrendered his sword or stacked his musket he did so without shame, for he had done his best, and when the Federal received it he received it in the pride of his courage, that had wrested it from such a foeman. True soldiers are always magnanimous and never cruel. A brave man never kicks, but always raises up a fallen enemy.

When the funeral knell of the Confederacy was sounded, filling the souls of the South with anguish, bowing the heads of her aged men in despair, striking down the energies of her young sons, and dropping her daughters to their knees in prayer for her deliverance from the throes of defeat, her soldiers, with heads erect and conscious pride in their valor, looked with the eyes of confidence to the soldiers of the North, knowing full well that men who had shown such valor on the field would not mar their glory by oppressing a brave, but conquered, an heroic, but subjugated, people. Their confidence was, indeed, well founded, and, weighing every word I utter, I say if the South has reason to complain of any treatment she has received since Appomattox, her complaint does not lie at the door of the Federal soldiers.

The wheel of time has placed many years between us and Appomatox, but during all these years, more and more with each year, the soldiers of the two sections have been cultivating fraternal feelings and healing the wounds and obliterating as far as possible the scars inflicted by one upon the other. They have enjoyed each other's hospitality; they have met together where their bayonets bristled and crossed, their swords flashed and slashed, their muskets rattled and their cannons roared, and under their pitched tents and around their camp-fires have fought their battles o'er, smoked the pipe of peace, drank to the memory of the brave fellows who fell wearing both the blue and the gray, and in their hearts repeated the lines of the poet:

> The grass grows green on the graves where they lay,
> The flowers bloom alike o'er the blue and the gray,
> And tears of loved ones are mingling with dew,
> While with it God blesses the gray and the blue—and unitedly consecrated themselves to this union of States, and, like Hannibal at the altar of his gods, sworn eternal allegiance to their country: eternal hatred of its foes.

Then when their tents have been struck and their camp-fires put out they have returned to their homes better men and truer patriots by reason of the contact and intermingling, and each has devoted himself to the cultivation of fraternal feelings, and thus, as wave upon wave, their influence has spread over the whole land. It is felt in the family circle and social circle, in business relations, and in the State and national councils. It is felt here in these Halls. As one who wore the gray for four years, and with no tinge of shame now upon my cheek, I thank God I have lived to see wounds healed, scars effaced, waste places restored, and, better than all, malice plucked out and souls swelling with fraternal feeling.

Returning now, Mr. Chairman, to the thread of my remarks, I indulge the flattering hope that I will strike that high sense of right and justice, equity and fair dealing, which has been kindled in each section toward the other, and that the heavy burden now resting upon the people of eleven States, the result of that war, will be raised from their shoulders and distributed among all the States.

That burden, I need not repeat, is the great burden of illiteracy.

Let us look at plain and unvarnished facts. In 1880, according to the census reports, within the States of Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, and Virginia there were 3,918,967 illiterates, white and colored, of the age of ten years and over. They were distributed among these States, as follows:

States.	White.	Colored.	Total.
Alabama	111,767	321,680	433,447
Arkansas	98,542	103,473	202,015
Florida	19,763	60,420	80,183
Georgia	128,934	391,482	520,416
Louisiana	58,951	259,429	318,380
Mississippi	53,448	319,753	373,201
North Carolina	192,032	271,943	463,975
South Carolina	59,777	310,071	369,848
Tennessee	216,227	194,495	410,722
Texas	123,912	192,520	316,432
Virginia	114,692	315,660	430,352
Total	1,178,043	2,740,926	3,918,967

Of this number it will be observed 2,740,926 were colored.

In the other twenty-seven States and all the Territories and District of Columbia there were 2,520,989 illiterates, white and colored, of the age of ten years and over.

They were distributed as follows:

States.	White.	Colored.	Total.
California	26,090	27,340	53,430
Colorado	9,906	568	10,474
Connecticut	26,763	1,661	28,434
Delaware	8,346	11,068	19,414
Illinois	132,426	12,971	135,407
Indiana	100,398	10,363	110,761
Iowa	44,337	2,272	46,609
Kansas	24,888	14,588	39,476
Kentucky	214,497	133,895	348,392
Maine	21,758	412	22,170
Maryland	44,316	90,172	134,488
Massachusetts	90,658	2,322	92,980
Michigan	58,932	4,791	63,723
Minnesota	33,506	1,040	33,546
Missouri	152,510	56,244	208,754
Nebraska	10,926	602	11,528
Nevada	1,915	2,154	4,060
New Hampshire	14,208	94	14,302
New Jersey	44,049	9,200	53,249
New York	208,175	11,425	219,600
Ohio	115,491	16,356	131,847
Oregon	4,343	3,080	7,423
Pennsylvania	209,981	18,083	228,014
Rhode Island	23,544	1,249	24,793
Vermont	15,681	156	15,837
West Virginia	75,237	10,139	85,376
Wisconsin	54,233	1,325	55,558
Arizona	4,824	1,018	5,842
Dakota	4,157	664	4,821
Idaho	784	994	1,778
Montana	631	1,076	1,707
New Mexico	49,597	7,559	57,156
Utah	8,137	689	8,826
Washington	1,429	2,460	3,889
Wyoming	374	182	556
District of Columbia	3,988	21,790	25,778
Total	1,841,037	679,952	2,520,989

Of this number only 679,952 were colored, and to this fact I call especial attention.

The population of the first-named eleven States was 12,990,146; of this number there were 7,622,852 whites. The population of the other twenty-seven States and the Territories and the District of Columbia was 37,165,637; of this number there were 35,780,118 whites.

So 7,622,852 white people in the first named eleven States have cast upon them 2,740,926 colored illiterates, while 35,780,118 white people in the other States and the Territories and the District of Columbia have only 679,952 colored illiterates.

Of course all of these illiterates are not of school age; many of them have passed it, and the bill can do them no good; but these figures are given to present the relative number of illiterates and thereby show the relative number of children of school age among them.

In other words, a little less than one-sixth of the white people of the country have the education of about nine-elevenths of the colored illiterates thrown upon them, while the residue of the white people, a little more than five-sixths, have only about two-elevenths. Is this just?

But let us not stop here; let us go further.

The assessed wealth in realty of the first named eleven States was $1,870,736,584; the assessed wealth in realty of the other States and the Territories and the District of Columbia was $15,032,019,308. So one-eighth of the assessed value in realty of the country is required to provide for the education of nine-elevenths of the colored illiteracy, while seven-eighths escape with two-elevenths.

Is this equitable?

In the first named eleven States there were 1,741,524 white male adults; in the other States and the Territories and the District of Columbia there were 9,601,481. So that in the one there were eight colored illiterates to every five white male adults; in the other, one colored illiterate to every sixteen white male adults, and the relative proportion, I assume, is kept up in those of school age.

Does not this strike every reasonable mind as a crying inequality?

It seems to me with this array of statistical facts I can not appeal in vain to the sense of right and justice, equity, and fair-dealing of this House. "Do unto others as you would have others do unto you" is one of the precepts of that religion under whose teachings we profess as a people to square our actions. As the burden rests now it is most grievous. Remember I beg, that this burden resulted from a struggle which did not originate with the men who participated in it, for the seed were sown long before most of the participants were born. This conflict was the result of education—education in different schools, taught by different teachers. The boy of the South followed the teachings of his father, the boy of the North as naturally absorbed the doctrines of his father, and each carried them into practice in manhood. It was a contest for principle, not for conquest or plunder, glory or renown. The South failed, and the arbitrament of the sword settled for all time the principle out of which the conflict sprung. The South is as truly loyal this day, as true to the flag this hour, as the North.

Southern men sit in this House and vote day after day and session after session for the relief of those who suffered in person or property on the Union side in that war of principle; they vote for appropriations to erect monuments to the memory of the dead Union heroes of that struggle; they vote money to build and support soldiers' homes and to pension the brave survivors who were maimed or crippled or broken in health in the line of duty, and the widows and children of those who fell with their uniforms on, or whose soldier spirits have taken their flight to meet a soldier's God since the Angel of Peace spread its white wings over us.

When Southern Representatives thus vote they vote money raised by their people as well as the people of the States wherein the bones of the Federal dead repose. They have in their midst soldiers' widows and orphans, too, and they see around them on every hand the wooden leg and armless sleeve, the sunken cheek and emaciated form of the confederate veteran, too, with no strong governmental arm to support them, no open governmental hand to comfort them.

Now, these Representatives of the South come appealing simply that an appropriation, inconsiderable indeed, when we compare it with the ability of this Government, may be made to lighten the burden on the shoulders of their States, and aid them in educating their children so they may become better citizens as they grow up, possess greater capacity for good and less inclination to evil, increase the enjoyment of their rights, and more fully comprehend their duties.

I here submit a statement of the amount each State will receive in the eight years under the provisions of this bill:

Alabama	$5,370,848 45
Arkansas	2,503,170 97
Florida	993,548 79
Georgia	6,448,482 66
Louisiana	3,945,051 48
Mississippi	4,624,339 33
North Carolina	5,749,121 37
South Carolina	4,582,792 26
Tennessee	5,089,262 62
Texas	3,920,913 78
Virginia	5,332,498 25
	48,560,029 96

WHAT VIRGINIA HAS DONE FOR EDUCATION AND WHAT SHE HAS PAID INTO THE UNITED STATES TREASURY.

Standing here now and speaking particularly for Virginia as one of her Representatives on this floor, I declare that to-day her people, without regard to race or color, send up as with one voice their petitions for the speedy passage of this bill.

Party lines are obliterated and partisan feeling buried when Virginians come to consider the blessings it will bring and the fruits it will bear throughout the borders of their State. Virginia points with satisfaction to what she has done for the education of her children; she refers to the flattering report of the Commissioner of Education upon the efficiency of her system; she reverts to the fact that though in 1870 her waste places and charred ruins still filled every landscape and the grass had not returned to her fields trodden and beaten out by the hoof of war; that though gloom hung over her homes like a pall and desolation was seen around every homestead and poverty at every hearthstone; that though her people were involved in private debt and loaded down by State debt, she determined even amid all these surroundings to do her duty to her children as far as in her power, and she inaugurated a system of free common schools for the education of all without distinction on account of race or color, and this, too, five years before required to do so under the provisions of her "reconstructed" constitution.

In 1880 her school fund amounted to $1,335,984 and each year since it has been as much. Other Southern States have done perhaps as well, some of them it may be better. I have seen it stated, and I think correctly, that the Southern States pay annually for school purposes $13,000,000, $5,000,000 of which is expended in the education of colored children. So the Southern States in seeking this aid come exhibiting a record of earnestness and zeal in their efforts to do their whole duty. But, with all they have been able to do, they have not met the demands of education.

I may be pardoned if I refer to the fact that Virginia has been no dependent province nor unproductive territory so far as paying revenue into the national Treasury is concerned. She has had her tobacco fields and her distilleries, and though she has felt keenly the injustice and iniquity of the internal-revenue system, being trained in the school of forbearance, she has borne the wrongs and suffered the oppression resulting from it, and has met every demand, only entering her protest against the system.

According to a statement I have from an authentic source, from 1865 to 1886 inclusive, she paid over $9.000,000 on distilled spirits and about $90,000,000 on tobacco, making in the aggregate about $100,000,000, or about $5,000,000 annually.

Should this aid be given her she will only have returned to her something over $5,000,000 in all the years it will continue on the sum the Government has drawn each year from her for the last twenty years.

I have now nearly concluded my remarks.

My only apology for consuming so much time in the dying hours of this Congress is the deep interest the people of my State feel in this matter and my belief in its almost God-given justice.

There is not in my opinion any measure pending now or that has been before Congress during my service so far-reaching in its importance, fraught with so much good, ladened with such blessings and promising such results as this bill. There is nothing that so appeals to the humanity and heart of this nation or to the manhood and sense of right of its people.

Let it not be said that this Government will unlock its vaults to arrest a cattle disease, but not to stamp out the plague of illiteracy in her body-politic.

Let it not be said that this Government regards the health of the bodies of her dumb cattle with more consideration than the health of the minds of her children.

Let it not be said that this Government looks with less concern upon her citizens possessed of priceless souls, than upon her chattels, whose value is weighed in the scales of money.

Hand it not down in history that this Congress, representing the advanced enlightenment of the nineteenth century, now near its close, and a land unlimited in resources, turns a deaf ear to the appeals of the rising generation to throw the light of education into the darkened recesses of their minds.

Hand it not down in history that eleven States representing a little less than one-sixth of the white population, one-eighth of the assessed value in realty, and one-seventh of the white male adults of this Union shall struggle on as they have been doing for years under the weight of about nine-elevenths of the illiterates of that class who w ere made citizens by the powerful hand of the Government.

Let not these things be said; let not these things be recorded; but rather let it be said and recorded that this Government is parental in the consideration of her children, and her people, and in the discharge of her duties.

In thus acting she will not depart from the lighted way of the Constitution; she will not violate State rights nor run upon the shoals of consolidation and centralization. Many of her ablest constitutional lawyers in both political parties and in both branches of Congress, men whose opinions flash like coruscations in the clouds, have so advised her.

Less than two years ago a monument was completed and dedicated in this capital city to the memory of him who was the father of his country, and whose name is resounded by the deep peal of human voices like the heavings of the great ocean.

He liberated his country from the thraldom of tyranny, and declared that for his people enlightenment is essential.

How appropriate, then, it will be to follow up the erection of this marble pile with the passage of this measure and the erection in the hearts of the people to whom Washington gave liberty of a monument of gratitude, which will last even when that marble pillar shall have crumbled to the earth!

I make one last appeal for the instruction of the children of this land, for the education of the poor and the enlightenment of the ignorant; and I indulge the hope that this House, following the example of the Senate, will send a thrill of joy and gladness not only into the cottage of the humble and the cabin of the poor but into every house wherein a human heart beats in the great cause of education.

I return my thanks to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON] for his kindness in yielding so much of his time to me. [Applause.]

Mr. WILSON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN].

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as I submitted the minority report by means of which this bill is upon the Calendar, I feel that I ought to say something about it; but I will not occupy the time of the Committee of the Whole if I can have permission to print some remarks upon the bill in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate disagreed to the amendments of the House to a bill (S. 2256) to create a port of delivery at Lewes, Del., asked for a conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed Mr. GORMAN, Mr. MCMILLAN, and Mr. GRAY as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WILSON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask that the Clerk proceed with the reading of the bill by paragraphs under the rule.

The Clerk, reading the bill by paragraphs, read as follows:

For improvement of streets and avenues named in the schedule of work on city streets and avenues proposed for the fiscal year 1888, contained in House Executive Document No. 18, Forty-ninth Congress, second session, as follows: In Georgetown, $40,000; in the northwest section, substituting New Jersey avenue, from M street to the Boundary, for New Hampshire avenue from Q street to Sixteenth street, $115,000; in the southwest section, $40,000; in the southeast section, $55,000; in the northeast section, $40,000; and for filling streets below grade, at not exceeding 10 cents per cubic yard, $10,000; in all, $300,000.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I make that motion for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee having charge of this bill, whether in this, or in any other paragraph in the bill, authority is given for the extension of Massachusetts avenue?

Mr. WILSON. No authority exists in this bill, Mr. Chairman, for any expenditure for the extension of Massachusetts avenue.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, it is due to the commissioners to say also that they have not asked for any expenditure for that purpose.

Mr. STEELE. I would like to know, Mr. Chairman, whether it is in order to move to strike out the enacting clause and insert an appropriation of $248,201.60 to be expended under the direction of the commissioners of the District of Columbia, as was done in the river and harbor bill the other day? [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. That is not in order until the bill has been read through by paragraphs.

Mr. STEELE. That bill had not been read through.

The Clerk read as follows:

For current work on county roads and suburban streets, including any road that may be opened by reason of the building of a bridge over the Eastern Branch at the termination of Pennsylvania avenue, $40,000.

Mr. MCCOMAS. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by inserting after the word "dollars," in line 189, the following:

Provided, That the Tennallytown, Seventh street, and Bladensburg road be first completed up to the limits of the District of Columbia, out of this sum.

I offer this amendment because it expresses in terms what I understand to be the purpose of the appropriation, and simply makes it so explicit that it can not be misunderstood. I am confident that that is the object of the item in the bill, and I think this proviso will be acceptable to my colleague in charge of the bill.

Mr. WILSON. I am not authorized, Mr. Chairman, to accept the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland. I will say to him, however, that both in last year's bill and in this, the appropriation has been increased for the very purpose indicated in his amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For harbor and river front: For the improvement and protection of the harbor and river front, the enforcement of laws and regulations, construction and maintenance of wharves and buildings, $10,000: Provided, That the amounts collected for leases and wharf charges shall be paid to the collector, for payment into the Treasury to the credit of the United States and the District of Columbia in equal parts.

Mr. COMPTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend that paragraph by inserting, after line 224, the following:

And provided further, That the additional sum of $10,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated to be disbursed by the Commissioners of the District for the purpose of keeping the Potomac River open when blockaded by ice.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Chairman, I must raise the point of order upon that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. WILSON. My point is that there is no law authorizing any such expenditure. I will also say to the gentleman from Maryland that there is in this bill an emergency fund which can be used in case of flood or other disaster.

Mr. COMPTON. Will the gentleman indicate how that fund can be used for such purpose?

Mr. WILSON. If the gentleman will turn to line 550 of the bill, page 23, he will find a provision for an emergency fund, "to be expended in case of emergency, such as riot, pestilence, calamity by flood or fire."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will take the uncontradicted assertion of the gentleman from West Virginia that there is no law authorizing this expenditure, and will sustain the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For teachers: For teachers, not to exceed six hundred and fifty-four in number, to be employed at a rate of compensation not to exceed the rate provided by the present schedule of salaries, and at an average salary not to exceed $670, $438,270: Provided, That not exceeding $1,500 shall be paid to a director of music.

Mr. LONG. I raise a question of order on the last clause of the paragraph just read—

Provided, That not exceeding $1,500 shall be paid to a director of music.

The salary paid to this officer under the present schedule is, I understand, $2,000. If this proviso should become law it will practically fix the salary for the coming fiscal year at not exceeding $1,500. This is a change of law, because, under the present law, the salary paid is $2,000.

Mr. WILSON. I believe it is true that the present incumbent of the office of director of music receives a salary of $2,000. But the office is not one established by law; and there is no law which fixes the salary to be paid to him.

Mr. LONG. But, under the present law, the commissioners have the right to employ a director of music, and to pay him, as they now do, $2,000. If this proviso becomes law they will not have power to pay him more than $1,500. Hence this is a change of law, because it deprives the commissioners of a power they now possess under the law.

Mr. WILSON. This is merely a restriction upon the appropriation. There is now no law bearing upon the subject at all, as I understand. This restricts the discretion of the commissioners, and limits the amount which can be paid for this purpose.

Mr. LONG. Certainly. It not only limits the appropriation, but, as the gentleman states, restricts the discretion of the commissioners. It provides that they shall not have the power they now have to pay this officer $2,000. Therefore it is a change of existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. O'HARA. I move to amend by inserting after the word "dollars," in line 256, this proviso:

Provided, That no discrimination shall be made in salary between male or female teachers holding the same grade of certificate and performing similar duties.

Mr. WILSON. I make a point of order against this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For buildings for schools: For building an addition to the Columbia road school, $3,000; for building an addition to the Hamilton road school, $3,000; for building an eight-room school building on the lot adjoining the Wallach school building, $25,600; for building an eight-room school building on the lot adjoining the Sumner school building, $28,400; for building an eight-room school building in school division No. 4, $25,000; and the commissioners are authorized to sell any lot now owned by the District in said division and to apply the proceeds of such sale to the purchase of a more eligible building lot, if in their judgment expedient; and for such purpose the additional sum of $3,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is also appropriated; in all, $88,000: Provided, That the plans and specifications for each of said buildings, and for all other buildings provided for in this act, shall be prepared by the inspector of buildings of the District of Columbia, and shall be approved by the architect of the Capitol and the commissioners of the District, and said buildings shall be constructed by the commissioners in conformity therewith.

Mr. WILSON. I desire on behalf of the committee to move a verbal amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "building," where it occurs in lines 293, 295, 296, 298, and 301, insert "and furnishing."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I move to amend by inserting after the word "sell," in line 303, the words "and convey."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

FOR THE FIRE DEPARTMENT.

For one chief engineer, $1,800; one fire-marshal, $1,000; one clerk, $900; two foremen, acting as assistant engineers, at $1,200 each; seven foremen, at $1,000 each; seven engineers, at $1,000 each; seven firemen, at $840 each; two tillermen, at $840 each; nine hostlers, at $840 each; sixty privates, at $780 each; three watchmen, at $600 each; one veterinary surgeon for all departments of the District government, $400; repairs to engine-houses, $2,000; repairs to apparatus and new appliances, $3,000; purchase of hose, $2,000; for fuel, $2,000; purchase of horses, $2,000; forage, $5,000; contingent expenses, including office-rent, horseshoeing, furniture, fixtures, washing, oil, medical and stable supplies, harness, blacksmithing, labor, gas, and other necessary items, $7,500; in all, $108,920.

Mr. WILSON. I move to amend by striking out, after the words "sixty privates," in line 367, the words "at $780 dollars each," and inserting "at $800 each." This is the amount now paid; it was not the intention of the committee to make any change in this respect.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows, under the head "For Reform School:"

For construction of greenhouses, with necessary heating apparatus complete, $4,500; for construction of one workshop building, with necessary heating apparatus complete, $4,700; for grading, draining, and permanently improving the school grounds, $500; in all, $9,700.

Mr. STEELE. I move to amend by striking out, in lines 503 and 504, the appropriation for the construction of greenhouses. I would be in favor of turning over the Botanical Gardens, superintendent and all, to this Reform School. It is "a thing of beauty."

Several MEMBERS. And "a joy forever."

Mr. STEELE. But at the same time I would like to dispense with it. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILSON. I make a point of order upon the amendment.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. The point of order is good. Read on.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. WILSON. I move that the committee rise, and report the bill as amended to the House.

Mr. HATCH. I hope the gentleman will not insist on that motion, but will simply move that this bill be laid aside to be reported to the House. Let us then take up the agricultural appropriation bill. It will not take fifteen minutes to read it and dispose of it. It contains no new legislation, and makes no increase of salaries. There is nothing in it that any gentleman will object to.

Mr. WILSON. After this bill is passed by the House the gentleman can move to go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of his bill.

Mr. HATCH. To report this bill now, and then go back into committee, would be simply a consumption of time for no good purpose. We ought to take up the agricultural appropriation bill now, so that it may be promptly in the hands of the Senate.

Mr. WILSON. I ask for a vote on my motion.

The motion of Mr. WILSON was agreed to; there being—ayes 45, noes 31.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLOUNT reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10802) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back with amendments.

Mr. WILSON. I move the previous question on agreeing to the amendments and ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. If a separate vote is not demanded on any amendment the question will be taken on the amendments in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. WILSON. I call the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was passed.

Mr. WILSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. NORWOOD. I ask, by unanimous consent, to report from the Committee on Naval Affairs a joint resolution in these words:

That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to readvertise for bids for the construction of cruiser No. 1, known as the Newark, and to contract for the construction of the same for any sum which, together with the cost of equipment, not including the armament, shall not exceed $1,300,000.

Mr. RANDALL. Let it be printed in the RECORD, so we may see it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and the resolution is ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill (H. R. 1286) to authorize Frank W. Hunt to erect and maintain a ferry across the Missouri River at the military reservation of Fort Buford; when the Speaker signed the same.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of taking up and considering the agricultural appropriation bill.

ADJOURNMENT.

The House divided on the motion to adjourn; and there were—ayes 60, noes 52.

Mr. HATCH demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HATCH and Mr. MCMILLIN were appointed.

Mr. HATCH. It will not take up fifteen minutes.

The tellers reported—ayes 50, noes 45.

So the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a matter relating to the Journal. The motion in regard to the Pacific railroad funding bill was that it be postponed until next week, Monday, February 7, with the same rights that it already had. I see the clerks have journalized it as a new special order, which would give it a right later than the other special orders which have been made in the mean time, although it was an earlier order. I ask that the Journal be corrected in that respect.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the order the same as the Senator from Massachusetts does, and the clerks understand that that is the effect of the present entry. However——

Mr. HOAR. I understand that where there are several special orders they come up in their right, in the order of the date at which they were made special orders under the rule. This bill is the earliest special order on the Calendar, and if it is journalized as a new special order made on Saturday for the first time it will stand later than the others.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator desire to have it stand at the head of the special orders, or the second, on the Calendar?

Mr. HOAR. With its present rights.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be observed.

Mr. HOAR. I do not suppose the bill will then be taken up, but I do not want it to lose any rights if it should be deemed advisable to take it up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so entered. The Journal will stand approved, if there be no objection.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Supervising Architect of that Department as to an additional appropriation for a pile foundation for the custom-house building at Key West, Fla.; and also as to an appropriation of $250,000 for the construction of an additional story on the custom-house building at New York city; which, with the accompaning papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, submitting a statement as to the census of the State of Florida, taken by the State authorities under the act of Congress approved March 3, 1879, making an appropriation for taking the tenth and subsequent censuses of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the petition of Skillen Post, No. 47, Grand Army of the Republic, Rome, N. Y., praying for the passage of the anti-Mormon bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of Electa W. Jacobs, of Mount Airy, Ohio, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MCMILLAN presented a joint memorial of the Legislature of Minnesota; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A joint memorial to Congress relating to the improvement of water-ways, &c.

To the Congress of the United States in Senate and House assembled.

The Legislature of Minnesota, in senate and house assembled, sends greeting as follows:

Whereas the State of Minnesota, located in the heart of the continent, remote from the seaboard, and its million and a quarter of people largely dependent on the production of wheat, which must find a market in distant States or foreign countries, over long railway routes or unimproved water-ways, and meet competition in the markets of the world from the products of the cheap labor systems of other countries, especially from India and Russia; and

Whereas the expenses of transporting our product under the present system of railway transportation, or the imperfect water-ways are such as to render production unprofitable as well as expensive to the consumers, and at the same time affording undue advantages to our competitors in other countries; and

Whereas we firmly believe that the natural water-ways which extend from our State to the markets of the world by the lake routes to the East and the Mississippi River to the South, when properly improved, the cost of transportation would be so greatly reduced as to enable this people to command a reasonable recompense for their labors; and

Whereas the meager appropriations heretofore made by Congress for the improvement of our rivers and harbors, as well as the canals which connect us with the markets, have resulted in the constant decrease in the expenses of transportation, until the bulk of all our products now find their way to market by water, at less rates than would be possible to expect on railways without water competition; and

Whereas we further believe that by more liberal allowances to enable the engineers of the United States Army to carry out their well-devised plans for the improvement of these several water routes, as contained in their several reports, will still further reduce the cost of transporting all that we send out or bring in: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That, in the name of the people of Minnesota, we do most earnestly memorialize and petition the Congress of the United States to make such liberal appropriations for the carrying of these much-needed works and enable the engineers to complete them within the shortest possible time, and thus afford to this people minimum rates of transportation; that our Senators be instructed, and our representatives be requested, to use all possible effort to secure at the present session liberal allowances for the work on the upper reaches of the Mississippi, the reservoir system, the Minnesota River, the Red River of the North, the Saint Croix and Chippewa Rivers, the harbors of Lake Superior, the Sault Staine Marie Canal, Hay Lake channel, Saint Clair flats, together with such other works as shall tend to open up our water routes to and from the markets of the world; that a copy of this memorial be forwarded to each of our Senators and members of Congress.

Speaker of the house of representatives.
A. E. RICE,
President of the senate.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, Department of state:

I hereby certify that I have carefully compared the foregoing with the original now on file in this department, and that it is a true and correct copy thereof, and of the whole of the same.

Witness my hand and the great seal of the State this 26th day of January, A. D. 1887.

Secretary of state.

Mr. CONGER presented a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of Michigan, favoring the purchase by the Government of the ship-canal across Keweenaw Point, Lake Superior, known as the Portage Lake Canal, creating a harbor of refuge, &c.; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of leading officials and citizens of Hancock, Mich., praying for the reduction of the special taxes on oleomargarine, and that the same be equalized so that wholesale dealers in oleomargarine shall not pay $480 per year while wholesale tobacco dealers pay only $12 a year; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. CONGER. I present two petitions of citizens of Detroit, Mich., praying for the passage of laws to punish crimes against women and girls, and raising the age of consent. I move that the petitions be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as they relate to the subject generally, and are not particularly in reference to the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I present a joint resolution of the Massachusetts Legislature concerning the unjust treatment of American citizens in Canadian waters.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts desire to have the memorial read?

Mr. HOAR. I suppose it should be read, according to the custom of the Senate.

The memorial was read, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS, 1887.

Resolutions concerning the unjust treatment of American seamen in Canadian waters.

Whereas American fishermen in Canadian waters have been, and are, subjected to unjust and in some instances inhuman treatment, at the hands of the officials of the Dominion Government, by which the comity of nations has been denied to vessels bearing the American flag;

Whereas the Dominion Government has recently enacted non-intercourse and hostile legislation; has interpreted existing treaties to deny to our fishermen the right to purchase supplies in Canadian ports, and other hostile acts unbecoming a friendly nation;

Whereas the just rights of our fishermen is a question of great and special moment to the people of Massachusetts;

Resolved, That if the Canadian Government shall continue to refuse redress, the Legislature of Massachusetts, now in session, favor the retaliatory legislation proposed in Congress by the Government of the United States, to the extent, if need be, of denying to the Canadian vessels in American ports the right to purchase supplies; and the further exclusion of all Canadian products by land or sea from being imported into the United States, until such offensive legislation and interpretation of existing treaties and violation of national comity shall have been withdrawn and discontinued.

Resolved, That a copy of this preamble and resolutions, if adopted, be forwarded to our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

SENATE, January 25, 1887.

Adopted. Sent down for concurrence.

Mr. HOAR presented resolutions adopted by the city council of Boston, Mass., remonstrating against the proposed reorganization of the Boston navy-yard; which were referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. CAMERON presented resolutions adopted by the Reading (Pa.) Board of Trade; which were referred to the Select Committee on Ordnance and War Ships, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ROOMS OF THE BOARD OF TRADE,
Reading, Pa., January 29, 1887.

DEAR SIR: In accordance with the resolutions given below, your attention is respectfully asked to the following extract from the minutes of the annual meeting of the Board of Trade of Reading, Pa., held January 27, 1887:

The following preamble and resolutions were offered by Mr. Heller, and after remarks thereon by Messrs. Heller, Lance, Wanner and others, were passed unanimously:

Whereas it is highly necessary that our seacoasts and harbors be placed in a condition to successfully resist foreign invasion, and that our ships and forts be armed with guns capable of answering and silencing those of foreign nations; and

Whereas we are convinced that the Wiard guns manufactured in this city, and that the improvements in projectiles and the plan of converting the old guns now owned by the Government into modern guns of great power, invented by Norman Wiard, would, if adopted, furnish the country with ordnance equal to any in the world at an almost nominal cost; and

Whereas the Haskell multicharge cannon, manufactured at the Scott foundry, has been shown by repeated experiments to be both in principle and practice a most important discovery in the art of gunnery; and

Whereas we are informed that the Government has been prevented from making use of these inventions through the illegal action of the Bureau of Ordnance: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That we urge upon Congress to speedily pass such laws as shall enable the manufacturers of these guns to have a fair official test of their merits, so that if they are equal in performance to what is claimed for them they can at once be adopted and our seacoasts be adequately armed.

Resolved, That an investigation of the methods of the Bureau of Ordnance be at once begun, to the end that the parties who, through jealousy of civilian inventors, or from whatever motive, have been guilty of disobedience of the laws and of thwarting the will of Congress, may be removed and the bureau reorganized, so that it shall perform its duties impartially and with an eye single to the good of the country.

Resolved, That these resolutions be printed and a copy thereof mailed to the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and to each member of the United States Senate and House of Representatives.

ISAAC McHOSE, President.

E. F. KEEVER, Secretary.

Mr. CAMERON presented a petition of Rosengarten & Sons and other citizens of Philadelphia, Pa., a petition of druggists of York, Pa., and a petition of W. D. Wood and 194 other citizens of Pittsburgh and McKeesport, Pa., praying for a reduction of the internal-revenue taxes; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PALMER presented a petition of officers of the Women's Christian Temperance Union of Michigan, praying that the Constitution be so amended as to extend the right of suffrage to women; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WHITTHORNE presented the petition of W. G. Andrews, J. P. Street, and 42 other citizens of Tennessee, praying for the establishment of an armory at Columbia, Tenn; which was referred to Committee on Coast Defenses.

Mr. BERRY presented joint resolutions adopted by the General Assembly of Arkansas; which were referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OFFICE OF SECRETARY OF STATE, LITTLE ROCK, ARK.

I, E. B. Moore, secretary of state of Arkansas, do hereby certify that the annexed pages contain a true, complete, and full copy of House concurrent resolution No. 3, as appears by comparing the same with the original roll of said concurrent resolution now on file in this office.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my official seal, at Little Rock, this 25th day of January, A. D. 1887.

[SEAL.] E. B. MOORE, Secretary of State.

[House concurrent, No. 3.]

Resolved by the General Assembly of the State of Arkansas, That we renew the request made by joint memorial by the General Assembly in 1885 to our members in Congress of the United States, namely, that they use every honorable influence to have the $67,000,000 of cotton tax, collected from the several cotton States, refunded to the States from which it was collected according to the number of bales of cotton produced in each State in the year the tax was collected.

Approved January 20, 1887.

Mr. BERRY presented a concurrent resolution of the General Assembly of Arkansas, instructing their Senators and requesting members to support the bill providing for the establishment of agricultural experimental-stations; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. GRAY presented a petition of the Historical Society of Delaware, praying for the publication of historical material connected with the colonies before the formation of the United States Government; which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. EVARTS. I present a petition of the Association of the Bar of the City of New York, praying for the increase of the salaries of the judges of the United States courts in the second circuit, which I ask may be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary; and as it presents the view of a large body of lawyers, nearly a thousand in number, and is drawn by a committee of distinguished lawyers, I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

The petition was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The undersigned respectfully represent to your honorable body that on the 18th day of January, 1887, pursuant to a special call, a numerously-attended meeting of the Association of the Bar of the City of New York was held for the purpose of taking into consideration the inadequacy of salaries paid to the judges of the Federal courts in the State of New York, at which meeting the annexed resolutions were passed, and in accordance therewith the undersigned were appointed a committee to present the same to Congress.

And your memorialists further respectfully represent that there are special and cogent grounds for an increase of the compensation paid to the judges of the courts of the United States in the State of New York. These grounds are three in number:

First. The vastly greater amount of labor and service which is required of them.

Second. The greatly increased expense of living in the State, particularly in the city of New York and its vicinity, in which much of their time is necessarily passed.

Third. The scale of professional compensation in that State and city.

Under the first of these heads it is scarcely necessary to suggest that the city of New York is not only the financial center of the country, but also the principal center of foreign and domestic commerce. The great railway companies and other corporate bodies of the nation have their main or branch offices there. The great bulk of the financial transactions of the whole country is there carried on. The maritime commerce of the nation with all other parts of the world finds its center there, and it is the great port of entry for foreign ships. Its own enormous population is constantly swelled by large numbers of people from other States of the Union, and from foreign countries, drawn thither by the necessities of business, and who spend much of their time there.

These circumstances necessarily give rise to a great number and variety of Federal questions, and also furnish the grounds, conveniences, and facilities for invoking the Federal jurisdiction to a far greater extent than in other States of the Union. It has been recently estimated—and your memorialists have no reason to doubt the moderation of the estimate—that over 40 per centum of the entire litigation in the Federal courts of original jurisdiction in the whole Union is brought before the courts of the United States in the city of New York and its vicinity.

Under the second of the above heads, your memorialists believe that the fact of the increased cost of living in the city of New York is known to all, but perhaps all are not aware of the magnitude of the excess. An ordinary dwelling-house, suitable for a family of moderate habits and tastes, commands an average rental of at least $2,000 per annum, while the more desirable abodes, such as are occupied by lawyers of distinction in their profession, can not be obtained for sums less than $1,000 per annum.

These great rental values of necessity occasion corresponding additions to the cost of almost all other articles of necessary consumption in a family.

These facts are true, with some slight qualifications, of the cities and suburbs surrounding New York, and diffuse their influence throughout the whole State.

In the third place, partly in consequence of the circumstances already alluded to, the scale of professional compensation is much higher in the city of New York than it is in other parts of the Union, especially in the more remote and rural districts. The professional incomes of lawyers, who possess the abilities and learning which fit them to discharge the duties of a Federal judge in that State, range from $10,000 to $40,000, and even above that amount per annum. And yet it is believed that it is not easier with such incomes to gain a competency than it is with much smaller ones in other parts of the country.

It should be remembered that all the judges of the United States district courts within the State are almost constantly engaged in the discharge of their judicial duties in the city of New York, and this force is from necessity, from time to time, recruited by calling in the aid of the district judges of Vermont and Connecticut. No question can be made concerning the importance of these judicial labors, and of the learning, ability, and incessant toil required of the judges, nor that a suitable compensation should be paid to those who are called upon to discharge such important functions. But there can be no doubt that the salaries at present paid are totally inadequate for the decent support of a reputable lawyer, and the insufficiency is disparaging to the dignity, and, consequently, to the usefulness of the Federal tribunals. Nor does it furnish, as it should, any sufficient guaranty for the filling of these important stations, with the requisite learning, integrity, and ability.

Your memorialists call attention to the fact that it was but a few years since that a most competent and highly esteemed judge of a district court in this State was obliged to resign his office in consequence of the insufficiency of his salary, and it was principally in consequence of a happy accident that a competent successor was found able and willing to accept the office.

Your memorialists think it entirely reasonable to say that when occasion arises for filling a vacancy in any of the offices alluded to, the salary should be such that numbers of competent lawyers should be found who would feel that they could accept such offices without making an absolute sacrifice of the prospect of obtaining a reward for their services adequate to a comfortable maintenance.

As it is, upon the occasion of any vacancy, the Government is limited in its selection of a competent successor to those whose pecuniary condition renders the amount of salary a matter of comparative indifference, and the honorable ambition of those to whom judicial station is attractive, and who are best fitted to discharge its duties, is discouraged and repelled.

Your memorialists are not in favor of any scale of compensation which would render these offices objects of desire and competition on account of the salary alone, but they believe that they should be fixed at such sums as will make it easily possible to secure the learning, abilities, and character which are the necessary qualifications for such responsible and important places.

Under the present scale of compensation, the district judges receive salaries of but $4,000, which is less than the salary paid to the district judge of California, who receives $5,000, and less than many salaries paid in the city of New York to clerks, book-keepers, cashiers, and salesmen in large mercantile and financial houses. The salary of the circuit judge is but $6,000, out of which he is compelled to pay all his traveling and other expenses in going from place to place in the three States of his circuit. So that it may be said that his net income is less than that of the district judges, inasmuch as the latter, who reside out of New York city, receive a per diem allowance for expenses, and in one case extra compensation for services. The salaries are very much inferior to those paid to the judges of the courts of the State. The judges of the State supreme court in the city of New York receive $17,500 per annum. The judges of the superior court of the city, and of the court of common pleas of the county of New York each receive $15,000 per annum; the surrogate of the county of New York receives $12,000 per annum; police magistrates of the city receive $8,000, and judges of the district courts (exercising a civil jurisdiction corresponding to that of justices of the peace) receive $6,000 per annum.

The comparatively large salaries thus allowed to judges of the supreme and superior courts and the court of common pleas are indeed made up in part by sums paid by the city of New York in addition to the salaries allowed by the law of the State, but the State pays to the chief judge of its court of appeals a salary and allowance for expenses amounting to $9,500 and to the associate judges $9,000, and to those of the supreme court outside of the city of New York salaries and allowances amounting to $7,500.

Your memorialists think it would be entirely within the limits of moderation to pay to the circuit judge a salary equal to that allowed by the general law of the State to the chief judge of the highest court of record, and to the district judges salaries equal to those allowed by the same general law to judges of the supreme court, and they respectfully pray that your honorable bodies may take appropriate action in the premises.

At a special meeting of the Association of the Bar of the City of New York, held at No. 7 West Twenty-ninth street, January 13, 1887, Mr. Ellery E. Anderson presented the following resolutions:

Resolved by the Association of the Bar of the City of New York, That in the opinion of this association the salaries now paid to the Federal judges within this State are entirely inadequate and bear no relation to the character and importance of the services rendered by them.

Resolved, That the salaries paid to the judges of the courts of the United States within the State of New York are not only out of proportion to the salaries paid to the judges of the superior courts of record of the State for services of the same character and importance, but are insufficient to meet the cost of living and the suitable maintenance of their families; and that the disparity between the salaries paid to the judges of the State courts and those paid to the judges of the Federal courts tends to impair the dignity, independence, and usefulness of the latter, and makes it difficult to obtain men possessing the qualifications required for the discharge of the duties of these high offices.

Resolved, That the greatly increased volume of business performed by the judges of the Federal courts within this State, as well as the responsibility forced upon them by the magnitude and complexity of the questions constantly brought before them for adjudication, demand that a reasonable discrimination in their favor should be made by Congress with respect to any legislation that may be proposed and adopted for the suitable and adequate compensation of Federal judges.

Resolved, That it is the sense of this association that the judge of the circuit court of the United States for the second circuit should be provided with and receive a salary of at least $9,000 per annum, with an additional allowance for traveling and other expenses of at least $2,000 per annum, and that the judge of the district court of the United States for the southern district of New York should be provided with and receive a salary of at least $7,000 per annum, and that the judges of the district courts of the United States for the northern and eastern districts of New York should each be provided with and receive salaries of at least $6,000 per annum.

Resolved, That a committee of five members of this association be appointed by the president, with power to fill vacancies, and, in their discretion, to add to their number not to exceed seven in all, to present these resolutions to Congress and to advocate before that body and the proper committees thereof the correction of the evils herein referred to, and to promote the reform hereby sought.

Which were unanimously adopted.

S. B. BROWNELL,
Recording Secretary.

Mr. EVARTS. I shall also introduce a bill to accompany the petition to the Committee on the Judiciary, when that order of business is reached.

Mr. BLAIR presented a petition of the Pennsylvania Woman Suffrage Association, praying for the passage of legislation submitting to the States an amendment of the Constitution of the United States giving the right of suffrage to women; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I present a petition of the Yearly Meeting of the Religious Society of Friends, of Iowa, consisting of over 10,000 members, residing and having churches in the States of Iowa, Nebraska, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Texas, and California, and the Territories of Washington and Dakota, praying for the establishment of a permanent high court of arbitration in which the civilized world may be represented, and to which may be referred those disputes which have usually led to war. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VANCE presented a petition of citizens of Leaksville, Rockingham County, North Carolina, praying for the repeal of the internal-revenue laws; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CALL. I present resolutions of the Board of Trade of Jacksonville, Fla., reciting that the Jacksonville Board of Trade has learned with much regret of the diminished appropriations for the improvement of the Saint John's Bar, as reported by the River and Harbor Committee of the House; that the expediency and economy of appropriations sufficient to continue this work without cessation until completed has been fully demonstrated in the progress of the improvement; and that the Chief Engineer has officially stated that at least four times the amount reported by the House committee could be advantageously expended on this work during the next twelve months. The petitioners therefore pray that an adequate appropriation may be made for the improvement of Saint John's Bar. I move the reference of the resolutions to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN presented petitions of citizens of Baltimore and Vansville district, in the State of Maryland, praying for the repeal of sundry internal-revenue taxes; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. FRYE. I present the petition of Luther Maddock and 25 other fishermen of Boothbay, Me., praying that the mackerel close time shall not take effect until next season. As the bill has been reported, I move that the petition be ordered to lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM presented the petition of Lyman Guinnip, late colonel Seventy-ninth Illinois Infantry Volunteers, praying for correction of his military record; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Smithfield, Ill., praying that a pension be granted to Amos Baccus; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Illinois State Grange, in favor of the establishment of a Department of Agriculture with its chief a Cabinet officer; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Illinois State Grange, in favor of granting to women the right of suffrage; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution of the Illinois State Grange, in favor of the people electing United States Senators; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Illinois State Grange, urging the passage of the agricultural experiment-station bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Illinois State Grange, remonstrating against proposed changes in the oleomargarine act; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. MAHONE presented the petition of Richardetta Mason Ruggles, devisee of Georgeanna Seymour Hooe, deceased, praying for the passage of an act referring her war claims to the United States Court of Claims; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. INGALLS presented concurrent resolutions of the Legislature of Kansas; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution.

Be it resolved by the senate of the State of Kansas (the house of representatives concurring therein), That our Senators in Congress be instructed and our Representatives requested to use all proper means to procure the passage of House bill No. 10359, being an act "to extirpate contagious pleuro-pneumonia, foot and mouth disease, and rinderpest among cattle, and to facilitate the exportation of cattle and the products of live-stock, and for other purposes;" and that a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress by the secretary of state.

I, E. B. Allen, secretary of state of the State of Kansas, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of the original resolution now on file in my office, and that the same was adopted by the senate on the 19th day of January, A. D. 1887, and concurred in by the house January 21, 1887.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto subscribed my name and affixed my official seal. Done at Topeka this 25th day of January, A. D. 1887.

[SEAL.]

E. B. ALLEN, Secretary of state.

Mr. MILLER presented the petition of Peter A. Porter Post, Grand Army of the Republic, Wilson, N. Y., and the petition of Melyar Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Mexico, N. Y., praying for the passage of the anti-Mormon bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. STANFORD presented petitions of the Chamber of Commerce of Eureka, Cal., the Chamber of Commerce, San Francisco, and the Board of Trade of San Francisco, Cal., and a petition of citizens of Eureka, Cal., praying that an appropriation be made for the improvement of Humboldt Bay; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HARRIS. I present a joint resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Tennessee, requesting the Senators and Representatives from that State to favor such measure as will promote the world's fair of the colored people, to be held in September next, in Birmingham, Ala. Being a joint resolution of the General Assembly, I ask that it be printed in the RECORD, and that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The memorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[House joint resolution No. 33.]

Whereas there will be a "world's exposition" held by the colored people of the United States at Birmingham, Ala., commencing September 22, 1887, and continuing four months, for the purpose of illustrating the progress of the colored race by a display of works of art, live-stock, field products, machinery, manufactories, and all other articles raised, fabricated, produced, or owned by colored people especially throughout the United States of America, and inclusive of the colored race in all parts of the world; and

Whereas this exposition would advance the interest of the race in many respects, and would also redound to the interest of the whole country: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the General Assembly of the State of Tennessee, That we commend the project to the favorable consideration of the public as one fraught with great interest to the colored race and the country at large.

Be it further resolved, That we request our Senators and Representatives in Congress to consider favorably any measure which may come before that body looking to the advancement of the exposition, by appropriation or otherwise.

Be it further resolved, That the secretary of state be directed to forward a copy of these resolutions to our members in Congress.

Adopted January 12, 1887.

W. L. CLAPP,
Speaker of the house of representatives.
Y. W. EWING,
Speaker of the senate.

Approved January 21, 1884.

ROBT. L. TAYLOR,
Governor.

I, John Allison, secretary of state of the State of Tennessee, do certify that the foregoing is a copy of house joint resolution No. 33, the original of which is now on file at my office.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto subscribed my official signature, and, by order of the governor, affixed the great seal of the State of Tennessee, at the department in the city of Nashville, this 29th day of January, A. D. 1887.

[SEAL.] JOHN ALLISON,
Secretary of state.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The memorial should be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, the Chair thinks.

Mr. HARRIS. I am not aware that there is a bill pending on the subject.

Mr. DAWES. The matter has been before the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. So the Chair understood.

Mr. HARRIS. Then I ask that the joint resolution be sent to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ALLISON. Before that is done, I desire to say that a similar resolution of the Legislature of Alabama was referred to the Committee on Appropriations inadvertently, and was reported back and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. The memorials relate to a world's exposition, and I think this one should take the same direction.

Mr. HARRIS. Of course, if the Committee on Appropriations has reported the former resolution back and asked its reference to the Committee on Foreign Relations, this resolution should go to that committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The memorial will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MAHONE, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10091) for the construction of a stable for the use of horses and wagons for the use of the offices of the House of Representatives, reported it with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3234) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the purchase of a site and the erection of a suitable building for a post-office and other Government offices in the city of Scranton, Pa.," approved July 27, 1882, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3130) for the erection of a public building in Paterson, N. J., reported it without amendment.

Mr. GEORGE, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10040) to provide for holding terms of the United States courts at Mississippi City, Miss., reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9642) to provide for an additional associate justice of the supreme court of the Territory of New Mexico, reported it without amendment.

Mr. HOAR, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6974) to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to.

Mr. MCMILLAN, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3165) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North, reported it with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2930) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North, reported it with amendments.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I intended to ask the Senate to consider those bills immediately, but as the Senate is pressed with business this morning, I shall request the Senate at an early day to take them up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bills will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. CONGER, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8880) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Tennessee River at or near Chattanooga, Tenn., reported it with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2983) to authorize the construction of a highway bridge across that part of the waters of Lake Champlain which separates the islands of North Hero and South Hero, in the County of Grand Isle, in the State of Vermont, reported it with amendment.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5097) to regulate the use of the grounds of the Washington National Monument, known as public reservation No. 3, in the city of Washington, D. C., reported it without amendment.

Mr. HOAR, from the Committee on the Library, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. FRYE. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to report on the memorial of a committee representing the medical profession of the United States, in relation to an international congress to be holden in Washington in December, 1887, an amendment to be offered to the sundry civil appropriation bill favorably, and to move its reference to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2592) to provide for holding terms of United States courts at Texarkana, Ark., and for other purposes, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9116) to provide for holding terms of the United States courts at Texarkana, Ark., and for other purposes. reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

REPORT OF DISTRICT HEALTH OFFICER.

Mr. GORMAN. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 88) authorizing the printing of 2,500 copies of the report of the health officer of the District of Columbia, to report it favorably without amendment. I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It authorizes the Public Printer to print 2,500 extra copies of the annual report of the health officer of the District of Columbia; 100 for the use of the Senate, 350 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 2,050 for the use of the health officer of the District.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FLORIDA PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. MORGAN. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands to report back adversely the Senate resolution submitted by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL], December 21, 1885, for a special committee of five Senators to be appointed to visit Florida and investigate the alleged unlawful appropriation of public lands in that State derived from the swamp-land grants, or from other grants to Florida, to the detriment of actual settlers or homesteaders.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution reported adversely by the Senator from Alabama will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That a special committee of five Senators be, and are hereby, appointed, who shall be, and are hereby, charged with an investigation of all alleged unlawful, unauthorized, or fraudulent appropriations of the public lands of the United States, in the State of Florida, to the detriment of actual settlers, or homesteaders, or purchasers for cash, or of the United States, under the several acts of Congress making grants of the public domain to the State of Florida, and otherwise. And that the Commissioner of Public Lands furnish said committee with a competent clerk from the office of Public Lands. And that they have authority to send for persons and papers, and to employ a stenographer. And that said committee report to the Senate the evidence taken by them, and their recommendations on the subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore, This resolution, with the adverse report, will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. CALL. I rose to ask that it be placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report.

FISHERIES REPORT.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing to report back a concurrent resolution submitted by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] on the 21st instant, providing for the printing of 6,000 additional copies of the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations on fisheries, with a recommendation that it be adopted with an amendment. I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed for the use of the two Houses of Congress 6,000 additional copies of the report of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations touching our fisheries, numbered 1683; one-third thereof for the use of the Senate and two-thirds for the use of the House.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Printing was to add to the resolution:

And that there be added at the end of said report No. 1683, Senate Executive Document No. 55, and that said document be bound in paper covers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was concurred in.

INTERSTATE-COMMERCE BILL.

Mr. MANDERSON. I report back from the Committee on Printing a Senate reolution to print 10,000 additional copies of the report of the committee of conference on the interstate-commerce bill with an amendment recommending that there be printed for the use of the Senate 10,000 copies of the bill as it finally passed Congress. I may say that the copies of the bill are entirely exhausted; that there is a very great demand for them; and that the cost is but trifling. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution; which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Senate 10,000 copies of the corrected report of the committee of conference on the bill (S. 1532) to regulate commerce, with the detailed statement of the conferees on said bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment reported by the Committee on Printing will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Strike out all after "the," in the third line of the resolution, and insert "interstate-commerce bill (S. 1532) as the same finally passed Congress."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

BATTLE SWORD OF CAPT. S. C. REID.

Mr. EVARTS. I move that the President's message, transmitting a communication from Mr. Samuel C. Reid, who offers to the United States the battle sword of his father, Capt. Samuel Chester Reid, who commanded the United States private-armed brig General Armstrong, at the battle of Fayal, in September, 1814, now lying on the table, be referred to the Committee on the Library.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. ALLISON introduced a bill (S. 3243) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Andrew J. Gardner; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3244) granting a pension to Hiram Bateman; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. EVARTS introduced a bill (S. 3245) to regulate salaries and expenses of the judges of the circuit and district courts of the United States within the State of New York; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MAHONE introduced a bill (S. 3246) making an appropriation for the improvement of the naval hospital park at Portsmouth, Va.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. BECK introduced a bill (S. 3247) to amend the laws relating to national banking associations; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HAWLEY introduced a bill (S. 3248) granting a pension to Ann Verneuil; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying petition, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SPOONER introduced a bill (S. 3249) granting a pension to Emma L. Chase; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SHERMAN introduced a bill (S. 3250) to provide for the examination and possible purchase of certain manuscripts, comprising a revision and consolidation of the laws relating to municipal affairs in the District of Columbia, and also of certain manuscripts comprising a revision and consolidation of the criminal laws of said District; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3251) directing the commissioners of the District of Columbia to establish streets and avenues in the county of Washington, D. C., and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. PUGH submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor bill; which were ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. VAN WYCK submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

APACHE PRISONERS IN FLORIDA.

Mr. DAWES submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to communicate to the Senate a copy of any and all contracts made for educating the children of the Apaches now confined at Fort Marion, Saint Augustine, Fla., and to communicate what proposals or offers of gratuitous aid in educating said children have been made to the Department or any official having said Indians in charge, and all correspondence in the Department touching the same. Also the number of Apaches confined at Fort Marion and the dimensions of the building or buildings in which they are held in custody.

VIRGINIUS INDEMNITY FUND.

Mr. MORGAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State is directed to furnish to the Senate a statement of the names of the claimants whose claims have been allowed under an agreement with the Government of Spain relating to their indemnity out of the money known as the "Virginius" fund, with the amount allowed and the amount paid to each claimant; and that he also state what amount of interest on said fund has accumulated during the time it was in the custody of the Department of State, and in what way and from what sources such interest has been received; and the amount of such increment that is now held in said Department, and for whose account, or benefit, the same is held.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 10793) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888; and

A bill (H. R. 10802) making appropriations to provide for the expenses for the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 1280) to authorize Frank W. Hunt to erect and maintain a ferry across the Missouri River at the military reservation of Fort Buford, Dakota Territory; and

A bill (H. R. 10457) for the relief of dependent parents and honorably discharged soldiers and sailors who are now disabled and dependent upon their own labor for support.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CALL. If the order of resolutions is through, I desire to call up the resolution which I have discussed before the Senate, relating to Florida land grants.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order of "concurrent or other resolutions" is still pending. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. MAHONE] rises to a resolution. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Florida as soon as the call for "concurrent or other resolutions" is concluded.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the resolution introduced by myself on Saturday, which lies on the table, and comes up this morning in due course of business. That resolution I desire to have considered.

CAMPBELL'S IMPROVED LEDGER.

Mr. MAHONE presented the following resolution, which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the chairman of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized to purchase, for use in the Senate folding-room, Campbell's Copyright Improved Method and Distributing Ledger at a price fixed by said committee, the amount thus fixed to be paid out of the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund.

GOLD PAYMENTS.

Mr. VAN WYCK submitted the following resolution, which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to inform the Senate whether any national banks are loaning money upon securities, or discounting bills or notes which require payment in gold coin only.

FLORIDA LAND FORFEITURE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there are no further "concurrent or other resolutions," the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution instructing the Attorney-General to bring suit for an injunction against the Florida Railway and Navigation Company.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the following resolution, submitted by Mr. CALL, January 21, 1887:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General of the United States be instructed to bring suit, through the district attorneys of the United States, for an injunction against the Florida Navigation and Railway Corporation and the Pensacola and Atlantic Railroad Company, or their agents, attempting to sell, or selling, or advertising for sale, the lands of the United States embraced in the grant made to the State of Florida under the act entitled "An act granting public lands in alternate sections to the States of Florida and Alabama to aid in the construction of certain railroads in said States," approved May 17, 1856, while bills for the forfeiture of the same shall be pending before Congress, which have been or shall be recommended by the committees of either House of Congress to be forfeited.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On this resolution the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] has the floor.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the persistence with which the Senator from Florida presses this resolution is something that embarrasses me. The resolution is predicated upon a statement that the Pensacola and Atlantic Railroad Company, or their successors, are proceeding to sell lands granted to them by the Government of the United States, and I think the Senator from Florida said that the lands have been advertised for sale. This morning the Committee on Public Lands had a meeting, and the receiver appointed by the circuit court of the United States in Florida appeared before that committee and stated that no lands were advertised to be sold, that the receiver was not intending to sell any lands, had no such idea or expectation, and that the first information he had on the subject of the sale of the lands mentioned by the Senator from Florida was his speech in the Senate.

I can not see why it is claimed that the Senate shall grant to any person special authority to proceed in the name of the United States to obtain an injunction against the sale of land that has not been advertised, that is not intended to be made, and of which the receiver of the road knows nothing. It ought to be remembered that this railroad is in the hands of a receiver appointed by the United States circuit court, and various orders and decrees have been made under which receiver's certificates have issued upon the faith of this property to the amount, I believe, of about $600,000, and are in the hands of persons, of course, who claim that the certificates are a lien upon the property. If the statement made by the receiver who appeared before the committee is true, that there is no such proceeding in Florida, I do not see why the Senator from Florida desires to press the resolution.

I do not care about going into the merits of this case, or rather the question whether this railroad company has received a grant of land from the United States Government through the action of the State of Florida, and my reluctance about it is simply because I do not want to take the time of the Senate. A letter written by Secretary Teller and another one written by Secretary Schurz, but more particularly the one written by Secretary Teller in affirmance of Mr. Schurz's decision before that time made, which is found in Executive Document No. 91, printed by the order of Congress, contain a clear and complete and perfect statement of the manner in which this land was derived from the Government of the United States through the statutes of Florida, leaving, in the opinion, I think, of most men who have ever read it, no doubt at all of the fact that these lands have gone from the Government of the United States into the possession of the railroad company under the grant. I do not care, I say, to enter upon the discussion of that question, because it will occupy more of the time of the Senate than ought to be consumed with it, but I wish to call the attention of the Senate now to the resolution.

The resolution started as a joint resolution to forfeit a land grant, and in the second resolve it took the ground that, pending any action by Congress on this subject, in the case of a favorable report upon any bill by either House for the forfeiture of this land grant, the Attorney-General of the United States should file a bill for an injunction to prevent a sale of any of the lands. The Senator from Florida modified the joint resolution in two particulars. First, he struck out the joint resolution and made it simply a Senate resolution. It is not even a concurrent resolution as it stands now before the Senate, but a mere Senate resolution; and of course, in that attitude it would amount to no more that a mere expression of opinion, or a mere request by this body to the Attorney-General of the United States to file a bill in equity to enjoin the sale of lands.

The resolution is predicated upon the fact mentioned in it that a bill shall be pending in either House, reported favorably by a committee of either House, recommending the forfeiture of this land grant. Now, let us see what would be the scope and operation of the resolution if we were to adopt it. I mentioned the fact that it was a mere request of the Senate, as the resolution now stands, that the Attorney-General shall file a bill. It is true it is in the form of an instruction.

Mr. CALL. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CALL. I will state that I changed the joint resolution at the suggestion of a member of the Committee on Public Lands that the whole committee would allow it to pass without objection in that shape, except the Senator from Alabama, and that I will amend the resolution and make it a joint resolution, so that it shall be an instruction to the Attorney-General, and thus remove that objection.

Mr. MORGAN. We have a joint resolution, then, which of course amounts to a law; and that joint resolution is that a bill shall be filed in the event that a committee of either House has reported favorably upon a bill to forfeit the land grant and that that bill is pending upon such a report. When this Congress adjourns on the third day of March what becomes of all the bills that are pending before it? Of course they are nothing more than mere history.

Mr. CALL. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him again?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CALL. At the suggestion of a very distinguished member of the Judiciary Committee, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], I propose to amend the resolution and make it imperative upon the Attorney-General to bring suit to ascertain and obtain a final decision as to a compliance with the requirements of this act by any of the railroad claimants.

Mr. MORGAN. Should the Senate of the United States pass a bill of that kind without a reference of this question to the Committee on Public Lands?

Mr. CALL. I will state, if the Senator will allow me to interrupt him, that the Committee on Public Lands has had this question under consideration in all its details for a year, and that the resolution is substantially the bill reported to the Senate by the Senator from Alabama two years ago.

Mr. MORGAN. I have reported no bill in reference to any Florida land grant to this body.

Mr. CALL. It was in reference to all land grants.

Mr. MORGAN. No, I have not reported any bill of that kind either. The only bill that I have reported on such a subject is one to give the judicial authorities of this country jurisdiction in the case of a forfeiture that has been declared.

Mr. President, look at the condition of this resolution. It started as a joint resolution to forfeit the land grant and to have an injunction. It then, under the Senator's own amendment, dwindled down to a resolution of the Senate upon the second proposition in the joint resolution, merely to instruct the Attorney-General of the United States to present a bill and file it for an injunction. The Senator now proposes to restore it to a joint resolution, and not only so, but to restore it to the original proposition which was contained in his resolution, as I understand it, to forfeit the land grant, not this one land grant only, but all the land grants made to the State of Florida in 1856. That was the original resolution. I think the Senator from Florida ought to take some ground about this matter and stand to it.

My motion to refer the subject to the Committee on Public Lands becomes more and more obviously correct every time that the Senator from Florida has an opportunity to meet an argument that is made against his proposition by suggesting that he can make an amendment. We do not know yet and the Senate has not before it now the proposition in print that the Senator from Florida last stated.

Mr. ALLISON. Then, Mr. President, will not the Senator from Alabama yield to me that I may ask the Senate to take up the sundry civil bill?

Mr. MORGAN. I will do so if the Senator from Florida does not object to it. I do not want to disappoint him in any particular.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Florida to agree that I may call up now the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. CALL. If I can obtain unanimous consent that this resolution shall come up for consideration at any designated time, say on the conclusion of this appropriation bill, I shall give way for the appropriation bill, but I will state to the Senator from Iowa, if the Senator from Alabama will allow me, that this resolution is one of very great importance to the people of Florida. Of the 33,000,000 acres of arable land estimated in that State, over 23,000,000 are claimed under different grants to the State for the benefit of corporations; so that practically the entire area of the State is held now at prices regulated by private interest and at prices greater than the Government prices. Whatever land there is in the State, therefore, that really belongs to the United States ought to be declared open to entry and settlement, and this grant covers the largest portion of the remaining public land in the State suitable for settlement.

Mr. ALLISON. Is it not true that most of these lands were granted to the Legislature of the State of Florida?

Mr. MORGAN. All of them.

Mr. CALL. Certainly they were under the swamp and overflowed and the internal-improvement land-grant acts, which I will not here discuss. There is no reflection upon the State of Florida in this matter. This is simply a question which I make here, and in which I prove that the State of Florida has never granted this land to this railroad company. I am prepared to prove that by the journals and the acts of the Legislature of the State of Florida, the proclamations of its governor, and the acquiescence of this company for twenty years. I challenge denial and proof of any of those public records——

Mr. MORGAN. Now, I accept the challenge, and I will prove that the State of Florida has granted this land.

Mr. CALL. I assert the contrary.

Mr. MORGAN. I want that matter to go before the committee.

Mr. CALL. Allow me to interrupt you.

Mr. MORGAN. Not just at this moment. The Committee on Public Lands this morning had a hearing of the receiver appointed by the circuit court in Florida, who is now in possession of that railroad, with all its belongings, and of other persons interested in that railroad land grant. The Senate had heard the Senator from Florida. He had put in all his evidence, every bit. These gentlemen this morning produced the most satisfactory evidence that the State of Florida had actually consented to this grant, and in a way that was irrevocable, that it could not revoke, and that this consent stands there to-day as the sanction of the grant.

Mr. Schurz, Mr. Teller, and Mr. Lamar, when they were successively Secretaries of the Interior, have gone over the field, absolutely, with the greatest possible care, and have affirmed that the action of the State of Florida was final in respect to this grant, and transferred the grant into the hands of this railroad company.

Then the grant has gone into the hands of a receiver of a United States court—all the property of the railroad company—and that court has proceeded to administer it, has issued $600,000 or thereabouts of certificates on the faith and credit of this property, held by persons who are controverting with the Senator from Florida his position; and after hearing these parties this morning the Committee on Public Lands directed a special select committee to take the matter in hand and examine it through and through, and report on next Monday to that committee. It is a work of great labor, it is true, but some persons will have to investigate it, and this committee are instructed now to do this very thing that the Senator from Florida wants the Senate to do upon his last amendment to his resolution which restores it to a joint resolution to forfeit the land grant, he himself having withdrawn that resolution in the course of this debate and substituted a mere Senate resolution asking the Attorney-General to file a bill of injunction. Now, how are we to get along with this matter?

Mr. CALL. Will the Senator from Alabama allow me?

Mr. MORGAN. I am willing to indulge the Senator from Florida as much as possible, but I can not consent that either the Committee on Public Lands or the Senate shall stultify itself by passing upon a question of this kind, where there is a positive issue joined on the fact between the Senator from Florida and myself. I think at least the Senate ought to be willing to have this subject investigated. Here is Executive Document 91 that contains the whole history of the transaction. There can not be any doubt about it, I think.

Mr. CALL. Will the Senator from Alabama allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I wish to say, that it may go in the RECORD, that I deny specifically every statement made by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. MORGAN. I did not yield to the Senator for the purpose of indulging in a criticism upon the veracity of the Senator from Alabama or the verity of his statement.

Mr. CALL. I do not impeach the veracity of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. MORGAN. What I have stated is in the RECORD published by Congress, and more than that, it is in the acts of the Legislature of Florida, which I have at my desk.

Mr. CALL. I undertake to say, without in any degree assailing the veracity of the Senator from Alabama and making no impeachment of it at all, that there is nothing of that kind in that record. Secretary Lamar has never passed upon this case in regard to the propositions and facts I have stated. Secretary Teller has never decided upon the authority granted by the State of Florida. Secretary Schurz has never passed upon it; and the acts of the Legislature of Florida, the message of the governor of Florida, the opinion of the attorney-general of Florida, all deny in positive terms in 1858, nearly two years after it was possible for this company ever to have acquired any rights in this grant, specifically that they were entitled to any of the benefits of that grant under the internal improvement act, as to the part of the line between Waldo and Tampa, and granted it to another company; and I aver that for twenty years there was an acquiescence in that legislative action. All this I have proven, and I will again prove it so clearly that even the Senator from Alabama will have absolutely nothing to stand on in his very confident and erroneous statements.

Now, Mr. President, I have to say this: I have sought earnestly to obtain from the Committee on Public Lands a favorable report on the forfeiture of this grant and an opportunity for the Senate to vote upon the question whether the people of Florida and citizens of the United States emigrating there were to be protected in their rights to enter upon the public lands, and yet——

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President——

Mr. CALL. The Senator will allow me to conclude. I thought this was a case so clear that it might at least be referred to judicial investigation, and that there would not be a dissenting voice to allowing the people to be heard, with the Government litigating and protecting them in their rights.

Mr. MORGAN. Now I desire to speak about the action of this committee, which, of course, seems to have some impeachment of it by the Senator——

Mr. CALL. I do not seek to impeach the committee.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator ought not to say what he does unless he seeks to impeach some person, because what he has said does impeach them.

Mr. CALL. I said that I have sought to obtain——

Mr. MORGAN. The bill of which I have spoken has been before the Committee on Public Lands for quite a while. It has been in the hands of a subcommittee, the distinguished Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL], who has frequently brought it to the attention of that committee, and who has all the time abstained from making a report upon the bill exactly in line with the criticisms made upon the bill itself by Commissioner Sparks of the Land Office, because he did not want to stop the Senator from Florida in his effort to forfeit these lands.

The Senator from Florida stated on the floor of the Senate, the other day, in reply to an assertion made by myself, that he did not know of the point he presents in his resolution until within the last twenty days, or about that time.

Mr. CALL. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. MORGAN. The RECORD shows what the Senator stated, that he did not know it; he might have had some idea about it, but he did not have any distinct idea of the facts upon which this question rested, unless it was within a very brief period of time, and so he did not bring it to the attention of the committee before.

Mr. CALL. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. MORGAN. No; I want to get through with the statement of the conduct of the Senator from Florida toward this committee.

Two years ago, or thereabouts, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], the chairman of the committee—and I desire his attention to my remark—introduced into this body a bill to forfeit the railroad land grants in Florida. I am not certain but that he referred that bill to me as one of a subcommittee. At all events I had some direct connection with it. The Senator from Kansas informed me that the Senator from Florida went to him and complained that he should have brought this subject to the attention of the Senate and be pressing a bill to forfeit all land grants in Florida, when he himself had not asked him to do it; and thereupon the Senator from Kansas abstained from pressing it. Now, here is this land grant upon which the Senator from Florida has made more speeches than upon any other question before the Senate, so far as I know——

Mr. CALL. Allow me to interrupt you——

Mr. MORGAN. And the Senator from Florida, in reply to the suggestion that I made a few days ago, I distinctly understood him to say, had not known of this new condition of affairs embodied in his resolution until within a very brief period of time past.

Now, is this committee delinquent about this thing? The committee have done all that they could in the world to bring forward his demands upon that committee, and now he suggests that for a year or two he has been endeavoring to get some action on the part of that committee on this question. That is my reply to his suggestion.

Mr. CALL. Now, will the Senator from Alabama allow me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama yield?

Mr. MORGAN. No; I will not. The Senator from Florida can proceed with his argument when I conclude.

Mr. WALTHALL. Will the Senator allow me to ask a question?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. WALTHALL. I understand that the Senator in his remarks has made some reference to the Senator from Mississippi. Was he referring to myself or to my colleague?

Mr. MORGAN. I was referring to the Senator who is now on the floor. I said that this matter, according to my recollection, had been referred to the Senator from Mississippi as a subcommittee and that he had given as much attention to it as he found the subject required, and I gave it as my impression, not as coming from the Senator, that the answer given by Commissioner Sparks upon this bill when it was referred to him was considered to be a full answer to the bill until it was materially modified or amended, and that the committee had not pressed the subject because they felt that if their decision was required it would necessarily be adverse to the bill.

Mr. WALTHALL. The statement made by the Senator from Alabama is substantially accurate. As the matter has been mentioned it is perhaps proper that I should state what occurred between the Senator from Florida and myself in reference to this bill, as it accounts for the delay in the action of the committee.

The Senator from Florida several times approached me after he learned I had charge of the bill as a subcommittee, and asked me for a report. I stated that the committee had considered the bill and had not passed upon it, but that a majority of the committee would never consent to report favorably any such bill as this, and that if he desired a report to be promptly made, an adverse report would have to be made, and I indicated to him that his preference with reference to that matter would be consulted. He indicated to me, if I understood him aright, that he preferred the matter to stand as against an adverse report. That is the reason the adverse report has not been made.

Mr. MORGAN. Now, Mr. President, we have the attitude of it. I do not see that the Senator from Florida has any right to make points on this committee under these circumstances; but the Senator from Florida, finding that the committee intended to make an adverse report on his bill, brings in a joint resolution to accomplish the same object, stating to the Senate that the committee were putting off all the time their report when they were ready to make it, and could sustain it by competent authority.

Now, therefore, I feel as a member of the committee no particular duty devolving on me about it; but when the Senate of the United States is asked to take this case out of the hands of a committee under these circumstances it seems to me to be very extraordinary, and whatever may be the feeling the Senator has in regard to the forfeiture of these land grants in Florida it is only right to the Senate that the subject should undergo, as it has undergone and is undergoing, a most scrutinizing investigation, for it must be remembered that there are a large number of people who are concerned in this matter to the extent of thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars whose interests are quite as important as those of any of the persons who have written letters to the Senator from Florida to impress upon the Senator the idea that great wrong is about to be done them.

And then when this receiver comes before us and assures us that he is not making any sale of the land, and not intending to make a sale of the land, not desiring to do it, and that the first information he had on the subject of a sale being about to take place was the speech of the Senator from Florida, I think it is time that this Committee on Public Lands, which I think is a tolerably faithful one, should be permitted to exercise its functions and its powers in conformity to the rules of the Senate.

Having said this much, I shall wait until this matter has been further discussed; but I will state again before I take my seat that the evidence of record taken from the legislative history of Florida, and from facts proven by affidavits to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior, has proved conclusively that this railroad company has been engaged in the building of the road and is entitled to the land grant, subject, of course, to forfeiture if there is any ground of forfeiture, and that the road is now being built by a circuit court of the United States through the operation of the agency of this receiver, and is within about 10 miles of completion; I believe it is about 10 miles.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President——

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator from Iowa, as this is a personal matter, to allow me to say a few words.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida.

Mr. CALL. The Senator from Alabama commenced his speech by saying that this receiver stated that there had been no sales of these lands, and the first intimation of the fact he had was from my speech. Why, here is the record of the United States circuit court with a report there affirming that they had sold 140,000 acres of this land in the very institution of these proceedings. I read a letter from T. E. Tucker, purporting to be a land commissioner of this railroad company, which was ordered by the Senate to be put in the RECORD, dated Jacksonville, Fla., January 4, 1887, addressed to William Sultenfuss, in which he says:

> We are ready to convey title to the land whenever it may suit your convenience to purchase.

What do you think of that? Is that the first time you ever heard of it in the committee? And this Mr. Sultenfuss is charged $75 an acre for his land. He is a citizen of Florida, an emigrant from a Northern State, I believe, of whom is demanded $75 an acre for his land by the agent of this railroad company. And yet they have never heard of any sales, and the Senator from Alabama says have no intention of making any.

There are, perhaps, a thousand persons whose letters and petitions have been referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MORGAN. Thousands! Well, I have not seen one.

Mr. CALL. I make no imputation upon that committee. I did ask them to withhold that bill, and I asked it of the Senator from Alabama; and I would to-day oppose such a bill. Two years ago the committee proposed to report at the heel of the session a bill which in fact confirmed the title, not forfeited it, to this company, which never had, not even a pretense of, authority from the State. Why, Mr. President, I have the acts of the Legislature of the State here, and I have the message of the governor of 1858 and the opinion of the attorney-general expressly declaring that the Florida Railroad Company had no right, title, or interest to any part of the grant from Waldo to Tampa, and there has been twenty years' acquiescence in that legislative declaration of the law of the State of Florida. Who ever heard, before the Senator from Alabama, any reasonable person assert that after twenty years' acquiescence in an act of sovereign legislation without any location of the road under the authority of the State for the benefits of this grant, parties could come in and claim the benefit of a grant from the United States after twenty years' acquiescence in this act of sovereign legislative power, in express terms denying it to them? Who ever heard before any respectable tribunal any one contend that a written statement by a corporation that they accepted the benefits of a certain act of a Legislature could disprove the official decision of the governor of a State, that they had not accepted it as a valid, lawful acceptance; and the action of the Legislature granting the right to another company, no action having been taken for twenty years before any court to annul and invalidate it.

The bill they brought in was cunningly, I will not say intended—I believe the committee were honest about it, I believe they thought that a grant properly made should not be forfeited beyond the point of what they called completion, but this bill would have authorized every acre of land of that grant to be confirmed to people who never had a grant from the State of Florida. I do not in any wise reflect on the committee. I differ broadly with them. My sympathies and my opinions of right in these railroad land grants are, and have always been, with the people, with the settlers, the men who cultivate the soil, and not with the rich corporations. The committee and I do not agree on this matter, but I do not in any wise reflect on them or their sincerity of conviction and purpose.

Now, Mr. President, I do not understand why the Senator from Alabama should be so zealous in opposition to the people in this matter. This resolution asks for a judicial inquiry. This resolution asks that the question may go into the courts to ascertain whether or not there has ever been any grant from the State to this railroad company. I think that this matter ought to be heard and considered by the Senate carefully. I, of course, shall have to give way to the Senator from Iowa, who presses an appropriation bill, but I say it is the duty of the Senate to hear and examine these matters. I aver that the statement made by the Senator from Alabama is absolutely an error in all its parts, and there is not a shadow of pretense of a right in this railroad company, and that this Executive Document No. 91 does not show a single word of inquiry into the fact whether the State had ever made a grant or not. It asserts in one part of it that under the twenty-first section of the internal-improvement act, they have the right. Under the twenty-first section of the internal-improvement act the governor and the Legislature, upon the opinion of the attorney-general, declared that they had no right, title, or interest, and the Florida Railroad Company submitted for twenty years to this decision.

Mr. ALLISON. Now I renew my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. I desire to change the form of the resolution and make it a joint resolution, and I ask that it may be received at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will receive it.

Mr. CALL introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 99) in relation to the land grant, approved May 17, 1856, granting lands to the State of Florida for railroad purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House insisted upon its amendment to the bill (S. 2256) to create a port of delivery at Lewes, Del., agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. O'FERRALL, Mr. CRISP, and Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania, managers at the conference on the part of the House.

EULOGIES ON THE LATE SENATOR PIKE.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask the attention of the Senate. I desire to give notice that on Wednesday, the 16th day of February, I will introduce and ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of resolutions paying fitting tribute to the life, character, and public services of Hon. AUSTIN F. PIKE, late a member of this body from the State of New Hampshire.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following House bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

A bill (H. R. 10793) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888; and

A bill (H. R. 10802) making appropriations to provide for the expenses for the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 29th instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 165) for the relief of William H. Gray, of Kentucky;

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after line 188 to insert:

For repairs and preservation of marine hospitals, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I think, before passing from the public building items, I ought to say to the Senate that the Committee on Appropriations have not added a single amendment in that portion of the bill, except for public buildings, that have been authorized by law in separate statutes. Where they have added "for heating apparatus and approaches," it is to complete buildings that are substantially finished, with the exception of the heating apparatus and approaches. But inasmuch as this bill was reported from the House committee early in the session, even before the public documents were printed, many of these items were omitted in the House bill, and the Committee on Appropriations felt it to be its duty to insert them in the Senate. The total amount of these increases, I believe, is about a million and a half.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in the appropriations for "light-houses, beacons, and fog-signals," after line 196 to insert:

For steam-tender for the Western rivers: For a new tender for the maintenance of lights upon the Western rivers, $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 221, to increase the appropriation for "Northwest Seal-Rock Light-Station, California: For continuing the construction of a light-house on Northwest Seal-Rock, off Point Saint George, California," from $100,000 to $120,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the appropriation for "revenue-cutter service," after line 304 to insert:

For constructing a revenue-steamer for Southern coast: For the construction of one revenue-steamer for duty on the Southern coast of the United States, $60,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the appropriations for the Bureau of "Engraving and Printing;" in line 318, after "piece rates," to insert "or wages;" and in line 323, after the words "not more than," to strike out "twenty-four" and insert "twenty-six;" so as to make the clause read:

For wages of not more than one hundred and eighty-seven plate-printers, at piece-rates or wages to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, not to exceed the rates usually paid for such work, including the wages of not more than one hundred and ninety printers' assistants, at $1.25 a day each when employed, and for wages of not more than twenty-six printers' assistants at steam-presses, at $1.50 a day each when employed, and for royalty for use of steam plate-printing machines, $366,500, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That any part of this sum may be used for purchasing and operating new and improved plate-printing presses.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the appropriations for "light-house establishment," in line 369, to increase the appropriation from $215,000 to $240,000 for "expenses of light-vessels: For seamen's wages, rations, repairs, salaries, supplies, and incidental expenses of light-ships."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 373, to increase from $300,000 to $350,000 the appropriation "for expenses of establishing, replacing, and maintaining buoys, spindles, and day-beacons, and for incidental expenses relating thereto."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 383, after the word "Hudson," to strike out "river" and insert "and East Rivers;" in line 384, after "New York," to insert "the Delaware River between Philadelphia and Bordentown, N. J., the Elk River, Maryland;" in line 390, after "Oregon," to insert "and on Puget Sound, Washington Territory;" and in line 391, before the work "thousand," to strike out "one hundred and ninety" and insert "two hundred and fifty;" so as to make the clause read:

Lighting of rivers: For establishing, supplying, and maintaining post-lights on the Hudson and East Rivers, New York; the Delaware River between Philadelphia and Bordentown, N. J., the Elk River, Maryland; Cape Fear River, North Carolina; Savannah River, Georgia; Saint John's River, Florida; at the mouth of Red River, Louisiana; on the Mississippi, Missouri, Ohio, Tennessee, and Great Kanawha Rivers; on the Columbia and Willamette Rivers, Oregon; and on Puget Sound, Washington Territory, $250,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the appropriations for "Coast and Geodetic Survey," in line 431, before the word "thousand," to strike out "eight" and insert "twelve;" so as to make the clause read:

For party expenses:

1. For triangulation, topography, and hydrography of the coast of Maine in Cobscook Bay and Saint Croix River, and for off-shore soundings between Matinicus and Seguin lights, $12,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 431, to insert:

2. For hydrography of George's Bank and Shoal, off the coast of New England, and for the speedy completion of an accurate survey of the portions of the bank most used by fishermen, $9,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 439, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fourteen" and insert "twenty," and at the end of the clause, in line 440, to insert "to be immediately available;" so as to make the clause read:

3. For resurveys: For triangulation, topography, and hydrography in the vicinity of the east end of Long Island, Block Island, Nantucket, Nantucket Shoals and approaches, and including Vineyard Sound, $20,000, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 442, to increase the appropriation

"for physical hydrographic surveys on Monomoy Shoals" from $2,000 to $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I notice that there are very large additions by the committee amendments to this bill for what is apparently the service of this Coast and Geodetic Survey. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee just wherein the theory of the bill of the House infringes on the theory of the committee of the Senate. What is the occasion of this very large increase for the current expenditures for this work?

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator from Kansas that the Committee on Appropriations recommend substantially the estimates for this work. The House committee have cut down the estimates very largely, and, as was stated by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Superintendent of the Coast Survey, the arrangement of appropriations which is presented in the bill sent to the Senate would result in very great loss from the fact that they are not properly apportioned. The Senate committee, after examination, believe that the estimates made by the Treasury Department were carefully made, and that an efficient working of the force, both in the field and in the office, would be promoted by making the changes suggested in our amended bill; and therefore the items were made substantially in accordance with the estimates.

Mr. BECK. I hope the chairman of the committee will cause to be read, so as to be made a part of the RECORD, the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, and of Mr. Thorn, the superintendent.

Mr. ALLISON. I quite agree to the suggestion made by the Senator from Kentucky.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CULLOM in the chair). Does the Senator desire to have the letter read now?

Mr. ALLISON. Both the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury and that of the superintendent of the Coast Survey may be read. I will say, however, before they are read, that at an early day, after this bill reached the Committee on Appropriations, finding that the House bill reduced largely the appropriation for field-work, and finding, also, that it had changed materially the office force, increasing some and reducing others, and dispensing almost entirely with a large branch of the office work, I addressed a letter, after consultation with the subcommittee having this bill in charge, to the Secretary of the Treasury on this subject; and the letters which the Senator from Kentucky desires to have embodied in the RECORD were in response to my communication.

Mr. PLUMB. Let them be read.

Mr. BECK. They had better be inserted in the RECORD, unless the Senator from Kansas desires the reading.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not desire it specially, but I want to call attention to one thing. The House of Representatives is in political accord with the Administration. The controversies between the two Houses heretofore have been largely as to what was absolutely necessary for a proper administration of the various executive Departments. The Senator from Iowa knows better than I do, and better than I could possibly state, the character of the controversies which have existed between the two Houses about this question heretofore. The suggestion was always made, in fact the charge was made, that the Senate was promoting extravagance in the various Departments of the Government, was keeping up useless employés, was promoting what amounted to practically, if not actually, corruption; and after a number of years of that sort of contention the people of the United States thought they would take the Democratic party at its word, as expressed through the House of Representatives, and have put the Democratic party in power.

I would be the last man to suggest that the wants of the service should be totally disregarded, but I should like to see the experiment of the House of Representatives tried. I should like to see a chance to demonstrate, if it can be demonstrated, that the Government can be carried on after the plan that they have marked out, and which is substantially the plan which they marked out for Republican Administrations. I should be glad to have the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, if they feel so minded, give the House of Representatives a chance to have their experiment upon this administrative work tried.

Mr. BECK. Now, Mr. President, perhaps I am the member of the subcommittee charged with this bill who ought to say a word in regard to that matter, as the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], and myself were the subcommittee who for three weeks carefully examined this whole bill. We found a great many things that we thought ought to be added to this bill in order to carry on the public service efficiently, and this case was one of them, as the letter of Secretary Manning and the statement of superintendent Thorn, I think, conclusively show. We found——

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator——

Mr. BECK. One moment. We found, for example, that there was no provision for this item proposed as an amendment on line 305 of the bill:

For constructing a revenue steamer for the southern coast: For the construction of one revenue steamer for duty on the southern coast of the United States, $60,000.

We ascertained that there was really no steamer of the revenue-marine service from the mouth of the Mississippi River to the mouth of the Rio Grande, opposite the line of the West India Islands, from which smuggling has prevailed, and there is great necessity for some coast-guard there, and yet there was no provision made for it. We found a great many provisions in regard to public buildings that were not inserted. We found in regard to the Northwest Seal Rock Station in California, on the page preceding the appropriations for the Coast and Geodetic Survey, that we had to increase that item, and so of many others.

While I profess to be a Democrat, and my colleagues on the subcommittee are known to be Republicans, there was no question of politics in regard to what was needed for the good of the service. I think the House of Representatives made a mistake in leaving out that ship for the southern coast; in many other of their appropriations they made mistakes; and we agreed that it was best that the Senate should disregard political questions altogether and do what was best for the good of the service, and if in conference the gentlemen on the other side of the Capitol see fit to insist, they must take the responsibility.

I know that the Senate is apt to be charged with extravagance and the other House lauded for economy. I am one of the Democrats at this end of the Capitol who are perfectly willing to take the responsibility for whatever of extravagance is found in this bill as amended, because I believe there is not one dollar in it that is not for the benefit of the public service, and I do not think the gentlemen who object to doing what the public service requires will make any reputation before the country or any party capital out of an economy that is injurious to the public service.

That much I have felt called on to say.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, being the bill (S. 2578) to prohibit members of Congress from acting as attorneys or employés for railroad companies holding charters or having received grant of lands or pecuniary aid from the United States.

Mr. BECK. I hope that the Senator from Iowa, who desires to go on with the sundry civil bill, will consent to have the unfinished business laid aside informally, not to be displaced, subject to call.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By unanimous consent, the unfinished business will be laid aside informally. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. PLUMB obtained the floor.

Mr. PALMER. Excuse me; I want to have an order entered.

Mr. PLUMB. I yield.

Mr. PALMER. The bill (H. R. 5538) relating to the importing and landing of mackerel caught during the spawning season was made the special order for 2 o'clock to-day, and I move that 2 o'clock on Wednesday be fixed for its consideration, to be continued from day to day thereafter until disposed of.

Mr. HARRIS. If it is a special order it holds its place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will inform the Senator from Michigan that if the bill is now a special order it will hold its place and come up in its turn.

Mr. HARRIS. The motion would not change its position.

Mr. PALMER. The ruling of the Chair the other day was entirely different from that asserted by the Chair now.

Mr. HAWLEY. That was the case of a motion to postpone. This is a unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is a special order; it will follow the other special orders that are before it.

Mr. PALMER. All I desire is to have it retain its place. If the Chair so decides, very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks it will retain its place. The sundry civil appropriation bill is before the Senate.

Mr. PLUMB. There is something rather touching in the non-partisanship of my friend from Kentucky [Mr. BECK], who has been for years in this body, especially when he is asking his Republican associates to give large appropriations to a Democratic administration; but I desire to say that I wish the Committee on Appropriations had not been so yielding, not, as I said before, that I would wantonly disregard the interests of the public service, but there are two theories about this service, and I think it has come to be understood that the least valuable of all the testimony which can be applied to that subject as to what should be appropriated is the estimate of the Department having control of the expense. When I say that I say it with full knowledge that I have high Democratic authority in its support. The House of Representatives represents a theory of government, as it claims, and that the Democratic administration represents a theory of government which is economical as compared with the Republican theory of government, while the Senate, as the Administration has always claimed and had to claim in order to get into power, represents another theory and an extravagant theory.

I am willing, myself, to vote in regard to all matters of current expenses, in regard to all matters of mere administration, that this Democratic administration shall have its own free will, and its own way. When I say "the administration," I mean the executive department and the House of Representatives together; and I say that that is not only the proper theory, but it is the only one that will ever enable the country, either Republicans or Democrats, to find out whether the House of Representatives or the Senate is right. In other words, it can not be settled by argument. It has got to be settled by demonstration, and the proper way to settle it is for the Senate to let the House, in regard to all matters which are administrative and which concern the carrying out of existing executive functions, have its own way. Yet I find here that this bill contains appropriations of hundreds of thousands of dollars to be given to a Democratic administration for the purpose of carrying on this Government beyond that which the House of Representatives, itself Democratic, has deemed necessary for that same purpose. We shall never arrive at a determination of this question as to who is extravagant and who is economical until we try it on. The way to try it on is to let the House have its own way, and see what the result will be.

If, as I believe, there can be a great deal of money saved in the carrying on of this Department, then it will be determined that the House is at least partly correct. If it shall be determined that the Government can not be carried on upon the basis of the appropriations proposed by the House, then we shall have shown that the Senate has been right all the time. But, as it is now, with the House pinching appropriations and the Senate crowding them on to the House, and the House yielding, of course—I have no doubt with a leer, as they think how agreeable the Senate is in insisting on giving them more than they want—we shall never arrive at any conclusion except the one conclusion which the House has already formed, that it is economical while the Senate is extravagant.

Mr. BECK. I suppose in politics I am considered somewhat radical; the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] on his side I know is; but in business matters connected with the administration of the Government, he and I both being on the Committee on Appropriations, I think we have never allowed these questions to be discussed in that committee, or at least very seldom.

I have served on that committee now for ten years in the Senate; we have had Democratic Houses and we have had Democratic Senates in that time, and Republican administrations during most of that time; and there never has been a time, as far as I know, no matter what the executive branch of the Government was, Republican or Democratic, that the Senate Committee on Appropriations has not endeavored to the best of its ability, no matter whether the Republican House failed to give enough to carry on the Republican administration or not, to report what it thought was the proper thing to do.

We have simply done this time what has been done for every administration, no matter how the two Houses were divided; and I think this bill, as reported, will bear criticism favorably with any other. It certainly has had fair and careful consideration for over two weeks by the three gentlemen who have had charge of it, and politics were never considered.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, the suggestions made by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], respecting our duty here with reference to appropriations to carry on the Government, raise, of course, an important issue. I know in past years it has been said that the appropriations are swollen from year to year because of the extravagance of the Senate, insisting each year that unnecessary and extravagant appropriations should be had as compared with the Democratic House of Representatives, and we have been compelled in this Chamber and elsewhere to confront the idea that the Senate of the United States from year to year was extravagantly wasting the public money.

The remedy suggested by the Senator from Kansas is a practical surrender of the powers of this body. We have a right, in our judgment, to say what we think is necessary to carry on the operations of the Government. I confess that I have been many times tempted, since this administration came into power, to adopt the suggestions of the Senator from Kansas. I have seen this Senate held up and gibbeted on the cross-roads of public opinion, because last year we insisted upon an increase of appropriations as they came to us from the House of Representatives.

Now a word in reference to this immediate appropriation. Here is a non-partisan service, a service which has existed in this Government since 1807, organized in the early days of the Republic for the purpose of surveying the coast of the United States. We then had a narrow and insignificant coast compared with what we have now. That service has continued from that day to this as a non-partisan service, in one way or another. There have been different times when there have been contests in respect to which Department of the Government should have charge of this survey, and these contests have been renewed from year to year and were renewed two or three years ago, there being an effort to secure for the Navy Department this survey and another effort to dump this survey into the Geological Survey of the Interior Department, and that struggle has been going on between the two Houses.

Without any reflection upon any particular person or body or committee, I will say that that contest has found a lodgment in a determination in some portions of this Government to break up and destroy this Coast Survey as it is now organized. I do not believe in doing it. I believe that this Coast Survey, composed as it is of scientific gentlemen who have given their lives, many of them, to this service, has men capable of carrying on the operations of the survey, and it is perfectly known to those who have investigated the subject that if we will give them proper appropriations they will be enabled to carry on the field-work substantially as they have been carrying it on for three or four years, and the work will be completed, with the exception of Alaska, within from six to seven years, certainly not exceeding nine years.

Mr. HAWLEY. Does the Senator refer to the hydrographic survey or the work on land?

Mr. ALLISON. I refer to the survey as it is being carried on now and as it has been carried on for fifty years, including the hydrography and the necessary topography of the shore-line sufficient to make a map which will enable this Government to know what its shores and bays and inlets are.

When we came to examine these appropriations we found that the Coast Survey as provided for in the House bill was shorn of its powers and that it was so crippled that it could practically do nothing under these House provisions. For myself, if we were to rely upon these House provisions I should say it would be better for this year to abandon the Coast Survey and have no appropriation. I could give illustrations; they are given in these documents, which Senators can examine themselves. Take, for instance——

Mr. BECK. I want to interrupt the Senator from Iowa long enough to ask that the letter of the Secretary and the letter of Mr. Thorn, the Superintendent, shall be read at the desk now.

Mr. ALLISON. Let me go on and I will send them up.

For illustration, the House of Representatives have appropriated for the survey of Alaska about a sufficient sum to enable the Coast Survey vessel which we have to make a journey from San Francisco to Alaska and return. We have added sufficient to enable that vessel to go there and work the four or five months that a vessel can work. So with reference to other work known as field-work in the Coast Survey. We have simply provided for the necessary expenditures to enable the Coast Survey to economically conduct this work and nothing more, so that the men who are in the field can work during the business season. That is all we have done here.

Then we have provided in the office of the Coast Survey a sufficient force to enable those here to put upon paper and upon maps and charts the results of the field-work.

For myself, I think in this particular appropriation there is not a question of partisanship, and I want to say—and then I will ask that the letter be read—I want to say here and in this presence that up to this time the Coast Survey has had at its head the most scientific men in our country because the work is essentially of a scientific character. We have had the brightest men, such as Professor Hassler, Professor Bache, and Professor Pierce, in control of this Survey, men who were able to sit in judgment on the work done by the officers in the field and in the office; but since this administration came into power, or within a few months after they came into power, there was some dereliction or some charge of wrong-doing in reference to the head of the Survey, an eminent scientific man. He was removed or resigned, and a clerk in the Treasury Department drawing $1,600 salary, was placed at the head of the Survey, and is at the head of it now drawing $6,000 a year. I am bound to say for him that he discloses in the business management of this Survey a tact and ability far beyond what we had a right to suppose of him.

But I say that this Government is derelict in its duty, and wherever that dereliction falls it must fall in not placing at the head of the Coast Survey what its object intended, namely, a highly scientific gentleman who could understand the intricate workings of this scientific survey. There are some people who think that this Survey should be crippled and destroyed because the President of the United States does not, in his judgment, place at its head a man who is sufficiently equipped for the arduous duties of the office.

The Senate Committee on Appropriations, after careful consideration and investigation of this subject, deemed it too important to withhold appropriations either for that reason or for the reason that there might be in other quarters objections to the conduct of this Survey as it is now managed.

Mr. President, I intended to say a word in reference to partisan questions which are involved in these appropriations, and I will say it now. I noticed in the President's message, which was laid upon our tables at the beginning of this session, a tabulation disclosing that in 1886 as compared with 1885 there had been a saving of $17,000,000 in the public expenditures and that saving was arrayed in a table which I have before me showing under the different departments how this administration had been able to save a sum amounting in the aggregate to $17,000,000 as compared with 1885.

I undertook to analyze the expenditures for the purpose of seeing how it was that in former years we had appropriated from seventeen to twenty million dollars beyond what was actually necessary to carry on the operations of this Government. I found by an analysis of the appropriations of 1885 as compared with those of 1886 that this reduction of expenditures consisted of lump sums which practically had nothing to do with the ordinary operations of the Government, but rested wholly, or materially, at least, upon separate and independent appropriations of large sums, which were necessarily expended in 1885, and were not necessary in 1886. For instance, I find a reduction of the legislative expenses of the Government amounting to $587,000. An analysis of the items discloses that nearly the entire amount arises from the fact that the judgments of the Court of Claims for 1886 were less than the judgments of the Court of Claims for 1885, amounting to about $500,000 difference in round numbers.

So with the Department of State. According to the table which I have before me, submitted by the President in his message, there is disclosed a saving of $4,100,000 in the expenditures of the Department of State. A casual observer reading that message would suppose that this new Secretary of State and this new Administration had inaugurated great reforms with reference to the administration of that Department. An analysis of the expenditures discloses that the expenses of the Alabama Claims Commission amounted to $40,000 in 1885, and by the lapse of time and the completion of its duties there was no expenditure for this purpose for 1886. I also find that there was expended on account of the judgments of the Alabama Claims Commission $3,300,000 in 1885, and nothing in 1886. I also find that there was an appropriation made for the French and American Claims Commission awards in 1885, and paid in that year, amounting in round numbers to $600,000, So these three sums, arising out of treaty stipulations and appropriations made with reference to payments that we were bound to make, constitute the entire difference between the expenditures of 1885 and 1886 in the State Department.

So of the Treasury Department, made up of a number of different items, the chief one of which is an item of nearly $3,000,000—$2,931,000—charged to the sinking fund of the Pacific railroads, showing that in 1885 there was invested in the sinking fund of these railroads about $3,000,000, and which was consequently charged to the Treasury, whereas in 1886 that investment only amounted to about $800,000.

I have the other items covering this difference in the Treasury Department; I have named the largest item. I will give one other item—repayments to importers, $1,414,000 less in 1886 than in 1885. That is a sum which is not regulated by any rule, except the rule of overcharge upon the assessment of duties, and it is variable. This very year I have no doubt it will amount to an immensely greater sum. Sometimes it has amounted to as high as $7,000,000. It is a flexible and variable sum, depending upon overcharges of duties.

Then there is the item of debentures and drawbacks, amounting in 1886 to only $486,000, as compared with a million and a half in 1885.

There is no suggestion even of a reformatory system of administration with reference to these matters. They do not depend in any sense on appropriations made by Congress. They are outside of and independent of any appropriations made here or in the other branch of Congress.

So I might go on with this analysis. Take the New Orleans Exposition. In 1885 we spent a million dollars on the New Orleans Exposition, and nothing in 1886.

In the War Department a reduction of $9,000,000 is shown in the table in the President's message. What is that made up of? There was no river and harbor bill in 1885; so that the expenditures in 1886 for rivers and harbors were $6,460,000 less than they were in 1885. Is that fairly to be chargeable to Republican extravagance, simply from the fact that there was no appropriation for rivers and harbors, and the expenditure was less in 1886 than in 1885, two-thirds of the whole saving being in this one item?

The rest of the saving is made up of different items which do not depend at all on the current administration of the War Department; for instance, the refunding of the expenses of raising volunteers, a continued expenditure that has been paid in varying sums from the end of the war, refunding to certain States and Territories under the act of June 27, 1882, $332,000, a specific appropriation to pay for Indian depredations in the State of Kansas and other States.

So I might go on giving items in detail showing the entire reduction in the expenditures. Take the Navy Department. The reduction shown is $2,000,000. Why was that? Last year we spent no money in building ships, or at least we spent $1,200,000 more in 1885 for the construction of ships than we did in 1886.

So I might go on. I have analyzed this table for the purpose of showing, first, that it is not true in fact that this administration is any more economical than former administrations; and secondly, that it is not true in fact that the Senate of the United States in former years has appropriated money that was not necessary for carrying on the ordinary expenses of the Government, or at least is not more responsible for those appropriations than is the House of Representatives. Now and then such appropriations get into these bills in the other House, and now and then in the Senate. I now present my analysis of the table for insertion in the RECORD:

The following statement shows the total net decrease in expenditures for 1886 from expenditures for 1885, also the net decrease by Departments and the principal items which make up such decrease of expenditure:

Net decrease in expenditures for 1886 under 1885	$17,743,796 61
Net decrease by Departments:
1. Legislative	587,567 96
This decrease is principally in the item:
Payment of judgments of the Court of Claims	468,000 00
2. Department of State	$4,115,106 15
This decrease in part is in the following items:
Expenses, &c., of Alabama Claims Commission	40,100 00
Judgments of Alabama Claims Commission	3,300,000 00
Awards of French and American Claims Commission	594,200 00
	3,934,300 00
3. Treasury Department	8,968,984 29
This decrease in part is in the following items:
Mints and assay offices	210,000 00
Territorial governments	45,000 00
Bureau of Engraving and Printing	258,000 00
Internal-revenue service	437,000 00
Repayment to importers	1,414,000 00
Debentures or drawbacks	486,000 00
Light-houses, beacons, and fog-signals	210,000 00
Interest on the public debt	803,000 00
Sinking funds, Pacific railroads	2,931,000 00
New Orleans Exposition	996,000 00
	7,790,000 00
4. War Department	9,079,993 53
This decrease in part is in the following items:
Building for State, War, and Navy Department	139,000 00
Increasing water supply of Washington, D. C	449,000 00
Pay and bounty to volunteers	250,000 00
Subsistence of the Army	262,000 00
Transportation and clothing for Army	324,000 00
National cemeteries, roads, and headstones	49,000 00
Fortifications	114,000 00
Improving rivers and harbors	6,460,000 00
Army and Navy Hospital, Hot Springs	59,000 00
National Home for Disabled Volunteers	117,000 00
Refunding to States expenses of raising volunteers	255,000 00
Refunding certain States and Territories, act June 27, 1882	332,000 00
Commutation of rations to prisoners of war	39,000 00
Horses and other property lost in military service	189,000 00
	9,038,000 00
5. Navy Department	2,134,782 28
This decrease in part is in the following items:
Increase of the Navy, new vessels	1,015,000 00
Construction and repair of vessels	20,000 00
Steam machinery	76,000 00
Ordnance and ordnance stores	33,000 00
Medical Department, Navy	28,000 00
Mileage under Graham decision	208,000 00
	1,380,000 00
6. Department of Agriculture	40,542 12
This decrease is in the general expenses of this Department.
7. Department of Justice	630,243 17
This decrease in part is in the following items:
Fees of supervisors of election	257,000 00
Expenses of United States courts	324,000 00
Expenses of courts in Utah	15,000 00
	596,000 00

While there has been a decrease in the expenditures for 1886 from 1885, as above enumerated, there has also been an increase in the expenditures for 1886 over 1885 in the following Departments of $7,813,422.84.

These Departments are as follows:

1. Executive proper	$16,534 96
2. Interior Department	5,176,218 16
3. Post-Office Department	2,620,669 72
	7,813,422 84

Again, there are independent bills passed by both Houses. I call the attention of the Senator from Kansas to this fact. Take the additions we have made to this bill, in all $2,940,000. Of that sum $1,600,000, in round numbers, is for public buildings. The Committee on Appropriations in the House and in the Senate have no responsibility for these appropriations. They are appropriations made to carry out existing laws, and are made necessary by existing laws.

Mr. BECK. The Senator will allow me a moment.

Mr. ALLISON Certainly.

Mr. BECK. We increased several appropriations for public buildings so as to complete them, to save rent by having them occupied. We propose to complete them in one year instead of two when the work can be as well done in one.

Mr. ALLISON. I thank the Senator for that suggestion, but we have made no appropriation in that regard which does not provide for carrying out an existing law.

Mr. BECK. That is true, but our increases were for the reason I have stated.

Mr. ALLISON. We have increased some of these appropriations, and why? We found this, as a rule—I make no charge against this administration or any administration—that the moment a law passes for the erection of and an appropriation is made for a public building, no matter whether the appropriation is $50,000, $100,000, or $150,000, that moment there grows up at the locality a little coterie of officials, a superintendent of the building, at $6 or $8 a day, a clerk to that superintendent, and a messenger, the rent of an office, all of which is paid out of the appropriation, a watchman, and so on, and if these appropriations are made in driblets, as is proposed in the House bill, then these watchmen continue, these superintendents continue, and the clerks, and all the local force that is necessary to carry on a public building.

The Senate Committee on Appropriations believe that when the policy of erecting a public building in a particular place is entered upon it is true economy to appropriate if possible enough to finish the building in order that economical and prudent contracts may be made, in order that there shall not be an eternal prolongation of the official staff connected with the erection of that building, and in cases where these buildings can not be constructed in a single year, that we should appropriate a sufficient sum of money to enable them to go on efficiently and rapidly to completion. By way of illustration, take the case of the public building at Pittsburgh. Here is a building with a limit of appropriation of, I believe, $800,000. We found in this House bill an appropriation of $50,000 for it. The Supervising Architect came before us and said that with that appropriation there would be a practical stoppage of the work on this building, on which we had already expended more than half a million dollars, for a great portion of the fiscal year. We have added $150,000 to that appropriation for the purpose of enabling that building to progress gradually year by year until it is completed. It is either a wasteful and extravagant expenditure of the public money to erect that building at all, or if we are to build it it is economy to complete it at the earliest possible time consistent with good work.

Mr. BECK. We doubled the appropriation for the work in front of this Capitol so as to have it done in two years.

Mr. ALLISON. For illustration, we have added to the House appropriation $157,000 for the terraces of the Capitol. Some of us who have been here for a good many years recollect perfectly well that the Capitol has been in an unfinished state ever since we have been here, and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] says always will be; but we can contribute our part to complete this building. Therefore we called before us the Architect of the Capitol, and said, "What will it cost to complete these terraces in order that we may not come here at the beginning of each session and find this whole Capitol torn up, to the inconvenience of Senators and Representatives?" And we have proposed to appropriate in this bill, by way of amendment, a sufficient sum to complete these terraces.

So in reference to the Northwest Seal Rock. What is the fact in regard to that? There is a rock upon the California coast, situated 12 miles from shore in mid-ocean—a rock upon which a light-house is necessary to the navigation of that ocean. We have appropriated in driblets for the completion of that light-house, which will cost $450,000 to complete. We have appropriated for it in such driblets that a great portion of the sum has been expended in creating a plant and in providing means which were practically left to waste there because there was not sufficient money to continue the work. We have provided here what the Light-House Board have told us will enable them to go on during the working season toward the completion of this great light-house on this rock.

We have adopted this policy with reference to all these appropriations, and that is the reason why this bill appears to be swollen above and beyond that which came from the House of Representatives.

It is not true economy to have fifteen, or twenty, or thirty public buildings in hand with an appropriation of $50,000 a year for these buildings, $10,000 of which probably is used up in the pay of an official staff at the locality where the building is being constructed. Our true policy is to construct and complete these buildings without allowing them to run along on from year to year in this wasteful and extravagant way.

Now, Mr. President, I ask that the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be read.

Mr. BECK. It begins on page 17 of the report of the committee accompanying the bill.

I only desire to say a word. I am not going into politics now. If we should go into the question of economy as between different administrations, this bill might run until the 4th of March, and we might have an extra session.

The Superintendent of the Coast Survey is a young man whom I never saw except before the committee, as the chairman said picked up when perhaps there was not any assurance that he had the ability he has since developed as shown in the management of the Coast and Geodetic Survey. As will be seen by his letter to the Secretary of the Treasury, he has the office in a condition that is highly creditable to him. The chairman said that, and I want to support it by asking the Senate to listen to the reasons why he wants it.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 10, 1887.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the letter of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, of the 4th instant, calling attention to the provision made in the sundry civil bill for the Coast and Geodetic Survey, as it passed the House of Representatives, and also to the estimate covering the same subject as transmitted to Congress.

The committee wishes to know whether the appropriations provided in the House bill are sufficient to carry on effectively the work in the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and if the arrangement there made is satisfactory to the Department.

I herewith transmit a letter of the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey dated on the 5th instant, together with a statement in relation to engraving and printing in the Coast and Geodetic Survey. From these communications it appears that the estimates made provision for the efficient and economical prosecution of the Survey during the ensuing year; it also appears that the provision made by the House bill will not secure such results, consequently the arrangement there made is not satisfactory to this Department.

Respectfully, yours,

D. MANNING,
Secretary.

Hon. WILLIAM B. ALLISON,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations, United States Senate.

COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY OFFICE,
Washington, January 5, 1887.

SIR: Referring to the letter of January 4th instant from T. P. Cleaves——

Mr. HAWLEY. I have been myself reading through this letter. It occupies three and a half pages of rather fine type. It is interesting and instructive and shows that the House bill was altogether inadequate; shows it in detail, but it will take a good while to read it. Would it satisfy the Senator to have it printed in the RECORD?

Mr. BECK. I have no objection to that, I but thought perhaps the Senator from Kansas would like to hear it. If he does not, let us go on with the bill and let the letter be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter is as follows:

COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY OFFICE,
Washington, January 5, 1887.

SIR: Referring to the letter of January 4th instant, from T. P. Cleaves, clerk of Appropriations Committee, United States Senate, asking whether "the appropriations provided for in the House bill are sufficient to carry on effectually the work in the Coast and Geodetic Survey," &c., which letter was referred to me for report, I have the honor to state that—

The appropriations referred to are very much less than "sufficient to carry on effectually the work of the Coast and Geodetic Survey," whether in the field or in the office.

(1) The reduction by the House bill from $244,000 as estimated for all field-work (party expenses) to $125,450 is accomplished by the entire omission of some twelve items of important and needed work, and the arbitrary reduction, in twenty-five items, of the sums which had been carefully adjusted to rapid and economical performance of work imperatively needed in as many localities. It utterly ignores the capacity of the plant to the amount of work requiring to be done, makes no attempt to provide for continued work throughout the available working-season in any of the two-score localities, and therefore, as hereinafter more fully explained, inevitably involves needless enhancement in cost and indefinite delay in the completion of surveys which, in the interest of commerce and of safety to life and property, ought to be pushed with the utmost rapidity.

(2) The salaries of the field force of the Survey, whose compensation had already been reduced (by my abolishment of certain allowances) in sums ranging from $200 to $900 per annum, were estimated for at the same rate for which Congress in July last appropriated. The House bill still further reduces their compensation by several hundred dollars, and places them at an average of $1,291 each less than the same bill provides for the same grade of employés in the Geological Survey. Such a reduction is grievously unjust and invidious to a body of scientific and skillful men, organized, without reference to politics, under conditions as rigid as those for entry into the official grades in the military or naval service, and whose training and wide experience in topography, hydrography, and geodesy renders their service fully equal in value to the salaries estimated for.

The estimates contemplate a "field force" of fifty-five members. The House bill further reduces the force to forty-eight members, which of course would involve a corresponding delay in the prosecution of work, the immediate and pressing importance of which is nowhere disputed.

(3) The House bill involves certain reductions in the office force, notably in the engraving and printing division, which would inevitably compel either an enormous increase in expenditure or else the practical cessation of the publication of charts and the consequent absolute waste of a large part of the money appropriated for the Survey.

(4) Not one position is estimated for the services of which are not urgently needed or which can not be applied to excellent and useful purpose. In whatever respect the provisions of the House bill deviate from the estimates, to just that extent they are insuffient to carry on the work of the Survey effectually, economically, or with any approach to that rapidity which is essential to safety of navigation, to the intelligent improvement of tide-water rivers, bays, and harbors, and to due protection to life and property engaged in commerce.

To explain, item by item, the estimates and appropriations would be an interminable task, but the practical effect of the appropriations made by the House bill is perhaps sufficiently illustrated in the following statement:

The estimates for the Coast and Geodetic Survey for the year ending June 30, 1888, were framed upon a careful consideration of the relative capacity of the plant (office, shops, vessels, and equipments), the office force and the field force, and especially with reference to the criticism which has imputed to the Bureau undue delay in the prosecution and completion of its work. Not only were the uncompleted gaps along the coast duly considered, and special care taken to direct the field-work to the localities which imperatively required attention, but the estimates for the different items of work were the result of the judgment of the most competent and practical officers of the Survey as to the expenditure which would in such case produce the largest net result in proportion to gross expenditure. While it was intended to perform a larger amount of field-work with a somewhat smaller aggregate of salaries' expenditure, the aggregate of the estimates was less than the average annual appropriation of several years past.

All of the estimates for every class of proposed expenditures were itemized to the minutest practicable detail.

The estimates thus detailed, for every dollar asked for, extended without interruption over consecutive pages of the Book of Estimates, so as to show at a glance every expenditure contemplated, and, as far as possible, its nature and amount.

The estimates contemplated the doing of more field-work at an expenditure of over $7,000 less for salaries—that is, the accomplishment of larger results for less pay—than was practicable under the current appropriation.

The reduction in salary expenditure was intended to be accomplished by the retirement of seven of the least efficient members of the field force.

REDUCTIONS BY HOUSE BILL.

The estimates for field-work, aggregating $244,000, every dollar of which (and $100,000 additional) was recommended by the most competent specialists of the bureau, for the prosecution of work imperatively demanded in the interest of both economical and rapid completion, were met by appropriations aggregating $125,400.

This reduction not only compels the neglect of important localities and operations, and ignores the capacity of the plant—in shops, instruments, vessels, equipment, &c.—for effective work, but it would, for lack of funds in many instances, compel the withdrawal of parties and vessels from the locality of work in the midst, instead of at the close, of the working season, thus not only delaying the completion of the work, but enhancing its cost by the increased proportion of dead expense (transportation to and from localities of work) to net results (i.e., amount of work accomplished in the multitude of localities in the field).

Obviously, the smaller the proportion of an appropriation expended in transportation, equipment, &c., the larger will be the residue of the appropriated sum available for actual work and results, the longer the parties can stay in the field on land or sea, and the larger will be the proportion and the less the cost of net results. It is desirable on the score of both efficiency and economy that parties should, as far as consistent with proper co-ordination of the different varieties of work, be kept in the field as long as conditions of season will permit, instead of being withdrawn, for lack of funds, in the midst of the season. To illustrate: We have two steamers in San Francisco for work in Alaska—one built especially for it two years ago at a cost of $100,000.

The extent and value of the resources of that Territory, recently beginning to be widely recognized, require for their development a rapid survey of its coast. Its commerce is obstructed by the perils of thousands of miles of inland channels and passages, full of rocks, currents, tide-rips, and other dangers to navigation.

There are said to be only two competent pilots, and the commerce of the fur, fish, lumber, and mining interests is practically monopolized by two companies.

The charting of those waters, as the result of rapid and reasonably accurate surveys, would speedily emancipate that commerce, develop those resources, and make them accessible to general enterprise.

The House has responded to an estimate of $12,000 by an appropriation of $5,000, which will compel the idleness of one steamer, being only sufficient to coal, equip, man, and transport from San Francisco to the Alaskan waters and return one steamer, with funds for about two or two and one-half months' work. The $12,000 asked for would have kept the two steamers at work five or six months, equivalent to ten or eleven months' work of a single steamer. In other words, $12,000 in a single appropriation secures in net results as much as four annual appropriations of $5,000, and secures them four times as rapidly.

What is said of the appropriation for Alaska is measurably true of twenty-five other appropriated items for field-work, which were reduced far below the point of economical and efficient prosecution. Twelve items of important field-work, estimated for because the work ought to be done at once, were entirely omitted from the House bill. The inevitable result of the reductions and omissions will be extravagance and delay.

REDUCTION IN FIELD SALARIES.

The normal or field force of the Coast Survey is a trained body of skilled men, who are required to enter the force after a mental and physical examination entitling them to graduate at the best scientific schools. They correspond in grade, requirements, character, and value of work to the "scientific" force of the Geological Survey, and have been selected without reference to partisan considerations.

During the past year and long before the submission of the estimates for 1887-'88, their emoluments, by the abolishment of certain subsistence allowances, had been reduced in sums ranging from $200 or $300 to more than $900 per annum, and the estimates were made at such reduced rates, being the same as appropriated in July last (1886).

Not one member of the "field" or "scientific" force of the Coast Survey is engaged in, or paid for, any other pursuit, profession, or vocation, and the newspaper criticism alleging the payment of salaries to consulting scientists (based upon information alleged to have been given to Congressional committees), was absolutely without foundation. It is the Geological Survey, if any, which pays a number of detached "scientific experts."

Notwithstanding the facts (1) that every member of the "field" or "scientific" force was specifically estimated for; (2) that the force corresponds in quality and character and in the value of its service to the "scientific" force of the Geological Survey; (3) that the emoluments of its members (never as high as those of the members of the Geological Survey) had already been severely pruned, and that the estimates for their salaries averaged $734 less than those for the corresponding force of the Geological Survey, the House still further reduced them by appropriating an average salary of only $1,529 (making no reduction whatever in the estimates for salaries of the Geological Survey "scientific force," but appropriating an average of $2,820), a difference in average salaries in favor the Geological force of $1,291, involving a flagrantly unjust discrimination against the field force of the Coast Survey.

The estimates contemplated a field force of fifty-five. The appropriations contemplate a field force of forty-eight. The reduction is made in disregard of the requirements of the work and necessarily involves dilatoriness in the prosecution of the work.

REDUCTIONS IN OFFICE FORCE.

The House bill is the same as that of last session in relation to the office force, which was very much modified by Congress and in many respects involves undesirable and injudicious changes. It neglects to appropriate for the present position of the most efficient plate-printer in the service, who, in addition to the immediate supervision of the printing division, has actually performed more work than either of his three associates. Not to detail the objections to the reductions made by the House bill, it is especially injudicious and harmful in its reduction of the force of engravers from thirteen to seven.

Even with the present force of thirteen the engraving division is inadequate to the prompt preparation of new charts, the correction of old charts, and the completion of work which accumulated during several years past. Only the conviction that an increase would not be permitted prevented an estimate for it.

With the present force, there is available for the engraving of new charts the time of a little less than nine men. The proposed reduction would leave available for new charts the services of two and one-half men. The bureau, therefore, would be able to issue less than one-third of the usual number of new charts per year, which means that at least one-half of the surveys made could not be charted in time to be of use, the changes of localities during the enforced delay being so numerous as to render the accumulated data and drawings unreliable.

Substantially half the money expended by the Survey would be wasted by the crippling of a division indispensable to the publication of charts, the most important result of its work.

PHOTOLITHOGRAPHY.

It has been intimated that the purpose of the reduction in engravers is to compel the use of photolithography instead of copper-plate printing in the production of permanent chart work. The experiment has been repeatedly tried and invariably found to be utterly impracticable and infinitely expensive, as shown by Commander Bartlett, of the Hydrographic Bureau of the Navy, and by the accompanying copy of the statement prepared at this office in July last for the information of the Senate Committee on Appropriations. For the reasons there detailed, the adoption of photolithography consequent upon the dismissal of six engravers would necessitate the doubling of the force of two dozen draughtsmen now employed on new chart work, while the work of correcting charts would—even during the comparatively brief period during which hand-corrections would continue practicable—require four times as many draughtsmen as is now required of engravers to make corrections on copper-plates. Even if this rapid multiplication of expense could be endured, the accumulation of corrections soon renders the task of making them manually impossible. Instead of retrenchment, the reduction of engravers is bound to be a measure of extravagance, either by delay in publication of charts until many of the surveys become obsolete (involving waste of the money expended in making them), or by the greatly multiplied expense due to corrections of "photolith" charts.

PLATE PRINTERS.

Even if the engraving is reduced, the existing force of printers will need to be continued in order to supply charts from the existing plates, the printing from the nine new plates (which is the average number per year) forming but a slight proportion of the printing from several hundred plates necessary to supply the public demand for charts of all the localities. If a considerable number of copies of each chart were kept on hand, their condemnation (owing to constant changes in the light-houses, beacons, buoys, channels, shoals, &c., compelling corrections of the plates) would result in large and constant loss. To avoid delay in serving the public, the presses are run upon the different plates so as to keep on hand a small number, duly corrected, of those most in demand; but with the utmost frugality and precaution some charts are sacrificed by condemnation. These condemnations average four or five editions of an average of twenty copies per month.

The reduction of the printers and helpers from six to four leaves us able to run but two presses in any emergency. It is impossible for two presses to supply the product of last year as it was required to be furnished—28,500 copies for distribution from the chart-room, with 11,700 copies of proofs of current work, transfer proofs, and coast pilot-charts. "Rag-wiping" can not be depended upon for any but the new, strong engraving, the old plates requiring to be wiped by hand or thrown aside until new electrotype copies are made.

Accident, sickness, or leave of absence would reduce the bureau work to a single press, and during the summer, with the best efforts, the bureau would fall 30 or 40 per cent. behind in its orders for charts.

It was intended to estimate for no position for which there is not ample and profitable employment.

To what has already been said in relation to specific reductions it is proper to add, that the appropriations in the House bill effect a marked and unprofitable change in the relative proportion of the different classes of expenditure.

Of the aggregate expenditures the estimates contemplated as large an amount as practicable for field-work or actual surveying, in proportion to the operating expenses, such as salaries, general office expenses, printing, &c. The appropriations by the House very materially reduce the proportion of expenditure for field-work or the accomplishment of net results, and correspondingly increase the proportion of expenditure for operating expenses, effecting a smaller proportion of productive and a larger proportion of unproductive expenditure than was contemplated by the estimates.

For example: The estimates provided for $244,000 of field-work or surveying, being substantially 42 per cent. of the entire estimated expenditure of $582,-199.98. But the appropriation provides for $125,400 of field-work or survey, being 30 per cent. of the entire expenditures (including printing of annual report) of $415,946 under the appropriation.

Under the estimates all salaries would be but 42$\frac{1}{10}$ per cent. of total expenditures, but under the appropriation the salaries would be 48 per cent. of total expenditures.

In a similar manner the proportion of rent and all general expenses is changed from 12 per cent., as estimated, to 16$\frac{5}{10}$ per cent., as appropriated, and printing is changed from 3$\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. to 4$\frac{9}{10}$ per cent.

Inclosed herewith is a copy of a statement heretofore made, showing with some detail the practical effect of the proposed reductions in the engraving and printing division. Also the letter of Mr. Cleaves, clerk to Senate Committee on Appropriations.

Very respectfully, yours,

F. M. THORN, Superintendent.

Hon. DANIEL MANNING,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Copy of statement July, 1886, in relation to engraving and printing, Coast and Geodetic Survey.

Analysis of the engraving work done during last three years and nine months, upon the basis of an average of 14 engravers employed, shows that miscellaneous work (corrections of chart plates, &c.) has taken the time of 3$\frac{1}{2}$ men; leaves, sickness, and holidays have taken the time of 1$\frac{1}{2}$ men; total, 5 men; leaving for new charts the time and work of 9 men, which 9 engravers have been able to engrave for the production of 9 new charts and 9 new editions of charts per annum.

If the number of engravers is reduced to 7, as proposed, their work would show: Miscellaneous correction by (time of) 3$\frac{1}{2}$ men; absence, sickness, and holidays (time of) 1 man; total, 4$\frac{1}{2}$ men; leaving for new work, 2$\frac{1}{2}$ men.

With the number proposed in the bill, therefore, the future capacity of the office to turn out new charts and editions, as compared with its capacity during the past three and three-fourth years, would be as 2$\frac{1}{2}$ is to 9, and the new charts in the future would be reduced in number to 3 per annum, in place of 9 per annum, as at present. That means simply that at the very least one-half of the surveys made would not possibly be charted in time to be of any use to the public; that there would be a constant accumulation of data and drawings, and that the charts thereof would be delayed until the changes of the localities would render them so unreliable as to be useless. In other words, it means a substantial waste of half the money expended by the Survey.

The only reason assigned, so far as known, for the reduction in the force of engravers is alleged to be based upon the theory that photolithography can be profitably substituted for copper-plate engraving in the production of charts. Photolithography is already employed for reproducing the drawings for charts, or of plane-table sheets of surveys, in important localities, so as to get the result of a survey before the public within from two to four months after the completion of the field work. Those photolithographic charts serve very well during the few months further which must elapse before the copper-plate engravings can be completed and printed; but even in that brief interval they become in many instances more expensive than the engravings, because of the fact that corrections can only be made on them by hand, sheet by sheet, instead of being made (as in the engraving) by putting the corrections on the plate and then printing the corrected sheets.

The attempt to use the photolithographic charts, beyond a temporary purpose, would—it has always been found whenever and wherever attempted—speedily make the cost of corrections many times surpass the cost of the original copper-plate engravings and of all subsequent corrections. Photolithography for permanent chart use was tried in the Hydrographic Bureau of the Navy. In his report for the year 1883 Commander Bartlett, the hydrographer, on pages 4, 6, and 7, gives some actual experiences with photolithography, from which some quotations are hereinafter made.

It must be understood that in every locality along the coast, bays, harbors, and tide-water rivers, changes are continually occurring which affect navigation, such as changes in shore lines, in depths, in location of shoals, of light-houses, of buoys, of bars, discovery of rocks or other dangers to navigation, all of which necessitate constant, prompt, and systematic corrections on the charts. Those corrections not unfrequently begin before the original plate leaves the hand of the engraver. They can and are made upon that plate easily and cheaply, and the printed corrected charts, printed in any number required, at little expense. But on the photolithograph chart, the corrections can only be made on each sheet by the hand of a draughtsman, and the number of corrections soon become so great that in an institution like the Coast Survey the prompt making of indispensable corrections, if hand corrections were practicable, would require the services of more than four times as many draughtsmen as are required to correct the copper plates. It is also twice the work to make drawings of charts for photolith that it is for engaving. The substitution of photolith would therefore require double the number of draughtsmen now engaged in drawing charts.

The Survey has charts to correct a single sheet of which up to date would involve the services of a good draughtsman ten days, costing from $40 to $50. If, at a very moderate estimate, only a third of an edition (200 sheets) remained on hand for correction, the cost of corrections for that chart would range from $8,000 to $10,000, or many times the cost of all the original engraving and corrections on copper-plate. To make the same correction on the copper-plate of the same chart would require the work of the engraver thirty days, costing $150 to $200, and the printing of 200 sheets at about $15 more—a total of $165 to $215 as against $8,000 or $10,000. This is why photolithography, which is less expensive at first, nevertheless from the frequent necessity of correcting the chart soon becomes immeasurably more expensive than engraving, and can only be used to advantage for a temporary purpose. After alluding to the fact that the cost of correcting a photolithographic chart by hand "may amount to $25 a copy" (and his office has since corrected a sheet at a cost of $40 and $50), Commender Bartlett, in his report for 1883, speaking of the copper-plate engraving, says:

"They have, however, an advantage over the photolithographic copies, in that corrections may be made on the copper and new copies may be printed from the plate as corrected. The photolithographic reproductions, while less expensive at the outset, can only be corrected by alterations on each copy of the chart in pen and ink. The waste of labor and waste of money in this hand correction of 83,000 charts (about 40,000 in the Coast Survey) is simply inconceivable, and, moreover, it could not be adequately and accurately accomplished with even unlimited labor and money. The office has for some time made the attempt to perform this task, but after a protracted trial the conviction is formed that it is impossible, and that, if it were possible, it would not be worth the effort. * * * The latter method (photolithography) commended itself as being at the outset a cheap and rapid method of chart-making, but for reasons that will be explained later it has become a source of expense and inconvenience. Its disadvantages have been represented annually to the bureau, and in 1882 an appropriation of $15,000 was made for the transfer of the photolithographic charts to copper," &c.

To this explanation and quotation it is only necessary to briefly add that while it is difficult to state with exactness the increase in cost, by the substitute of photolithography for printing, it is no exaggeration to say that the prompt corrections which are indispensable to the utility of the charts as guides to navigation, and which require the services of an average of 3½ engravers on copper-plates, would require the services of not less than 14 to 17 draughtsmen on photolithographic sheets. Instead of retrenchment, therefore, the reduction in the number of engravers is bound to be a measure of extravagance either by delay in publication of engraved charts until the surveys become obselete (which would involve a waste of moneys expended in them) or by the waste of money in correction of "photoliths."

It has been suggested that instead of hand-correction of photo-lithograph charts, the corrections can be made on the stones. That matter has been the subject of consideration not only in the Coast Survey but in the Hydrographic Bureau of the Navy. In fact, all similar institutions here and abroad are continually searching for new or economical methods, and none of them appear to have utilized the scheme of correcting on the stone where any considerable number of charts are involved. But far beyond all question of cost or expediency in production is that of preservation through long periods of time. Paper is perishable, and original work on it is not secured. Two hundred or three hundred years will probably efface our best sheets. But these invaluable records on copper will last forever, and prove a store for future generations to read of our coasts, note the changes, and in turn prepare for others.

Inasmuch as some of those who criticise the Coast Survey for its alleged adherence to expensive methods are wont to regard the hydrographer of the Navy as so worthy an exemplar of administrative efficiency as to make the transfer of the Coast Survey to his bureau desirable, it is deemed proper to quote his emphatic statement, made in this office June 23, 1886, that the method of chart-correction upon stone, except in Eldridge's case, where the entire issue is limited to a half-dozen different charts, is neither feasible nor economical. The stones of the requisite size are rare enough to be as expensive as the copper plates, and their storage and use would require as much space as is now occupied by the entire bureau.

Commander Bartlett has found that all foreign establishments, interested in the adoption of the best and cheapest methods, use the copper-plate engraving for permanent chart work and making of corrections. The only suggestion of an improvement of the methods in vogue in both the Hydrographic Bureau and the Coast Survey was found in the case of the Danish government, where the engraving is done on copper-plate as it is here, and then transferred to stone, from which the actual printing is done.

A trifle of expense is thus perhaps saved in the printing of sheets more rapidly, but the quality is inferior, and the process requires steam-power and power presses, so that even in the matter of economy the propriety of adopting that method is regarded as dubious. It requires just as many copper-plates, and just as much engraving as our methods.

The experience, enterprise, and inquiries of Commander Bartlett have compelled his abandonment of other methods, and his adherence, in opinion and in practice, to the process of copper-plate engraving as surpassing all others in quality and cheapness for publications involving any considerable number of charts.

If in spite of the suggestions of reason, experience, and the uniform practice of all institutions for national surveys, in their methods of chart production, it should be decided to reduce the force of engravers from thirteen to seven, the full complement of plate printers and helpers would still be required to print from the plates already engraved, if the public is to be furnished copies of the charts as rapidly as demanded.

If the force of engravers is to be retained at an efficient number (and the thirteen now employed are really inadequate to the sufficiently prompt completion of new work), the plate printer and helper, who are proposed by the bill to be dispensed with, ought to be retained for the same reasons.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, naturally enough from the location of the State I have the honor in part to represent, we feel a very considerable interest in the provisions of this bill that are under discussion, and in the character of the Coast Survey office in general.

Now, I express here my very great disappointment that the superintendent of that office, for the first time, is not a gentleman of high scientific attainment. In fact he is not a scientist at all, as the word is understood. He was a clerk in the Treasury Department; and I supposed for a good while—not knowing the details—that he was merely detailed to take charge as an executive officer pro tempore of the Coast Survey office. It seems he has been appointed superintendent, an office the appointment to which does not come here necessarily for confirmation. I submit that that is a most extraordinary departure from the uniform practice of the Government, referred to by the Senator from Iowa, under which we have had men of the very highest attainments in the United States at the head of the Survey. Of course such a gentleman, who is undoubtedly a man of excellent character and is a fair executive officer, would in nineteen-twentieths of the points that come before him take the assertions of his subordinates. He is entirely at their mercy as to all the scientific details of his bureau. That is a great administrative mistake, I submit, and I hope it will not continue.

I was right glad, having been considering these provisions here, to hear what the Senator from Iowa said concerning the unwarranted and extraordinary reductions made elsewhere in the appropriations contributed to the Coast Survey. It seems to be thought that it is something we can amuse ourselves with, and can buy as we can a sealskin coat. It is forgotten that it is a matter of daily necessity for the coastwise service, a matter of common humanity as well as of national honor; and yet it is thought to be a smart thing and a brilliant thing which is supposed to be likely to gain votes at the polls before the groundlings to cut down this service to the starvation point. We might as well, as I think the Senator intimated, discharge the staff here at headquarters if we can not have the requisite persons in the field and the requisite draughtsmen and computers to carry out the work. I will give you an instance in point, one that concerns me more intimately.

Long Island Sound had not been surveyed for nearly forty years. In the mean time it shallowed at points and the depths had changed, and the shore had changed, as well as the great central channels of the sound. Some harbors, before of minor importance, had become of increasing usefulness in the coastwise trade. Forty years elapsed and we succeeded finally in getting the Government to begin a survey of Long Island Sound. The field-notes have been taken. What next is necessary? That they shall be put on paper by the draughtsmen. There are sixteen draughtsmen in that office, eight of whom must go on upon certain current work, and eight of whom only are devoted to the work of enlarging or reproducing the field-notes, or working out the field-notes.

This survey, which is necessary to the comfort and safety of life and property along Long Island Sound, and which is ten or fifteen years behind-hand now, is to be delayed so that it shall take, with the present force of the office, three to four years to give us the statements that are provided for by the field-notes.

The service is unbalanced. I hold in my hand a communication from the chief scientific gentleman of that survey showing that there ought to be during this coming year six more draughtsmen employed, and he tells me that none are provided for even in the amendments of the Senate Committee on Appropriations. He tells me we can not have our Long Island Sound charts under three years. Some of them are two or three years old now. That is only an example of the false economy.

I sympathize with what the Senator from Kansas has said, and if Uncle Sam's house can be kept in the style some of the people not in the Senate think it can, I agree with him that I would like to try it for awhile; and except for the fact that I am a boarder or one of the householders myself, I would be content to let us live on ancient fish and stale eggs and half-rotten potatoes, and let the roof fall in until we had lost ten times as much as it cost to live comfortably. When the Government had gone on in that style two or three or four years, we might be cured of a certain kind of Democracy which is another name for stinginess. The Government would be absolutely cured and we should hear no more of it. I say I would agree to that except that I am one of the boarders and one of the owners of the house, and I can not stand it. The existence of my constituents will not allow me to agree to it, wherefore I have to join the patriotic Senator from Kentucky and say we ought to give what the public service needs, whether the House of Representatives does or not.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, true economy in the use of the public money consists in applying as much of it as possible to the public service, and as little as may be necessary to the salaries and numbers of employés.

I understood the Senator from Connecticut to contend that there ought to be a scientific man at the head of this bureau. That looks very reasonable, indeed. An eminent scientist ought to be at the head of the Coast Survey because it is a scientific bureau. It seems to me that all the men engaged in that service are scientists. Many of them are very experienced men in the particular lines of geodetic measurement and of hydrographic measurement and topographic survey. What has been needed more than anything else is what we have now, a man who is a business man and who understands how to arrange, how to prosecute the true economy of the bureau.

We have got scientific men enough in there, plenty of them, of the highest possible reputation, and they will do their work and do it correctly, and let it be proved, as it is obliged to be proved, without the necessity of its being supervised by some great scientific chief, for the truth is, when you put a great scientific man at the head of a bureau like this he does not supervise the work in its details, but relies merely on the fact that, comparing one detail with another, the whole work proves itself and the map comes out right, for the whole business is to supply a map for navigators approaching or sailing along our coasts.

The economy which the House of Representatives in its bill has attempted to practice in regard to this bureau is simply destructive. You will notice in the estimates for this service by the Government that $581,699.82 is distributed in the following way in the estimates: For field expenses, 42 per cent.; for repairing vessels, 12 per cent.; for salaries, including field and office force, 42.5 per cent.; printing, including annual report ordered by Congress, 3.5 per cent. of the whole sum that I have just stated. The House bill cuts down the expenditures to $415,532.09. Notice how that is distributed: For field expenses, 30.2 per cent.; for repairs of vessels, 16.9 per cent.; for salaries, including field and office force, 48 per cent.; for printing, including annual report ordered by Congress, 4 per cent.

You thus see that while the amount appropriated to salaries is increased from 42.5 to 48 per cent., the amount for field expenses is decreased from 42 per cent. to 30.2 per cent., showing that the money is taken out of the field-work in the House bill and applied to salaries. That is very unjust to the service. The salaries are large enough. It is true there is some cutting down, because there are some salaries that are disposed of by this bill that were in the law before. The House probably found it convenient to cut down in that respect; but when you come to the percentage of salaries and ascertain how much of this money is actually applied to the really public service of surveying and making maps, you see that the House bill has reduced the field expenses from 42 to 30.2 per cent. That shows that the bill is going upon an expensive and an extravagant predicate, instead of a just and an economical one.

So I think the Senate Committee on Appropriations have done exactly right to follow the estimates made by the Treasury Department with respect to this service. The estimate has been very carefully made, under the most careful supervision, with a view of increasing the activity of the work, and enabling the people in the field to go on and complete the work of the Coast Survey. The fact is in respect to the Coast Survey that nine-tenths of it is completed with the exception of Alaska—the bays, inlets, and harbors of Alaska. All the great bays, and inlets, and mouths of rivers, in fact, all along the Atlantic and Gulf coasts and the Pacific coast, have been completed except about 10 per cent. All the bays have been completed, and all the inlets and river mouths have been completed; but about 10 per cent. of the connecting lines has not yet been run.

Those lines are not so very important in respect to the safety and security of navigation. The mariner wants to know how to get in and out of a port. He does not care so much to know what is the condition of the coast where he has to make no landing, except what hydrography might reveal in the way of some rocks, bars, shoals, and ledges and the like. If we prosecute this work on the plan that has been observed since this young gentleman has been in charge of it, we shall probably complete it inside of six or seven years. I think it is more likely that it will be completed inside of seven years. But if we allow it to drag along and take out of the field force what is necessary for the actual survey, we may be fifteen or we may be twenty years in this matter.

I propose before we get through with this bill, after the committee have done with their amendments, to offer an amendment, which I will read now for the information of Senators who may be concerned in it. This comes in at the end of line 918:

And the Secretary of the Treasury is required to submit an estimate to Congress at its next session to cover the necessary expenses of completely furnishing a permanent party on the coast of Alaska for surveying the bays, inlets, and mouths of the principal rivers along that coast, to include such vessels, boats, and other means of conveyance, and houses, provisions, furs, fuel, and other supplies as are necessary for this permanent party.

I call the attention of the committee to it now for the reason that I think that is an important start to make in the direction of completing the survey on our coast. Alaska has a very short summer, and during all the summer period fogs are very heavy, indeed, and it is impossible almost to run long lines along that coast, and short lines are necessarily very expensive. The very best line that can be taken in Alaska will be found in the winter season, and if we have a permanent establishment there for the survey of the bays, inlets, and mouths of the rivers of Alaska we shall within two or three seasons complete a sufficient survey of that Territory for all practical purposes, leaving it to be filled in hereafter according to our convenience. But if we go on as now, sending our vessels up there with surveying parties so that they reach the coast in the summer time and they have to return so very soon, it will be impracticable, I think, in a very long while to get a correct survey of Alaska.

I call the attention of the chairman of the committee to this subject and to the amendment I propose, because I hope he will agree with me about it, and I believe he will.

And I wish to say in this connection that we have not now outside of our own territories a more important right or a more important privilege connected with the Government of the United States than the fisheries of the Alaskan coast, and after we provide so that our fishermen can have safe harbor and refuge there and can understand from maps what the coast is we shall find that enormous source of wealth developing itself in a very astonishing manner and in a very short time. Hence it is that I desire very much that these bays and inlets and mouths of rivers shall be so explored that our fishermen can have access to them for refuge in time of danger.

Mr. HAWLEY. I concur with nearly every word that the Senator from Alabama has said; but I wish to remind him that while we may within seven or eight or ten years economically complete an original survey of our entire coast, it is necessary to resurvey and resurvey, especially about New York, as the Senator does very well know.

Mr. MORGAN. I will say to the honorable Senator that there will be no objection, perhaps, to stopping the topographic part of the geodetic survey along the coast, but the hydrographic survey, of course, must be made over and over again.

Mr. HAWLEY. Continually; every harbor below New York shifts every year.

Mr. MORGAN. One of my chief desires for an early completion of the coast survey is the fact that the Coast Survey must necessarily drift into the Hydrographic Bureau. After we get the measurements all completed geodetically and topographically, then the survey of the coast will necessarily drift into the Hydrographic Bureau; it will be a hydrographic survey from that time forward, and I wish that done as soon as practicable, because at present doubling the work, the hydrographic and interior survey make the operation very difficult and expensive.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from Iowa, in his reply to what I had observed about this bill, went into a class of expenditures about which I said nothing. I limited my remarks simply to that which was the current expense of the administration, not new work in the shape of new public buildings which are provided for continually by new laws.

Mr. ALLISON. I was not replying to the Senator, but explaining the action of the committee.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator was making an explanation of that which had not been complained of. My own judgment is—I do not express it with any great degree of confidence—that the House bill is better on this Coast and Geodetic Survey subject than the bill as amended by the committee of the Senate, because I observe that the differences this year are the same as they were between the two Houses last year; and the little investigation I could give the matter then satisfied me that great economies can be brought about by a change in the method of expenditure of money, and a change in the personnel of that department. I do not speak of this with great confidence, and shall yield to the superior judgment of the chairman of the committee.

But one thing, I think, can not be too often spoken of or too continuously borne in mind, and that is that a public service once undertaken never ends, and that no public officer ever consciously or of his own volition surrenders a work which has been committed to him, but he ekes it out and plays with it, and toys with it, and nibbles at it, and always keeps at least a pretense of that subject before him. And so when I heard the Senator from Connecticut say that he had been told by the Coast and Geodetic Survey people that he could not get maps evidencing what the field-notes disclosed, for years to come, that is what I have been hearing ever since I have been here. When I go to a bureau and ask why a thing has not been done they say at once: "If you want the thing done give us more money." A lot of these things are nursed for the purpose of bringing pressure on members of Congress and inducing them to make greater appropriations. You never yet found an executive department of this Government actually taking up new work if it could avoid it.

The old work may be practically done, the old employés may be idling away their time, and bureaus without necessity may exist, and yet if you want new work done you have got to put on new employés, no matter how illy provided the old employés are with work.

I believe that the only way to get at this is by means of stinting the appropriations, of occasionally recasting them, or putting things in a condition to be turned over and inspected in that compulsory way that only comes from cutting off the supplies. That work, I regret to say, which the House has done well or ill in that direction, but really in the right direction, has not received the assent of the Senate Committee on Appropriations.

Then I say another thing which I think to be axiomatic. This not only voices the difference between the two Houses in regard to the amount of money necessary for the particular service in question, but it is a question of method, a question of substance, a question of theories of government. You can not settle that by doing as we do, adding largely to the appropriations and then compromising in conference committee, because out of that comes no issue except the one that the Senate is always extravagant, because it adds to the total of the bill. The only way it can be settled is by letting the House have, for once at least, its way, and letting the service be cut according to the pattern which is set. Then at the end of the year let us see what the net result is, whether it be good or whether it be bad.

I have no doubt it will be a mixed result; that in some respects it will be good, and in other respects I have no doubt it will be bad. But that which we would learn in that way we shall never learn now, because as we compromise on these different items in conference inevitably, neither giving enough for the most part nor withholding enough to compel an overturning of the service and a disclosure of the weak spots, we simply jog along, making the service practically worse by reason of our contention, and learning nothing as the result of our experiment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations will be stated.

The next amendment was, after line 442, to insert:

For completing the resurvey of New York Bay and Harbor, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I give notice that I shall reserve a vote, if I do not get it in Committee of the Whole, on these amendments—not on each one of them, but on enough to test the sense of the Senate on the general question of this character of addition to the bill as passed by the other House.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 445, before the word "physical," to strike out "completing;" so as to read:

For physical hydrography in New York Harbor and its approaches, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 446, to insert:

For the hydrography of the outside waters and bars south of Absecon light: For necessary triangulation and for continuing the topography and inside hydrography along the Atlantic coast of New Jersey, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 450, to insert:

For continuing physical hydrographic research in Delaware Bay and River, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 460, to increase the appropriation "for examinations and resurveys on the Virginia coast from Chincoteague to Cherrystone, and especially at Cape Charles and in its vicinity, including triangulation, hydrography, and topography," from $3,000 to $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 470, to insert:

For hydrographic examination at Cape Lookout, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 472, to insert:

For connecting the Blue Ridge primary triangulation with the coast triangulation at Charleston, S. C., or Savannah, Ga., $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 477, to increase the appropriation "to continue the primary triangulation from Atlanta toward Mobile" from $2,000 to $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 480, to increase the appropriation "for continuing the survey of the western coast of Florida from Cape Sable north to Cape Romano, and for hydrography off the same coast," from $5,000 to $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 480, to insert:

For triangulation, topography, and hydrography of Lakes Pontchartrain and Borgne, in Louisiana, $5,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 486, to increase the appropriation "for continuing the survey of the coast of Louisiana west of the Mississippi Delta and between Barataria Bay and Sabine Pass" from $5,000 to $7,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 489, to increase the appropriation "to make off-shore soundings along the Atlantic coast and current and temperature observations in the Gulf Stream" from $6,000 to $9,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 491, after the word "California," to strike out "$5,500" and insert "$10,000; of which sum $5,000 shall be immediately available;" so as to make the clause read:

For continuing the topographical survey of the coast of Southern California, $10,000; of which sum $5,000 shall be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the words "Los Angeles," at the end of line 497, to strike out "$4,500" and insert "$12,000; of which sum $4,000 shall be immediately available;" so as to make the clause read:

For continuing the primary triangulation of Southern California, and for connecting the same at Mount Conness and Macho stations with the transcontinental arc, and for a primary base-line in the vicinity of Los Angeles, $12,000; of which sum $4,000 shall be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 505, to increase the appropriation "for continuing the resurvey of San Francisco Bay and of San Pablo and Suisun Bays and the Strait of Carquinez, the examination of San Francisco bar and entrance, and the mouths of the Sacramento and San Joaquin Rivers," from $5,000 to $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 510, to increase the appropriation "for continuing the survey of the coast of Oregon, including off-shore hydrography, and to continue the survey of the Columbia River from the mouth of the Willamette toward The Cascades, triangulation, topography, and hydrography," from $6,500 to $7,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 510, to insert:

To fill up the gap in the tertiary coast triangulation between the Oregon line and Port Orford, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 513, to insert:

To fill up the gap in the tertiary triangulation between Port Orford and Koos Bay, $2,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Principal Legislative Clerk calls attention to the misspelling of the word "Koos." The "K" should be "C."

Mr. WILLIAMS. It ought to begin with a "C."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That correction will be made.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 522, before the word "thousand," to strike out "five" and insert "twelve;" and at the end of the clause to insert "of which sum $6,000 shall be immediately available;" so as to read:

For continuing explorations in the waters of Alaska, and making hydrographic surveys in the same, and for the establishment of astronomical longitude and magnetic stations between Sitka and the southern end of the Territory, $12,000; of which sum $6,000 shall be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 526, to increase the appropriation "for continuing the researches in physical hydrography relating to harbors and bars, including computations and plottings," from $2,500 to $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 529, to increase the appropriation "for examination into reported dangers on the eastern, Gulf, and Pacific coasts" from $1,000 to $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 532, to increase the appropriation "to continue magnetic observations on the Atlantic and Gulf slopes" from $500 to $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 535, to increase the appropriation "for continuing magnetic observations on the Pacific Coast, at the Los Angeles Magnetic Observatory," from $1,000 to $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 535, to insert:

For continuing magnetic observations at various temporary stations on the Pacific slope, $1,000

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 537, to insert:

For running an exact line of levels from Boston or Salem, Mass., to Mount Monadnock, Mount Washington, Mount Independence, and Lake Champlain, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 541, to insert:

For continuing the exact line of levels from Cairo westward, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 546, to increase the appropriation "for continuing tide observations on the Pacific coast at Kodiak, in Alaska, and at Saucelito, near San Francisco, in California," from $2,250 to $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 550, to increase the appropriation "to continue tide observations on the Atlantic coast, at Pulpit Harbor, Me., and at Sandy Hook, N. J.," from $2,000 to $2,100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 554, to increase the appropriation "to continue gravity experiments, at a cost not exceeding $500 per station, except for special investigations and experiments authorized by the Superintendent at one or more stations," from $2,000 to $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 554, to insert:

For furnishing points to State surveys, to be applied, as far as practicable, in States where points have not been furnished, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 559, to increase the appropriation "for determinations of geographical positions (longitude party)," from $2,000 to $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 562, to increase the appropriation "for continuation of geodetic work on transcontinental main line between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans," from $20,000 to $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 569, to increase the appropriation "for traveling expenses of officers and men of the Navy on duty, and for any special surveys that may be required by the Light-House Board or other proper authority, and contingent expenses incident thereto," from $3,000 to $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 572, to increase the appropriation "for objects not hereinbefore named that may be deemed urgent," from $1,000 to $4,000.

Mr. RANSOM. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will remember that under this item for the last couple of years a part of the appropriation has been used for supplementing the hydrographic and partially topographic work on the bays and sounds of North Carolina. I should like to know if this item has been increased for the same purpose now.

Mr. ALLISON. That is one of the objects of the appropriation made for the Coast Survey.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 575, to increase the total amount of the appropriation for "party expenses" of Coast and Geodetic Survey, from $125,450 to $244,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "pay of field officers" of Coast and Geodetic Survey, to strike out from line 584 to line 604, inclusive, as follows:

For pay of three assistants, at $3,500 per annum each, $10,500.
For pay of three assistants, at $2,500 per annum each, $7,500.
For pay of five assistants, at $2,250 per annum each, $11,250.
For pay of four assistants, at $2,000 per annum each, $8,000.
For pay of six assistants, at $1,800 per annum each, $10,800.
For pay of eight assistants, at $1,500 per annum each, $12,000.
For pay of two assistants, at $1,400 per annum each, $2,800.
For pay of five assistants, at $1,200 per annum each, $6,000.
For pay of twelve aids, at $900 per annum each, $10,800.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

For pay of two assistants, at $4,000 each, $8,000.
For pay of one assistant, $3,600.
For pay of one assistant, $3,200.
For pay of two assistants, at $3,000 each, $6,000.
For pay of two assistants, at $2,800 each, $5,600.
For pay of four assistants, at $2,400 each, $9,600.
For pay of three assistants, at $2,300 each, $6,900.
For pay of six assistants, at $2,200 each, $13,200.
For pay of six assistants, at $2,000 each, $12,000.
For pay of ten assistants, at $1,800 each, $18,000.
For pay of nine assistants, at $1,500 each, $13,500.
For pay of three subassistants, at $1,400 each, $4,200.
For pay of two subassistants, at $1,300 each, $2,600.
For pay of four subassistants, at $1,100 each, $4,400.
For pay of six aids, at $900 each, $5,400.
For pay of one aid, $720.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 636, after the word "field," to strike out "eighty-five thousand six hundred and fifty" and insert "one hundred and twenty-two thousand nine hundred and twenty;" and in line 638, after the word "dollars," to insert:

Provided, That no new appointments shall be made to the above force until the whole number of assistants, subassistants, and aids shall be reduced to fifty-two.

So as to make the clause read:

Total pay in field, $122,920: Provided, That no new appointments shall be made to the above force until the whole number of assistants, subassistants, and aids shall be reduced to fifty-two.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "pay of office force" of Coast and Geodetic Survey, to strike out from line 642 to 737, inclusive, as follows:

For one auditing clerk and one accounting clerk, at $2,000 each, $4,000.
For one librarian, at $1,800.
For one general office assistant, at $2,000.
For three clerks, at $1,600 each, $4,800.
For two clerks, at $1,400 each, $2,800.
For three clerks, at $1,200 each, $3,600.
For one clerk, at $1,000.
For one clerk, at $900.
For two writers, at $840 each, $1,680.
For seven writers, at $720 each, $5,040.
For two computers, at $1,850 each, $3,700.
For one computer, at $1,500.
For two computers, at $1,400 each, $2,800.
For two computers, at $1,300 each, $2,600.
For two computers, at not exceeding $1,000 each, $2,000.
For two engravers, at $2,000 each, $4,000.
For one engraver, $1,800.
For two engravers, at $1,500 each, $3,000.
For one engraver, at $1,200.
For one engraver, at $900.
For one draughtsman, at $2,400.
For one draughtsman, at $2,000.
For two draughtsmen, at $2,000 each, $4,000.
For three draughtsmen, at $1,800 each, $5,400.
For one draughtsman, at $1,508.
For three draughtsmen, at $1,400 each, $4,200.
For two draughtsmen, at $1,300 each, $2,600.
For one draughtsman, at $1,200.
For one draughtsman, at $1,100.
For one draughtsman, at $900.
For one electrotypist and photographer, at $1,600.
For two electrotypist's helpers, at $550 each, $1,100.
For one janitor, at $1,200.
For two watchmen, at not exceeding $894 per annum each, $1,788.
For two messengers, at $840, $1,680.
For three messengers, at $820 each, $2,460.
For one driver, at $840.
For one packer and folder, at $820 per annum.
For one packer and folder, at $620.
For two laborers, at $620 each, $1,240.
For two laborers, at $550 each, $1,100.
For one laborer, at $1 per working day, $313.
For one laborer, at $1 per day, $365.
For one fireman, at $720.
For one fireman, at $550.
For one map-mounter, at $1,000.
For one map-colorist, at $720.
For one carpenter, at $1,500.
For one carpenter, at $700.
For one mechanician, at $1,600.
For one mechanician, at not exceeding $1,400.
For two mechanicians, at $1,200 each, $2,400.
For one mechanician, at $900.
For one mechanician, at $600.
For three copper-plate printers, at $1,300 each, $3,900.
For one copper-plate printer's helper, at $700.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

For one accountant, $1,800.
For one accountant, $1,400.
For one general office assistant, $2,200.
For one draughtsman, $2,350.
For one draughtsman, $2,100.
For two draughtsmen, at $2,000 each, $4,000.
For three draughtsmen, at $1,800 each, $5,400.
For three draughtsmen, at $1,400 each, $4,200.
For one draughtsman, $1,330.
For one draughtsman, $1,260.
For two draughtsmen, at $1,200 each, $2,400.
For one draughtsman, $1,100.
For one draughtsman, $940.
For two computers, at $1,850 each, $3,700.
For one computer, $1,420.
For one computer, $1,300.
For one computer, $1,260.
For one computer, $1,100.
For one tidal computer, $2,000.
For one tidal computer, $1,250.
For one engraver, $2,060.
For one engraver, $2,000.
For one engraver, $1,960.
For two engravers, at $1,800 each, $3,600.
For one engraver, $1,565.
For one engraver, $1,500.
For one engraver, $1,200.
For one engraver, $900.
For one contract engraver, contract not to exceed $2,400 per annum, $2,400.
For one contract engraver, contract not to exceed $2,100 per annum, $2,100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the line 872, to increase the amount of the appropriation for "total pay of office force" of Coast and Geodetic Survey from $108,436 to $124,605.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Miscellaneous Objects under the Treasury Department," in line 946, after the word "counters," to strike out "one captain of the watch, four," and insert "five;"

and in line 948, after the word "superintendent," to strike out "and necessary expenses;" so as to make the clause read:

Distinctive paper for United States securities: For paper, including transportation, salaries of register, two counters, five watchmen, one laborer, and expenses of officer detailed from the Treasury as superintendent, $45,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the clause making appropriation for "fuel, lights, and water for public buildings," in line 1034, after the word "dollars," to insert:

And the appropriation herein made for gas in any of the public buildings in the District of Columbia under the control of the Treasury Department shall include the rental or use of any gas-governor, gas-purifier, or other device for reducing the expenses of gas, when first approved by the Secretary of the Treasury and ordered by him in writing: Provided, That no sum shall be paid for such rental or use of such gas-governor, gas-purifier, or device greater than the one-half part of the amount of money actually saved thereby.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1045, before the word "repairing," to strike out "replacing and;" so as to make the clause read:

Heating apparatus for public buildings: For repairing, heating, hoisting, and ventilating apparatus for all public buildings, including marine hospitals, under control of the Treasury Department, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1067, to insert:

Fish-hatchery on the Columbia River: For the establishment of a salmon-hatchery upon the Columbia River, its tributaries or their branches, $10,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to add, from the committee, the following proviso to the amendment:

Provided, That this appropriation shall not be available until the Legislatures of the States and Territories having jurisdiction in these waters shall enact the necessary legislation to protect the salmon from improper capture or destruction.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 1088, before the word "thousand," to strike out "three" and insert "five;" so as to make the clause read:

Fish-ponds, Monument Lot: For restoring the drainage of the United States fish-ponds in Washington, destroyed by the filling up of the flats, and for an increased supply of water, to be immediately available, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the clause providing for "international exchanges, Smithsonian Institution," in line 1105, to increase the appropriation "for expenses of the system of international exchanges between the United States and foreign countries, under the direction of the Smithsonian Institution, including salaries or compensation of all necessary employés," from $10,000 to $12,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amedment was, in the clause making appropriation for the "prevention of epidemics," in line 1152, after the word "danger," to insert:

And the President is further authorized to use of the same unexpended balance a sum not exceeding $10,000 for the purpose of investigating the merits of the method practiced in Mexico and Brazil for preventing yellow fever by inoculation.

So as to make the clause read:

The President of the United States is hereby authorized, in case of threatened or actual epidemic of cholera or yellow fever, to use the unexpended balance of the sum appropriated therefor by the act approved August 4, 1886, in aid of State and local boards or otherwise, in his discretion, in preventing and suppressing the spread of the same and for maintaining quarantine and maritime inspections at points of danger; and the President is further authorized to use of the same unexpended balance a sum not exceeding $10,000 for the purpose of investigating the merits of the method practiced in Mexico and Brizil for preventing yellow fever by inoculation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1157, to insert:

UNDER THE STATE DEPARTMENT.

International boundary survey, United States and Mexico: To enable the President to continue the execution of the engagement of the convention of July 29, 1882, between the United States of America and the United States of Mexico, providing for an international boundary survey to relocate the existing frontier line between the two countries west of the Rio Grande, $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1167, to insert:

French spoliation claims: To enable the Secretary of State to complete the search now being made in France for records and other documents affecting the rights or claims of American citizens under the act of Congress approved January 20, 1885, entitled "An act to provide for the ascertainment of claims of American citizens for spoliations committed by the French prior to July 31, 1801," and to make a similar search in Spain or elsewhere, and to procure such records and documents as already have been found and that may hereafter be found, or certified copies or abstracts thereof, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State, and to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1181, to insert:

Conference of the Red Cross Association: To pay the expenses of the representatives of the United States (two in number, to be appointed by the President of the United States) to the fourth conference of the Red Cross Association, to be held at Baden on September 19, 1887, $3,000; and to pay the contributory portion of the expenses of the United States at said conference, the additional sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; in all, $4,000; the same to be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of State.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1192, to insert:

UNDER THE NAVY DEPARTMENT.

For the expenses of a preliminary reconnaissance, to be made under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, to examine the configuration of the conventional boundary line between Alaska and British Columbia, following the coast from Portland Channel to the one hundred and forty-first meridian, and to ascertain and report how far the natural features of the country permit the accurate location of the line of demarkation contemplated by the third and fourth articles of the convention between Great Britain and Russia of February 28, 1825, which boundary is reaffirmed in the treaty of 1867, whereby Russia ceded the Territory of Alaska to the United States, $50,000, to be immediately available; and the officer conducting such reconnaissance shall make such recommendations touching the practical establishment of the boundary line as in his judgment may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1220, after the word "the," where it occurs the second time, to strike out "General Land Office, Indian Office;" in line 1222, after the words "railroads," to insert "and;" in the same line, after the word "labor," to strike out "and the office of the agent for the payment of pensions in the District of Columbia, and office of the Geological Survey;" and in line 1226, after the word "thereof," to strike out "Provided further, That the office of the Quartermaster-General shall, on or before the 31st day of January, 1888, be removed to rooms in the west wing of the new State, War, and Navy building;" so as to make the clause read:

Casual repairs of the Interior Department building: For casual repairs of the Department building, $5,780.

That as soon as completed as provided for in the sundry civil act approved August 4, 1886, the Secretary of the Interior shall, within the fiscal year 1888, cause to be removed to the Pension building the Bureau of Education, Office of Commissioner of Railroads, and Bureau of Labor, and vacate the buildings rented for and now occupied by said offices and bureaus, or portions thereof.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to move to amend the amendment of the committee by including in the words to be stricken out, in line 1221, the words "Bureau of Education." Is the amendment proper at this time?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire may move to amend the amendment by inserting words.

Mr. BLAIR. I move then to amend the amendment of the committee by striking out, after the words "Indian Office," in line 1221, the words "Bureau of Education," so as to strike out the words:

General Land Office, Indian Office, Bureau of Education.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that those being words in the text of the bill, the amendment would not be in order until after the amendments of the committee are acted upon.

Mr. BLAIR. At that time I desire to make the motion to amend.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair supposed the Senator wished to add words in place of those stricken out. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after the word "thereof," in line 1226, to strike out the following proviso:

Provided further, That the office of the Quartermaster-General shall, on or before the 31st day of January, 1888, be removed to rooms in the west wing of the new State, War, and Navy Building.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

That the Secretary of State, the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of the Navy are hereby created and shall constitute a commission to revise and readjust the space in the State, War, and Navy building so as to provide for the office and clerical force of the Quartermaster-General and the office and clerical force of the Commissary-General, and also to provide as far as practicable for the several bureaus of their several Departments in said building, so as to secure the most economical distribution of such space, which readjustment shall take place immediately upon the completion of the west wing of said building.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1259, before the word "thousand," to strike out "thirty-two" and insert "thirty-five;" so as to read:

For the Capitol: For work at the Capitol, and for general repairs thereof, fitting up file-room with iron shelving in basement of House wing, including wages of mechanics, workmen, and fresco painter, $35,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1266, after the word "for," to strike out "continuing the work upon" and insert "completion of;" in line 1267, after the word "and," to strike out "towards constructing;" in line 1268, after the word "stairways," to strike out "sections marked E, F, G, H, and I, as shown on plan accompanying the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury (Executive Document No. 9, first session Forty-eighth Congress);" and in line 1272, after the word "laborers," to strike out "one hundred and sixty-five" and insert "three hundred and thirty;" so as to make the clause read:

Capitol terraces: For completion of the terraces of the Capitol, and grand stairways, including wages of mechanics and laborers, $330,000.

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Iowa having the bill in charge where the accounts go for this work, and where is the official evidence to be found of the expenditures heretofore made and the result actually accomplished? Through what supervision does it go? I should like to know if the committee have had any evidence on that point, as to the actual necessary work and the cost.

Mr. ALLISON. The committee do not enter into that question at all. They took the estimates of the Architect of the Capitol as to the cost. There is a document referred to here showing in detail the character of this work and the estimated cost. Of course every expenditure made under this appropriation is made by public letting and under contract. I suppose there is no difficulty in ascertaining what it costs. This money is expended under the plan mentioned in the bill, which we struck out because we did not consider it necessary. I do not think there is any trouble about the expenditure.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed, at line 1274, as follows:

Lighting the Capitol and grounds: For lighting the Capitol, and grounds about the same, including the Botanic Garden, Senate and House stables: For gas and electric lighting, pay of superintendent of meters, lamp-lighters, gas-fitters, and for materials for gas and electric lighting, and for general repairs, $24,000.

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa about this electric-lighting business. Is the plant which is used in the Senate wing now the property of the Government?

Mr. ALLISON. No; I understand that it is not. The plant in this building, I think, is owned by some company.

Mr. PLUMB. Then wherein is the necessity for the Government going to the expense of electric lighting if it does not own the plant?

Mr. ALLISON. I suppose the Government does own some plant.

Mr. PLUMB. It is for lighting the Capitol grounds also, I see.

Mr. ALLISON. For lighting the Capitol and grounds, including the Botanic Garden, Senate and House stables. I do not think the Government owns any plant connected with the Capitol.

Mr. PLUMB. We had better strike out the item relating to electric lighting.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know why we should not pay for the light we use, even if we do not own the plant.

Mr. PLUMB. It seems to me we ought to find out whether we own the plant and on what terms we get the light, and so on. We are doing things in a pretty loose way.

Mr. ALLISON. We endeavored to do that last year, and made an appropriation of $20,000 looking to the establishment of a plant here, but the Architect of the Capitol found he could not put in a plant as was suggested with that sum; so that question is entirely open, as it was last year. We have paid for these lights from year to year, but we do not own the plant.

Mr. PLUMB. We have been paying the expense of running the plant?

Mr. ALLISON. We have been paying the expense of running it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations will be stated.

The next amendment was, after line 1279, to insert:

Elevator for Senate wing of the Capitol: For the construction of an elevator in the south end of the eastern corridor of the Senate wing of the Capitol, $15,000; and the Architect of the Capitol is directed to have the same completed for use by December 1, 1887.

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa where the new elevator is to be located?

Mr. ALLISON. As the clause stands now it would be located in the corridor in the northeast end of the Senate wing.

Mr. PLUMB. Is it to come up in front of the Finance Committee room?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. PLUMB. Let me call the attention of the Senator from Iowa and of the Senate to the fact that that is right where the bulk of the travel between the two Houses goes by. That would run where very often a large crowd of people are in process of coming from the House wing to the Senate wing. To build an elevator at that point would, it seems to me, clog up to a very great degree, if not absolutely for a considerable portion of the time, that space.

As long as I have been here I have not discovered that there is any more necessity for an additional elevator now than there was ten years ago. It seems to some, I may say without disrespect, to be desirable to keep tinkering at this building without very much regard to the necessities of the service.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator from Kansas objects to the specification I will consent, without having the authority of the committee to do so, to strike out the words "the south end of."

Mr. TELLER. Strike it all out.

Mr. CULLOM. Strike the whole business out.

Mr. ALLISON. It would then read:

For the construction of an elevator in the eastern corridor of the Senate wing of the Capitol, $15,000.

Mr. TELLER. It seems to me that a better suggestion would be to strike it all out. I do not myself think we need any elevator at that point, and, besides, I do not think it is a good thing to tear up the Capitol with that kind of work. We have an elevator which I think is ample for the business of the Senate and of the employés who have any business to use it. I have never seen any necessity for a new elevator. It can not be put in where it is proposed without destroying the harmony of the building. It will be out of place there.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado will accomplish his purpose by voting in the negative, against inserting the clause.

Mr. ALLISON. I modify the amendment by striking out the words "the south end of."

Mr. TELLER. Where will you put it then?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves to strike out, in line 1284, the words "the south end of;" so as to read:

For the construction of an elevator in the eastern corridor of the Senate win &c.

Mr. TELLER. That is still worse.

Mr. MORRILL. I believe that there are very grave objections to placing an elevator as proposed in the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, for it would not only be an obstruction that would be very serious for the Committee on Public Lands and for approach to the restaurant, but it would make a dark avenue for the three stories, first on the basement, then on the second story, and then on the one above. The only light that comes into the corridors on the Senate side now is from the south side, and if those windows should be blocked up all of the corridors in the three stories would be almost darkened. But there might be an elevator placed in the eastern corridor near the door that enters into the reporter's room.

Mr. TELLER. Where would that be?

Mr. MORRILL. In the corridor as you come in on the east from the outside door on the left-hand side. That space might be occupied with the least possible objection, and it is the only place that I know of where an elevator could be put up with any sort of decency.

Mr. PLUMB. Does the Senator think it necessary in the building at all?

Mr. MORRILL. I do not myself know that it would not be necessary, but I suppose the elevator that we now have is a good deal of inconvenience to the Judiciary Committee and to the Appropriations Committee in making a constant noise in moving up and down. I suppose it is a kind of a nuisance, and so it would be to any other committee-room. Otherwise than that I know of no inconvenience about it.

Mr. TELLER. It seems to me the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont is still worse than the other proposition. It is true that at the place proposed by the committee it will darken the hall, but at the other place it will absolutely destroy the symmetry of the eastern entrance. It would be incongruous, and it ought not to be placed there.

I do not believe the committee have given the subject as much attention as they ought to have done. The present elevator, I understand, is to be left; I do not understand that it is proposed to take that away.

It is insisted now that we need two elevators. I do not think that we very much need any, but we certainly do not need more than one; and to tear up the front of this building where we come in here, and where it is now suggested, or to shut up those lights at the place where it was first suggested, is simply absurd. I believe that the whole thing ought to be stricken out, or at least we ought to refuse to agree to the amendment until there is more care and attention given to the subject and some better place selected, if we must have a new elevator, than the places which have been suggested.

Mr. ALLISON. This matter has been carefully considered by the Committee on Appropriations several times. It passed the Senate at the last session of Congress after a pretty full debate in this body and was agreed upon, but it was finally stricken out of the bill at the urgent solicitation of certain Senators because we could not agree upon the exact location to suit them.

I do not care more particularly to define the location of this proposed elevator than is defined in the amendment, striking out the words which I have suggested, nor do I advocate this elevator simply because the present elevator inconveniences the Committee on Appropriations, although it does greatly inconvenience that committee, not because of the noise in the running up and down of the elevator (that does not inconvenience us), but because of the fact that in that remote corridor there is a constant flow of people, making it practically impossible to use the present elevator.

I venture the statement that ordinarily the Senators who go up and down that elevator during the sessions of the Senate do not feel safe in doing so, for the reason that it is overcrowded and overloaded. There is a necessity for another elevator, or else we should have no elevators in this building. Merely that we may disarrange a little capstone, or perhaps a figure or two of ornamentation in some portion of the eastern end of the Capitol, constitutes no reason why we should fail to have the use of an additional elevator. The Capitol is here for the convenience of people, and modern elevators seem to be necessary for the convenience of people.

The Senator from Colorado seems to think an elevator is not necessary. If we are to have elevators at all this additional one is necessary because the present one is not sufficient. It is a matter in which I have no interest different from or other than other Senators. I believe that we ought to have an additional elevator here.

This amendment was put in after the fullest consideration by the committee and after consultation with other Senators who are interested. I can appreciate very well that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], having the room of the Committee on Finance, of which he is chairman, near the corridor named here, should object to having it in his neighborhood. I can also see that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], having his committee-room in the lower corridor, should object to that particular location. I am willing to accommodate both Senators. This phraseology was inserted because the Architect of the Capitol said that was the natural place for it, and he wanted us to put it at that point. There are plenty of places for an elevator in the eastern corridor without taking the location named in the amendment.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator allow me to say a word there?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. VEST. I happen to know something about this matter, because when the last sundry civil appropriation bill was passed this appropriation was contained in it, and it located the elevator on the right-hand side of the eastern entrance, which would destroy the door that now leads into the room of the Committee on the District of Columbia. It attracted no attention from me at the time, though I was a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, but after it passed the Architect of the Capitol, Major Clark, came to the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MAHONE], and called his attention to the location, and said that it was almost impossible to put it there; that it would ruin that entrance to the Capitol altogether.

Mr. ALLISON. That particular location was abandoned. I do not say that it was a good location.

Mr. VEST. If the Senator will permit me, the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds then called me into consultation. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] was at that time unfortunately very ill and not present; but the Senator from Virginia and myself, with the Architect of the Capitol, went and examined all the possible locations. Major Clark explained to us the thickness of the walls and the peculiar construction of the Capitol, and he is the only man living, I believe, who knows all about it. He told us that the elevator could not be put near the eastern entrance; that it would be necessary in that case to close up the door to the District Committee room and put it immediately outside of that door, or else to cut a place inside of the reception room, which he considered impracticable.

The result of our examination and exploration was that we concluded, with the advice of the Architect of the Capitol, that the space near the Finance Committee room was the only eligible location, and I honestly believe if the elevator is not put there it ought not to be erected at all.

Mr. ALLISON. The Architect of the Capitol seems to think that is an available place, and he relies on the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] to object to that place, so that no elevator at all will be put in the Capitol.

Mr. TELLER. He is right.

Mr. ALLISON. I went with the Architect of the Capitol, and he pointed out to me three places, two in the eastern corridor and one in the reception-room, either one of which he said was perfectly practicable and perfectly available. That is what he told me within ten days. He did say that the proper place, in his judgment, with reference to the beauty and ornamentation of this side of the Capitol, was at the door of the committee-room of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. DAWES. Diagonally across from the present elevator?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, diagonally across from where the elevator is. But the Senator from Vermont objects. I desire, so far as I am concerned, to yield to his suggestion as far as possible, but we need another elevator. It is perfectly easy, convenient, and practicable to put it in the eastern end of the Capitol, and I hope the amendment will be agreed to in some form.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not so much object to the proposed location because it would destroy the convenience or the beauty of the entrance to the room of the Committee on Finance, but it would absolutely exclude the light from all these corridors from top to bottom if put there. As the Senator from Iowa has stated, Mr. Clark does consent that it is practicable to take a space near the eastern entrance of the Capitol, this side of the door that goes into the reporter's room; and it would not be a very great destruction of the beauty of the entrance. It would be near the entrance, but so far removed that there would be room enough to get into the reporter's room, and then it would go up without any sort of obstruction from the lower floor to the upper loft, and end in the upper space near the room of the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I voted in committee for this amendment to locate the elevator in the south end of the eastern corridor of the Senate wing, and I voted for it with some reluctance, because of the objections stated by the Senator from Vermont, as I understood him. He was not here last year when the question was up, because he was quite unwell at that time, but all the information I had, all the observation I could make, after going around with Mr. Clark and others, was that the place ought to be at the window near the door of the Finance Committee room. Elevators are constructed now so that they obstruct the light very little.

These galleries sometimes contain a thousand people, and every once in a while when the Senator from Vermont is about to make a great speech the people in the galleries of the other House rush over here, and they ought to have some way when they come out of the House gallery to get up very quickly so as to hear him for fear that he might get through before they got in.

The present elevator is so crowded, not only as a passenger, but as a freight elevator, that it seems to me we ought to have two, and that the eastern end of the building ought to be accommodated. I do not believe it would injure the Finance Committee room. Fortunately, or unfortunately, I happen to be a member of both the Committee on Finance and the Committee on Appropriations, and I know that people crowd in near the room of the Committee on Appropriations very much. If the travel by elevator were equally divided it would not do any harm.

If it is not to be placed there I am willing to vote to strike out the amendment, because if put anywhere else in the corridor below, it seems to me it would destroy the whole symmetry of the building.

Mr. MORRILL. I shall vote against the proposition in any shape. I do not believe it is absolutely necessary. However, I move to amend the amendment of the committee so as to make it read:

For the construction of an elevator near the eastern entrance of the Senate wing of the Capitol.

I propose to strike out the words "in the south end of the," and the word "corridor," and to insert the word "entrance" in lieu of the word "corridor."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 1281 strike out the words "in the south end of the," and in line 1282 strike out the word "corridor" and insert the word "entrance;" so as to read:

For the construction of an elevator near the eastern entrance of the Senate wing of the Capitol, $15,000.

Mr. MORRILL. Now, I wish to say one word more. Nearly all the strangers who come up here to see their friends in the Senate approach by the corridor on the south side of the Senate, and they stand there until they can get some messenger or page to send in their cards. When the Committee on Finance have gentlemen calling, as they have every day, for the purpose of seeing some member of the committee or on some business that is pending, they always wait in the light of that window. As I said before, an elevator would be absolutely destructive of the light on the lower floor, on the second floor, and on the upper floor. It would be a very great inconvenience to our entrance into the restaurant, and if there is a place in the Capitol where there ought not to be an elevator that is the spot.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am surprised that the Senate is engaged in such high debate on this question of the means of getting up and down from its various stories. This Capitol, I am bound to assume, was built purely for beauty, to please the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, the Architect of the Capitol, and the dilettanti generally who live at the west end of the town, and that the purposes of public business and the opportunity to carry it on are purely a secondary consideration.

I am sure I must be right about that, for I remember that when I was a long time a member of the Committee on Private Land Claims up in the northeast corner, and my old friend Judge Thurman, and Judge Davis, and ever so many gentlemen were chairmen of it, the room smoked, the chimney drew down instead of up; and when we modestly appealed to the Architect of the Capitol and somebody else to put one of these whirligig contrivances on top of that chimney, to have the smoke go out from the fire-place up the chimney instead of coming out into the room, we were met all the time, and have been to this day, by the statement that if you put a cap on that chimney it would show over the balustrade around the top of the Capitol, and the dilettanti and the citizens who come up and approach the building would see it and it would not present a handsome appearance.

That is the trouble here. We have a great reception room where a great many people come for good and necessary business purposes to wait. A great many others come to lounge around and sleep there and stay there all day, and where there is room to have an elevator large enough to carry fifteen people at a time in any corner of it up and down from top to bottom. But we can not have it there because it would spoil the beauty of a graining or a fresco of a woman with a torch in her hand, or something of that kind. It will not do to have it there. What is the public business and the public convenience compared to the beauty that this Capitol, inside and out, was intended only to subserve?

Then, when you come over to the Finance Committee room, it is objectionable to my friend and colleague, because it is going to destroy the light which shines on the outside of his door. He ought to remember that with you, Mr. President, and my colleague and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] inside, it does not require a great deal of light outside to carry on the public business. And so you must send nine-tenths of the people who come into the Capitol and want to go upstairs and wish an elevator, three or four hundred feet from the east side of this wing to the west side of it, to a narrow corridor that has no other light between the committee-room of the Judiciary Committee and the committee-room of the Committee on Naval Affairs, or you must send them up to the entrance of the room of the Committee on Appropriations, where there is a similar narrow corridor with no other light than that which comes through where the elevator is, and then up to the room of the Committee on Privileges and Elections and the room of the Committee on Commerce on top, where there is a similar narrow corridor, with no other light, in order that we may save the beauty of the east wing of the Capitol and the light on the outside of the Finance Committee room, and send everybody to travel a half or a quarter of a mile and crowd up those narrow and dark corridors to reach the elevator that is now there.

Is that a good thing to do? I do not think it is necessary to put this elevator into the entrance of my friend's committee room, although there is more light on the outside of that door, coming from the great corridor out here and from the other way, than in any other corridor that I know of in the Capitol, with its southern exposure; and an elevator would diminish the light there less than anywhere else.

Mr. MORRILL. It would obscure the whole of it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It would divide this tremendous flow that fills these narrow corridors on every one of the floors every day so that it is a serious business—it was this morning—to get into the room of the Committee on the Judiciary at all, or the room of the Committee on Naval Affairs by the door on that side of the hall, which is closed for the very reason that nobody can get in and out of it, and the same is the case on the top floor.

If you divide it it will mitigate the evil, but it is not necessary, in my opinion, unless beauty is the sole object for which this Capitol was built, to confine it to that particular place if it is not the best one for convenience. There is room enough and convenience enough in the eastern broad entrance where people do not come in; there is room enough in this great reception room, and in the open space below it, and in the open space above it, to put an elevator; but if we are to sacrifice everything for all time to come to what some people consider to be beauty, we had better, as my friend says, be opposed to the whole thing altogether.

Mr. MORRILL. Was the amendment which I proposed acted upon?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not yet; it is pending.

Mr. MORRILL. Then I merely desire to call attention to the fact that my colleague has a committee-room that is situated precisely as the room of the Public Lands Committee, and the Committee on Finance, and the Committee on Public Printing will be when this elevator is put in. These committees' rooms are in corridors that will have the light as much obstructed by a large elevator as in the corridors of which he speaks, having a small elevator.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You are mistaken.

Mr. MORRILL. I am not mistaken. I ought also to remind my friend that he is one of the west-enders himself.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PLUMB. What was that amendment?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It was an amendment locating the elevator in the corridor, by the eastern entrance.

Mr. PLUMB. Let the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, as it now stands, be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] has been adopted.

Mr. TELLER. Let it be read as amended.

Mr. CALL. We do not understand it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

For the construction of an elevator in the eastern corridor of the Senate wing of the Capitol, $15,000.

Mr. PLUMB. I think the difficulty with this is the fact that we have one elevator now and we can not make room enough for all the persons who wish to ascend from the lower story to the story above.

Of course I can appreciate the feeling which the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] has about the condition of things in front of the Judiciary Committee room, but I think that would all be resolved by the substitute which I shall propose. I move to strike out all about this elevator and to provide that the one we now have shall be removed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas moves as a substitute for the committee amendment what will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the paragraph from line 1280 to line 1285, inclusive, and to insert:

That the Architect of the Capitol be directed to remove the elevator now in the north wing of the Capitol.

Mr. PLUMB. And I propose to add:

And for that purpose $1,000 is hereby appropriated.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That would make it out of order. Stick to it as you had it, and take the sense of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations as amended.

Mr. PLUMB. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. VEST. Do I understand that the amendment offered by the chairman of the committee was adopted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair so understands.

Mr. VEST. I do not think we had any vote on it. I want to vote for the provision as it came from the committee. I do not want the location struck out. I am addressing myself now to the Senator from Iowa. I did not understand that his amendment was adopted. It was proposed to take a vote on it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is any doubt about it, the Chair will again submit the question on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON]. The Chair understood it to be agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, having been unfortunately detained from the Chamber during this instructive debate, I am without the information that will enable me to vote intelligently. As the committee of which I have the honor to be the chairman occupies a room to the northward of the colonnade from the eastern entrance, I am curious and somewhat interested to know what the location of the proposed elevator is to be.

In conversation with Mr. Clark, the Architect of the Capitol, the other day, after having called his attention to this amendment in the language in which it was reported from the committee, I was advised that the purpose of the committee was to locate the elevator in the casement of the window near the entrance of the Finance Committee room. Such I understand to have been the deliberate intention of the committee after consultation with the Architect of the Capitol for the purpose of ascertaining how the wants of the public and the needs of the Senate would be best accommodated in the location. Now comes the Senator from Iowa, and in a mysterious and subtle way——

Mr. HALE. Furtive. [Laughter.]

Mr. INGALLS. Not "furtive," as the Senator from Maine suggests, because that is not a characteristic of the Senator from Iowa; but in a subtle way he moves an amendment to change in some method a provision that was absolutely clear and specific before, with the expectation, I fear greatly, in some way or other of confounding this subject and leaving to the caprice, or the design, or the whim of some other person or persons the location of this elevator in some other place than that which has heretofore been selected. I trust the location of this movable car for the convenience of the infirm and the indolent from floor to floor in this building having been determined, that before we are called upon to vote to change the language we shall be advised whether we do not thereby change the location also. If not, why the change?

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] suggested that the particular spot named in this amendment was not the exact place where this elevator should be located, although the Architect of the Capitol did say to the Committee on Appropriations that this was the proper place, also saying to the committee that there were at least two or three places that were perfectly feasible as locations. Now, I consented, in order that this matter might be left to the Architect of the Capitol, who knows of course more about it than we can know, to provide for an elevator in the eastern end of this wing of the Capitol, and I am willing to trust to the Architect of the Capitol to fix the location.

I am very well aware that there is one convenient method of defeating this amendment, and that is to compel us by law to fix the exact location of the elevator, and then, because it does not suit this Senator or that Senator, or this committee or that committee, we shall have no elevator at all. Therefore, if I had my own way, I should put in, just as the Architect proposes, that exact location, and that is what the committee did. To accommodate the Senator from Vermont I was willing that those three words should be struck out, and I stated when I suggested that they be struck out that I did so, not on the motion of the committee, but on my own, and I do not care whether they are in or out. What I think we ought to have is an elevator in this Capitol, and in the eastern corridor of this Capitol; and no shifting or changing about it, whether it suits this, that, or the other Senator or committee, should prevent our having it.

Mr. HALE. Does not the Senator from Iowa believe that the proper and fitting place for this elevator to accommodate the public that now crowd the other elevator is at the south end of the eastern corridor?

Mr. ALLISON. I am inclined to think that would be a very good place for it. I am inclined to think that it would be still better to put it at the eastern entrance where people come in, and the only objection made by the Architect of the Capitol to that location is the fact that in some way it will disfigure that grand entrance to the Capitol.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not understand when the Architect was present with the Senator and myself that he made any objection to that location at all. He thought it was entirely suitable.

Mr. HALE. What possible objection is there to putting it at the south end of the eastern corridor where it will be plainly in sight, where it will be out of the way, where it will accommodate everybody, and where it will not discommode anybody?

Mr. MORRILL. You were not here when I made my statement to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HALE. I did not hear it, but I have been at this place very many times, and I do not know of any place, unless some individual objection is raised, where it would suit the general public so well as it would at the south end of that corridor near the entrance to the door of the Committee on Finance. It is no nearer to that committee than the present elevator is to the Appropriations Committee room, and there are a hundred men who go into the Appropriations Committee room where there is one who goes into the Finance Committee room.

Mr. MORRILL. I think the Senator is very much mistaken. I think we have more members of the other House coming into the Finance Committee room than go into the Appropriations Committee room.

Mr. HALE. We have more of the general public.

Mr. MORRILL. And we have a large part of the public coming. Besides, as I have stated over and over again, it would be an obstruction to the light, to the entrance into the restaurant, and to all the rooms, from top to bottom.

Mr. HALE. No more than the old elevator is.

Mr. MORRILL. There is not any other light at all for these corridors except what comes on that side.

Mr. HALE. I never heard but one sentiment expressed except by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. ALLISON. I withdraw my amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa withdraws his amendment. The question recurs on the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. PLUMB. Let us have the yeas and nays on that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. MORRILL. I renew the amendment, because I am satisfied that if Senators would go down stairs and look and see what the effect would be of putting this elevator at one of the other places there would be no question as to what should be done. I therefore renew the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed, in line 1281, after the word "the," where it occurs the second time in the line, to strike out "south end of the," so as to read:

For the construction of an elevator in the eastern corridor of the Senate wing of the Capitol, &c.

Mr. INGALLS. Now, Mr. President, after the statement of the Senator from Vermont, the issue is plainly tendered to the Senate, because the Senator from Iowa having admitted that the Architect of the Capitol, in consultation with the Committee on Appropriations, affirmed, and that the Committee on Appropriations acted on his statement, that the better place for this elevator was at the south end of the east corridor of the Senate, now agrees to the motion to strike out those words; that is a declaration which, in my judgment, the Architect of the Capitol will be compelled to heed, that this body by a majority, the issue having been tendered, has decided that the elevator shall not be located in that place.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. INGALLS. If this is a matter affecting the convenience of the occupants of any committee-room, all I have to say is that, rather than have the eastern corridor mutilated by an elevator, I will cheerfully abandon the room I occupy to anybody so far as my statement or declaration can reach that result; and if there is any objection on the part of the Senator from Vermont resulting from his personal convenience, the noise, the uproar, the throng, the din that will occur around the entrance, the vestibule, the portal of that peaceful retreat, so far as I am concerned, I am willing to make any sacrifice to enable him and the committee of which he is the honored head to obtain some cloistered seclusion where they will be wholly apart from the din and noise that will result from being somewhere in the neighborhood of the entrance to that elevator.

It seems to me that the merest casual inspection of these two corridors, the merest glance at the situation, will disclose to everybody that that is where the elevator, if at all, ought to be; and so far as the subterranean part of it is concerned, I went the other day with Mr. Clark myself examining the different locations where this should be placed, and we went up-stairs and down-stairs, and into the third story below, and examined the whole course of this elevator from the foundation to the top story, and there is no ground whatever for supposing that there is to be any obstruction either to light, or comfort, or convenience upon the story below; none whatever. By simply cutting through the wall there can be, without any sort of interruption to the convenience below, or diminution of space, a location there that will accommodate everybody; and so far as the door of the Finance Committee room is concerned, it can readily be arranged by cutting through the transverse wall, so that the entrance to the elevator shall be from the west instead of from the north and in entire seclusion, and there need never be any more noise or tumult about that room than there is now.
